Howard led off the third inning with triple, blasting one off the wall in left–center. Knight then made it 3–0 UMass, with a single to plate Howard.

In the fourth inning, after a Pelis base hit, Jette delivered an RBI single making it 4–0 and knocking O'Brien out. Marc Miangiafico relieved for PC and promptly gave up a sacrifice fly RBI to Howard after two stolen bases by Jette, who stole three for the second time in the season.

Up next was Knight, with third baseman Brad Gorrie on first base after a walk. Knight deposited his second HR of the season over the right field fence to make it 7–0 as the rout was on.

The Minutemen picked up three more runs in the fifth, highlighted by a two–run double from Jette and an RBI double by Gorrie. Steve Kaminski relieved for PC and gave up another run on a wild pitch.

Bennett cruised until the top of the seventh inning when he loaded the bases and allowed a two–out RBI single to Friar catcher Bob O'Toole. After hitting the next batter, PC's Kevin Burke, Bennett was lifted for senior Greg Dowd.

Dowd closed out the 13–3 opening day victory for the Minutemen. Bennett evened his record at 1–1 in his second start of the season.

UMass has now won five of its last seven games after dropping the first eight games of the season. The Minutemen travel to the UConn for a game tomorrow afternoon.

Softball team 'very young'

By SEAN P. HAYDEN
Collegian Staff

The best thing, they say, about freshmen, is that they eventually become sophomores.

That's the thought that daily flows through the mind of University of Massachusetts softball Coach Elaine Sortino, who has the unenviable task of managing a lineup that includes three freshmen outfielders, a freshman at each corner and pitcher and two first–year starters at shortstop and catcher.

"We had two huge classes leave us in '92 and '93," Sortino said. "It would not be my druthers, however, we are a very, very young team."

That young team stands at 3–8 after a heartbreaking, 10–5 extra inning loss this past weekend against regional foe Boston University.

The Minutewomen's lineup looks like this heading into today's home opener (3 p.m. Totman Field) with Hartford:

Pitcher: Massachusetts returns work–horse junior Kelly Daut, but lose Darlene Claffey from last year's rotation. Daut has left off right where she left off last year, sporting a nifty 1.77 earned run average, allowing only 15 earned runs (26 unearned runs) in 59 and one–third innings.

"Kelly has thrown some fantastic softball," Sortino said.

Freshman Dani Ortega (0–4) takes Claffey's spot in the rotation.

Catcher: Sophomore Michelle Shaw takes over for All– American Sherri Kuchinskas behind the plate and is batting .219 with one home run so far this spring.

"She's terrific," Sortino said. "It's not easy replacing an All–American, but by the time she's done, she could be one of the finest defensive catchers we've ever had here."

Infield: The infield is anchored by senior captain Tracey DuEst who returns to her second–base job. "The infield is Tracey and that's it," Sortino said, referring to the amount of experience her infielders have.

Freshman Sam Cardenas replaces all–time assist leader Laurie Dondarski at third and is second on the team with a .333 batting average, including a team–leading 13 hits.

A healthy Rachel Lawson would go a long way at first, but the senior co–captain is sidelined with a herniated disc. Replacing Lawson is would–be left field starter freshman Chris Martens, who is batting .343 and is tied with Lawson for the team lead in runs batted in with four. Transfer Jodi Sorenson gets the nod at shortstop.

Outfield: More freshmen. Stephanie Mareina replaces the injured Heather Dorsey (broken left hand) in center field and has been dazzling with her defensive play.

"She's got a good arm and great quickness," Sortino said. "She made a couple of diving catches on our trip that just made the crowd say, 'Oh my God.'"

Arkansas wins it all

By JIM O'CONNELL
Associated Press

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Mike Krzyzewski and Nolan Richardson weren't the main focus Monday night as the teams they coach, Duke and Arkansas, met in the NCAA championship game.

It was hard to ignore them, though, as one had a chance to move into the most select of company, while the other was looking for an opportunity to silence his critics.

Coach K's Duke Blue Devils were playing for their third national championship in four years. A title would tie Krzyzewski with Indiana's Bob Knight on the all–time list behind only John Wooden's 10 at UCLA and Adolph Rupp's four at Kentucky.

He spent the weekend cracking his one–liners and praising his team. He's become a cult hero of sorts lately, inundated with shouts of "Yes I am" after spoofing a popular TV commercial. Richardson, whose long answers are often filled with parable–like stories of his youth, has Arkansas in first championship game. He used the Final Four to answer those he feel haven't given him his due, as a chance for a highly visible member of the Black Coaches Association to make sure the public hears another side of the story.

One walked off the Charlotte Coliseum court with at least a piece of a cut–down net and the chance to solidify his rank in a highly competitive profession.

"It would mean a triple crown, in my estimation, for me as a basketball coach over a 30–year period," said Richardson, who won a national junior college title at Western Texas and the NIT with Tulsa in 1981. "To take a Tulsa team to New York and win the big one, I thought that was the greatest day of my life. It was my first year as a major college coach. I had just won the junior college national championship the year before with a team that went 37–0. That was a great night. At that point, that was the greatest night of my life. Each step that we take, for me as a basketball coach, is the greatest step or the greatest championship." He paused, then continued, aiming now at those who he feels haven't given him his due.

"I got here late. I wasn't born with a silver spoon. I coached in high school for 13 years, junior high, junior college, major college. I paid all my dues, every one of them," he said. "So since I got here late a championship at this stage means I could look back and see all the coaches, a lot of them are talking on television who never won nothing but are the best critics of coaches I have ever seen in my life, and at least have won one. And if I ever get the chance to be on television, that's all I'm going to talk about, how I won one. I can say 'Back in 1994 when we won the national championship.' That's the only thing I'm waiting for, the opportunity to get a chance like you guys do. I'm going to critique my butt off."

Krzyzewski rarely feels the sting of criticism unless it comes from those jealous of the success of the program he has taken to the Final Four seven times in nine years, winning it all in 1991 and 1992.

Defensemen commits to UMass

By MATT VAUTOUR
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts hockey team has added some considerable size to their defense as Brad Norton verbally committed to play his college hockey as a Minutemen.

Before recruiting started, Mallen stressed the need for size on defense. At 6'5", 230 pounds, Norton will fit right in.

Norton, who was a ninth–round draft pick of the Edmonton Oilers, is the brother of San Jose Sharks defenseman Jeff Norton. He hopes to follow in his brother's footsteps.

"It's helpful [to have a brother playing professionally] because he helps me and he knows what it takes to get there," said Norton.

Norton played three years at Acton–Boxborough before finishing his career at Cushing Academy in Ashburnham, Mass., where he was one of the most dominating defensemen in the prep school league, scoring 13 goals and 36 assists in his senior season.

"The style of play in the prep school league is so much more competitive and you play more games," said Norton.

Despite being recruited by several college hockey powerhouses including National Champion Lake Superior State, Michigan, Bowling Green and Hockey East rival Merrimack, Norton felt comfortable at UMass.

The potential playing time and the William D. Mullins Center played roles in Norton's decision.

"They told me that I'd get every chance to play a lot," said Norton. "It's a great school and the facility speaks for it self."

"I've worked with Coach Joe Mallen at U.S. satellite camps," said Norton. "Coach MacPherson, Coach Deraney and especially Coach Mallen are great developmental players. They will make me a better player."

I use my size to my advantage. I play physical, mean, maybe. I play defensive but I like to get into the offense if its open. Most of all I'm a team player.

Brad Norton

In hockey's first season at UMass, the fans showed a liking for hard nosed physical play. If Norton lives up to his billing, he will be a fan favorite.

"I use my size to my advantage," said Norton. "I play physical, mean, maybe. I play defensive but I like to get into the offense if it's open. Most of all I'm a team player."

Norton will likely come to UMass as a sports management major and is interested in coaching or announcing either after or in place of an NHL career.

Norton joins defenseman Mike Gaffney and goaltender Brian Regan as the first three members showing a commitment to defense in Mallen's second recruiting class as the Minutemen will head into Hockey East for the 1994–95 season.

"It's unbelievable [UMass joining Hockey East], it shows they get a lot of respect. A lot of teams have been trying to get into Hockey East, and in only their second season they're in Hockey East."

UMass is expected to announce at least one more recruit by next Wednesday's signing date.

Men's gym sweeps prizes over the weekend

The University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team found reason to celebrate the end of their season this past weekend, finishing with a first place at the New England Championships.

UMass placed fourth in the EIGL Conference Championship the week before with 265.65 points, and improved on that mark in scoring a season high of 269.1 points to win the New England's.

The Minutemen's performance at the EIGL's was marked by a low pommel horse and high bar totals, with 41.05 and 42.2 points respectively. Both scores were improved between the two competitions however, increasing the pommel horse to 41.5 and exploding on high bar to set a school record with 47 points.

A number of Minutemen achieved personal honors at the EIGL's, becoming some of the top conference competitors in their events. Senior co–captain Jason Braud placed second on floor exercise with a 9.6 and fourth in the vault. Joseph Santos placed sixth on pommel horse, Tim Smith tied for sixth on the vault, and Gabe Columbus took seventh on the high bar.

UMass then buried the competition at the New England's, winning every event, and scoring over ten points more than the closest competitor, Springfield.

En route to the victory, the Minutemen broke the school record on high bar by .3 points with the 47 points, and freshman Gabe Columbus tied the individual record set in 1985 with a 9.7.

UMass coach Roy Johnson pointed to high bar as a goal they had been shooting for, hoping to break the record before the season ended.

"It was a great team effort in pulling together in that event," said Johnson. "Out of six guys, four are freshman, it took a while for everyone to hit it a the same time, but once we did.."

Columbus broke the individual record by doing his routine perfectly, and also garnered second place honors in the all– around with 53.1 points.

"Columbus was perfect with a 9.7, his routine starts with 9.7 [possible points]," said Johnson. "It was incredible."

Minutemen gymnasts took first in all the other events as well, with the exception of parallel bars. Braud won the floor exercise and tied for first on vault with teammate Tim Smith, Santos took first on pommel horse scoring a 9.15, and Ruslan Shupak took first place in the still rings with a 9.7.

"It shows that if you keep plugging along that eventually it will all come together," said Johnson

With good finishing performances, a number of Minutemen gymnasts are expected to qualify for NCAA's, which will be announced later this week. The competition will take place this coming weekend.

Women's tennis dominates weaker St. Joe's

By BILL BALFOUR

The women's tennis team from St. Joseph's College came to Amherst yesterday for a late breakfast of fresh bagels courtesy of the University of Massachusetts women's tennis team.

The Minutewomen dominated St. Joseph's by winning five of the six singles matches 6–0, 6–0. UMass won all nine of the matches on the day.

The victory lifts UMass' season record to 3–1.

"We're just a different caliber of a team," Coach Judy Dixon said. "We did what we had to do against a weaker opponent."

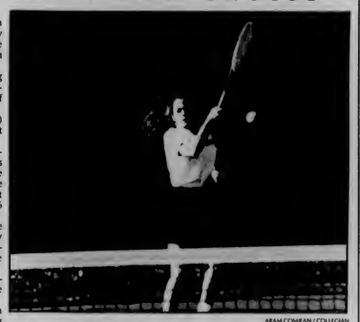
Liesl Sitton, Elizabeth Durant, Sonnybelle Martinez, Stacey Schecknet, and Mary Edwards pulled off the perfect victories and Pam Levine defeated Lizzy Hardy 6–3, 6–1.

UMass was equally impressive in doubles competition allowing St. Joseph's to win only five games in three matches.

The win gave UMass the experience of a sound victory but Dixon said there are some drawbacks.

"It's difficult coming from a weekend where they were really up," Dixon said. "It would have been nice to keep the momentum going."

The Minutewomen are coming off last weekend when they travelled to Vermont and won two of their three matches.



UMass defeated Vermont (4–1) and New Hampshire (5–0) but lost to Colgate(3–2).

Sitton, UMass' No.1 singles player, won both of her matches against UVM and UNH by a score of 6–0, 6–0 but dropped only the third match of her career against Sue Monajati of Colgate, 6–4, 7–6 (7–2).

Against Colgate, the Minutewomen needed to win only two matches after Colgate defaulted the No. 4 singles, but were unable to pull it out.

"We had chances in the matches," Dixon said. "Another day we could have done well."

The win over Vermont was a perfect start to the season and has given UMass confidence for the season.

Hakeem for MVP

Don't go messin' with a country boy, don't mess with a country boy. Ahh, glad I got that out of my system. Now, I'm ready to go off.

- They found Darryl Strawberry, though they won't say what happened. I have a gut feeling that Dan Duquette took the Straw Man captive, and tried to lure him to Boston to play for the 'Sox. If that was not the case, he was most likely hanging out with Dennis Rodman 'till the wee hours of the morning.

Actually, he was probably at some batting cage facility trying to find the swing that gave him his last big year in 1988. Dar–syl, Dar–syl...

- David Robinson or Hakeem Olajuwon for MVP? The NBA MVP award is on a cycle, and it's Hakeem's turn first.
- Jason Kidd is heading to the NBA, Glenn Robinson is not. Surprised me, if that means much. I personally thought it would be the other way around, but I have absolutely no clue with my predictions. Anyway, both are two extremely talented players, and both will flourish in the pros.

Hey, I have to be right sometime.

- Earvin "Magic" Johnson is back in the NBA as coach of the Lakers. So far, he's doing alright (3–1). Some have their doubts about Magic and his coaching capabilities. Some have their hesitations as to whether or not Magic will be successful off the court instead of playing on it.

I'd like to think he'll do a decent job, seeing as he was the floor general in his playing days. He's attempting to play the same type of ball as the Laker Showtime of the 1980s.

It will take some time in L.A. to achieve the success. All they have to do is accept the lottery pick in the draft, and Magic should be fine. And, lets face it, he'll most definitely be a better coach than Randy Pfund.

Zulus march in protest

EMPANGENI, South Africa (AP) — Nationalist Zulus brandishing spears, clubs and sticks marched in this Natal province city Tuesday, defying a state of emergency.

Zulu tribal chiefs called for the show of force to protest the deaths of Zulus in political violence and to commemorate those killed following a Zulu march last week in Johannesburg.

Police said 85 people have been killed in political violence in the Zulu–dominated province since Thursday, when the state of emergency was declared. The death toll could climb as casualty reports from far–flung rural settlements reach police.

Despite earlier vows to disarm marchers, police and troops did nothing as the Zulus arrived in buses Tuesday to support their king's demand for a sovereign Zulu state.

Palestinian police prepare

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — The first Palestinian police will tour the occupied Gaza Strip and West Bank town of Jericho on Thursday, Israel's top negotiator said Tuesday.

Palestinians complained, meanwhile, that Israel has offered no timetable for withdrawing its troops from the two areas to be turned over to Palestinian control.

Although both sides reported progress in talks since Sunday, the slow pace makes it unlikely they will reach agreement by April 13, the deadline for completing Israel's withdrawal and starting Palestinian self–rule.

The deadline was set in the historic peace accord signed by the Palestine Liberation Organization and Israel on Sept. 13.

Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin said Tuesday that more time probably was needed for an agreement.

Assassins' plot uncovered

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — Authorities are seeking four men allegedly hired to assassinate Honduras' president and kidnap leading businessmen in a plot to destabilize the country, the military said Tuesday.

The masterminds — who were not identified — had offered to pay $400,000 for the death of President Carlos Roberto Reina and more than $800,000 for kidnapping top executives, said Col. Napoleon Santos, a military spokesman.

Santos did not describe the plotters' motives for wanting to undermine Honduras, a major ally of the United States during its campaign in the 1980s against leftists in neighboring Nicaragua and El Salvador.

"The situation is being duly investigated and we cannot give more details about it in order to avoid hampering the investigations themselves," Santos said.

Business

Market comes back strong

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market staged a dramatic rebound Tuesday as investors went bargain shopping, snapping a series of stunning declines that had depressed Wall Street to its weakest level in six months.

The rebound was sparked by a government economic report Tuesday morning that considerably eased the financial markets' fears about inflation.

The Dow Jones industrial average of 30 big–name stocks leaped 82.06 points to 3,675.41, more than erasing a 43–point drop Monday. It was the biggest single–day point rise in more than two years. Much of the rebound was attributed to a powerful rally in the bond market, heartened by eased fears of inflation.

Nonetheless, the gain didn't necessarily signal an end to the sudden and unexpected selling that has been afflicting stocks and bonds, sending shudders through millions of ordinary investors worried about the value of their holdings.

SGA constitution undergoes change

Matt Malone discusses the new and improved SGA constitution at the Cape Cod Lounge Tuesday night.

By CATHERINE B. PULLEY
Collegian Staff

After instilling what Student Attorney General Matt Malone described as "the biggest comprehensive reform to the Student Government Association in 20 years," the University of Massachusetts Student Government Association Senate Select Committee on By–Laws and Constitutional review submitted a new constitution and by– laws for ratification yesterday.

Malone held a public presentation in the Cape Cod Lounge yesterday to explain the constitution and its workings in detail.

Malone stated that the constitution was created for needs of efficiency and practicality. According to Malone, the older constitution had whole sections that were missing or ignored, there was a lack of understanding in who was responsible for what and it was not clear on who could he held accountable for actions.

Another main reason for the ratification for the constitution was in light of the problems of student government elections.

"Elections have for some time been corrupt," said Malone. He said that in the past, SG failed to give results in enforcement and the new constitution created a separate autonomous campaign reform with an elections commission.

In October of 1993, Malone began to investigate ways to adapt the Constitution and by–laws to the Student Government Association. The constitution was approved by a unanimous vote from the Undergraduate Student Senate, and awaits ratification from the Board of Trustees and the students themselves.

"It was not practical or efficient," said Malone. "It was bureaucratic in a sense that people tacked things onto it from time to time. The by–laws were in serious disrepair." Malone also said that the new constitution ensures the stability of the Student Activities Trust Fund of $1.4 million that is handled by SGA.

The new constitution and by–laws was adapted from consitutions and operations of 25 other universities, particularly the University of Tampa. Also involved in Malone's research were the U.S. Constitution, the present SGA by–laws, and the University code of conduct.

"We needed structure," said Tom Darby, a senator from Washington. "The constitution is a comprehensive document that was needed by the SGA for guidance and direction, even though I don't agree with all the things in it."

The new constitution is 92 pages long and the document and research took approximately 200 hours to write. Malone said that it clears the lines of authority and power between the SGA, the Board of Trustees and the students.

"It makes SGA accessible to all students," said Malone. The constitution cuts certain numbers of senators and certain committees, but merges committees in other places creating liaisons to different parts of the house. The constitution also adds a judicial branch that was missing before.

However, it has its critics.

"It seems very thorough," said Dan Gordon, the vice chair of the Board of Governors. "But if it is anything like Matt Malone is preparing for the BOG, it is a mess."

Nephew's effort helps Kennedy

By BEN GEMAN

Senator Ted Kennedy's upcoming re–election bid gained a boost last night as the senator's campaign manager and nephew Michael Kennedy, son of the late Robert Fitzgerald Kennedy, spoke to a crowd in the Campus Center in support of his uncle's campaign.

Speaking at the first meeting of Students for Kennedy at a forum organized by the University Democrats, Kennedy urged students in the five–college area to work locally with the campaign.

Kennedy said that the upcoming campaign will require more grass–roots organization than Senator Kennedy's successful 1988 re–election bid.

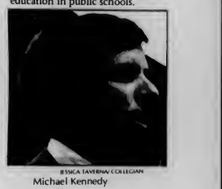
"Last time he went up for re–election in '88, we didn't face a very tough opponent in Joe Malone," Kennedy told the crowd of about 50 on the 9th floor of the Campus Center. "We have to re–establish a very effective field organization."

Kennedy also noted Senator Kennedy's accomplishments during his lengthy career in the senate, such as his leadership in the effort to pass the Goals 2000 bill, an educational reform package signed into law by President Clinton last Thursday.

Kennedy also discussed Senator Kennedy's success last year in securing funds for researching health problems such as AIDS and breast cancer.

"Last year, with the election of President Clinton — a man who shares many of Senator Kennedy's views — we had a very successful year," Kennedy said.

He also presented his uncle's views on issues which will be fought over in the Senate this year, such as crime prevention, gun control and health care.



"Do we want to build more prisons... or go after some of the root causes that direct people toward a criminal life in their childhood," said Kennedy, who later cited his uncle's support for gun control measures.

"It's just now beginning to find some resonance across this country and across this state," Kennedy said.

Students attending the forum were given the opportunity to get involved in campaign activities such as voter registration drives.

"I think it's important to keep Ted Kennedy visible in Western Massachusetts and keep the college students actively visible in his campaign," said Jennifer Potash, co– president of the Smith Democrats.

Ellen Story, the state representative for Amherst and Pelham, was also present and discussed her entrance into politics and views regarding issues such as sexual education in public schools.

Senior S.C. justice Blackmun to retire

By RICHARD CARELLI
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Supreme Court Justice Harry A. Blackmun, author of the landmark Roe vs. Wade decision that legalized abortion in 1973, will announce his retirement Wednesday, according to government officials.

Blackmun, 85, has served 24 years on the nation's highest court after being appointed in 1970 by President Richard M. Nixon. Though a lifelong Republican, Blackmun built a reputation as one of the court's staunchest liberals.

A government source told the AP that Blackmun would announce his retirement Wednesday morning. Senior administration officials traveling with President Clinton said Blackmun would issue a statement Wednesday.

As he left Charlotte, N.C., Clinton said he had not talked to Blackmun but added, "As I understand it, he has an announcement to make tomorrow so I think we should just make it then."

Clinton described Blackmun as a great jurist and a great man. Blackmun's retirement — long expected — would take effect at the end of the court's 1993–94 term, probably late June.

The vacancy will give Clinton his second opportunity for a high court appointment. Clinton appointed Ruth Bader Ginsburg to the court last year.

Two Washington names that would figure prominently in any list of successors to Blackmun: Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt and outgoing Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell.

In his early days on the court, Blackmun was considered a staunch conservative. Today, he is viewed as the court's most liberal justice but he has told friends the court's politics, because of its newer justices, have changed far more than his. Towering above all else, Blackmun's high court tenure was marked by his role in the 1973 abortion decision and subsequent abortion rulings. His authorship of Roe vs. Wade made him the most vilified Supreme Court member in history, though he remains a hero to proponents of legalized abortion. Blackmun received more than 60,000 pieces of "hate mail" in the past two decades.

The letters called him a murderer and a butcher. They compared him to the Nazi overseers of genocide. A devout Methodist, Blackmun received letters of condemnation from Methodist clergymen. He insisted on reading all such mail.

"I want to know what the people who wrote are thinking," Blackmun once said.

In a 1983 interview with the AP on the eve of his most famous decision's 10–year anniversary Blackmun repeated the phrase "author of the abortion decision" slowly and softly.

"We all pick up tabs," he said. "I'll carry this one to my grave."

With spring semester slowly creeping to an end, students are selecting new classes and more importantly, deciding where they will live next fall.

For those choosing to live off campus, finding the right place to live can be a confusing and time–consuming process.

On Monday and Tuesday, representatives from local apartments and condominiums gathered in the Campus Center to take part in an apartment and complex fair.

"This is a very good idea. It gives you a large variety of places to choose from," said a UMass graduate student.

Special discount opportunities were offered to students by several apartments. Townhouse of Amherst is offering students the option of free cable for a year or a $150.00 monthly rent reduction during the months of June, July and August if students sign up for a two– or three–bedroom apartment before April 11.

However, there is a catch. Parents must cosign the application in order for the student to live there.

Speaker describes her struggles in Peru

By JUAN JOSE CHACON QUIROS
Collegian Staff

Peru has always been known for the alleged ruthlessness of the Shining Path, the main opposition movement in the country. Carol Andreas, author of "When Women Rebel: The Rise of Popular Feminism in Peru," came to the University of Massachusetts last night to provide the other side of the story.

She first came to Peru in the early '70s, forced to leave Chile after the fall of the government of Salvador Allende. She arrived at a time where land reform was being used to promote export agriculture, further aggravating the lives of millions of subsistence agriculturers.

"Women began to work for struggle in the Farm Workers Union," Andreas said when explaining how the loss of water rights and the deterioration of the quality of life was felt harder by the female population. According to her, it was a "radical movement to reclaim their culture and the subsistence economy."

The situation in the countryside deteriorated to the point where woman had to look for employment in urban areas. There, "prostitution and street vending... extremely exploitative and abusive" were the only jobs available, according to Andreas.

Meanwhile the control of the government alternated between military and civil governments who were unable to respond to the concerns of the population. Andreas explained how the Maoist movement grew after the opening of previously closed universities. It also became "a hot bed of feminism," Andreas said. She was very clear to point out the differences between petit bourgeois feminism and proletarian feminism which is "truly revolutionary."

After working as a university professor, Andreas moved to a shanty town in Lima. There she witnessed the construction of the "Comites de Lucha." The Shining Path's strategy was to recruit house to house representatives who would form block meetings and into a larger district organization. Andreas called this process "the building blocks of the revolution... the base of a new democratic society."

In that setting, Andreas explained, "women had to learn to be leaders whether they had experience or not."

The beginning of armed struggle followed. The agenda, according to Andreas, was to "replace municipal governments" who could challenge export fueled growth, which they accomplished all over the region.

Surviving the Holocaust

Belgian emigre describes plight at area colleges

Holocaust Memorial Week is not being celebrated only on the campus of the University of Massachusetts. Smith and Amherst Colleges' Hillel are also hosting a speaker on Thursday April 7.

The speaker, Misha Levy Defonseca, survived the Holocaust that claimed the lives of six million Jews in Europe during the Nazi regime.

Defonseca lived in Belgium during the Nazi occupation, but when her parents were arrested by the Gestapo, she went to live with a Catholic family at age eight. Defonseca was unhappy and ran away to find her parents in Poland. After a journey of thousands of miles through the wilderness, she returned alone to Belgium.

She completed her education and moved to Zaire where she worked as a teacher. When Zaire's war of independence broke out, she returned to Belgium. Defonseca immigrated to the United States eight years ago.

Defonseca uses the name "Misha" in memory of a Ukrainian partisan leader who helped her during her years of hiding from the Nazi regime.

Smith Hillel will be giving square white pieces of felt to all students as a symbol of remembrance. According to Rabbi Yechiael Lander, students chose the symbol 10 years ago as they felt it would be a "neutral symbol."

Defonseca will be speaking at 4:15 p.m. at Amherst College in the Campus Center and at 8 p.m. at Smith College in Wright Hall Common room. The event is co-sponsored by the Smith/Amherst Hillel and Smith College's Committee on Community Policy.

Goessmann ready for renovation

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

The 1920s style atmosphere of the old wing of Goessmann Laboratory at the University of Massachusetts will soon be replaced by computers making the most modern methods of chemical engineering research possible, the head of the chemical engineering department said.

A chemical engineer's job is to figure out if a useful chemical reaction can be produced and sold on a large scale economically and safely, Director Michael Doherty said now the old wing of Goessmann is inadequate for modern research because the building is set up primarily for "wet chemistry," which is the kind of chemistry done with test tubes and beakers.

"All of the space is very old and antique," Doherty said. "They were good labs when they were built, but they can't support modern research."

Doherty said the 13,000 square feet inside of Goessmann will be totally renovated. The building will have everything from new computers to new windows and plumbing. Only the outside structure will stay the same. The new computers will be used for a type of research called applied computational chemistry, which enables chemists to get a clear picture of the way materials are made and how they will behave.

Underneath Goessmann a new catalyst lab will be built. Doherty said catalyst research is being done now, but the new equipment in the new laboratory will make the research of how to materials behave differently than they normally would easier.

Doherty said the money for these renovations to be done this summer is coming from the National Science Foundation. The NSF gave the chemical engineering department a $1 million challenge grant to make these changes. The department is in charge of raising another $1 million. Doherty said the money will come from the University and from corporate donations.

"The NSF is looking for the best programs with the most need fundamentally," Doherty said. "The UMass chemical engineering department is in the top 15 in the country."

To receive the grant, Doherty said he, along with chemical engineering professor Michael Malone and Associate Dean of the college of engineering Duane Cromack worked "day and night" to complete a 60 page application that was sent to the NSF.

Don't miss a beat. Be in the know. Collegian.

Three ways to beat the high cost of college.

1. The Montgomery GI Bill
2. Student loan repayment
3. Part-time income

The Army Reserve Alternate Training Program is a smart way to pay for college.

First, if you qualify, the Montgomery GI Bill can provide you with up to $6,840 for current college expenses or approved vo/tech training.

Second, if you have—or obtain—a qualified student loan not in default, you may get it paid off at the rate of 15% per year or $500, whichever is greater, up to a maximum of $10,000. Selected military skills can double that maximum.

Third, you can earn part-time money in college, and here's how it works: One summer you take Basic Training, and the next summer you receive skill training at an Army school. You'll earn over $1,500 for Basic and even more for skill training. Then you'll attend monthly meetings at an Army Reserve unit near your college, usually one weekend a month plus two weeks a year. You'll be paid over $105 a weekend to start. It's worth thinking about. Give us a call:

Woman's rights discussed

By KARA MATSON
Collegian Correspondent

"The issues concerning violence against women must be recognized as human rights issues," said Charlotte Bunch, the Director of the Center For Women's Global Leadership at Douglass College.

Bunch lectured on "Global Violence Against Women: A Human Rights Issue" last night at Smith College, stressing the success of the Global Women's Movement thus far, and the need to follow up on this success.

Bunch first became interested in global violence against women in the early 1980s, particularly in the areas of sex tourism and the sale of women in marriages. According to Bunch, when women from third world countries were brought to western countries for sex tourism, their passports were often taken, and when they tried to escape they themselves were viewed as criminals.

"During the last four years," said Bunch, "The Global Women's Movement has actually succeeded in changing the way people think of these issues."

In June 1993 at the United Nations World Conference on Human Rights in Vienna, the human rights of women were declared "an integral and indivisible part of universal human rights," and a commitment to eliminate "violence against women in public and private life" was made.

"Victory will be meaningless unless it's followed up," said Bunch.

"We need to reconceptualize and redefine all major global and policy concepts from the experiences of women, and how they relate their experiences to different issues such as world peace and global governments."

According to Bunch, the basic values of human rights began with a White male conception. Women have added interconnections between human rights, such as socioeconomic class, in their struggle for inclusion.

"Violence has always been a mechanism to deny women of their rights by keeping them in fear," said Bunch.

The attempt to control the culture and the family leads to controlling women, said Bunch. This extends into controlling fertility, the most visible example today being Bosnia. Further, sex determination, and the aborting of female fetuses, leads to the genocide of females.

"Issues of global violence are continually issues of life and death for women," said Bunch. "Recognizing these as human rights issues empowers women and gives them access to new solutions."

gets behind in payments, I'm not going to throw everyone out," said an Amherst Townhouse representative.

Students' reasons for moving off campus vary as well as their ability to pay for rent and other coinciding fees.

Jeff Foss, a sophomore, said he was looking at Southside and Cliffside apartments.

"The dorms are too loud and the bathrooms are too messy. Unfortunately, the apartments I like are all too expensive," he said.

The monthly fee for a two bedroom apartment at Cliffside including utility with access to a pool, tennis courts and picnic areas is approximately $600.

"I need a change, something different from dorm living," said UMass sophomore Heather Whitehouse. Whitehouse also said she could afford no more then $200 per month for rent.

"With an apartment you have your own responsibilities and privacy. You also have a yard," said John Spiegle, a resident of Cance dormitory.

Representatives agreed this fair not only promoted their apartments and condominiums, but also helped to match students with living conditions fitting individual needs.

Anatomy of a drunken sot

Drunk people are fascinating.

If you put a keg and a bunch of people in a room and wait about an hour or two, it is truly amazing to see the similarities and differences in the stinking drunks' personalities.

People are different. Everyone has their own distinct characteristics that separate them from others. Some are laid back, others get obnoxious. Some keep to themselves, others become annoyingly outgoing. I have learned how truly compelling the study of drunk people is by taking part in the process myself — to help prove theories and aid my hypotheses, of course.

Andrew Bryce

Here are some examples of the people I encountered.

The drunks that hang all over you: Here you are, kicking back with a few beers and some friends, and one of your pals comes over to hug you all of the time. Yeah, I love you too, man, just get the hell off me.

The drunks that crave violence and vandalism: One of my pals just loves to break things. Beer bottles, car windows, room windows, bones, faces — you name it, he has busted it. I had a friend who, in one night, broke a case of beer bottles, a St. Ides 40 bottle, a glass picture frame and somebody's nose. Makes me want to call him up again to have a few.

The drunks that share all of their deep–down secrets: God, Mike, I didn't know you did that to the goat. It's crazy. You'll be at a party, and your friend will tell you how they feel about anything and everything. Stuff that you never thought possible. Stuff that you don't care about.

The drunks that steal: Here's another case of a piss–drunk person getting ballsy, taking other's belongings. If you bring one of my friends to a party, you'll end up getting a CD by the end of the night. Just notify the sneaky drunk of the one you want. Another type of drunk who you'd just love to bring home for some brewskies.

The drunks that eat raw rice mixed with pieces of cheese: Jenn... how do I explain why Jenn did this? Let's just say this — she enjoyed it.

The drunks that get ticked off at you for the most ridiculous reasons: Get a call from my buddy on a Tuesday night, and have to listen to him hurl insults at me for a good hour. Why was he so mad? Because I did not come to visit him like I said I would a couple of hours earlier. i did feel bad and all, but he didn't have to take it out on my family.

The drunks that wake up from the night before still intoxicated, and attend church with, among others, Dad and Grandma: I shamefully did this on Easter Sunday. I think the capper of the morning was as my throbbing head began to drop as I struggled to stay awake, my sister leaned over and said, "You smell like a brewery." Thanks, Sis.

The drunks that desire to be nude: Everyone has that friend that will have his pants jacked down around his ankles for no particular reason. No shame. For some, a small sense of pride.

The drunks that become depressed: How many times have you seen a whimpering drunk drowning themselves in their sorrows? I'll admit, like practically all the other types of drunkeness, I've been guilty of this one before. How pathetic are these people, though? Turns the drinking buddies around them into violent drunks, as they want to pummel the person who's down in the doldrums.

The drunks that walk around like they have watermelons underneath their arms: These drunks are classic. There's nothing like a cocky drunk person who thinks he can kick everybody's ass. These cases vary. You'll have the puny little dude running off his mouth about how no one should mess with him. And then you have that big guy who brags about how he'd kick his momma's behind if he had to. These are very often the same people who end up getting their own butts kicked.

The drunks that don't shut up: Arguably more annoying than the cocky drunk. Some people have a few beers, and feel they must analyze the world. There will be a hundred people in the room, and the chatterbox always wants to talk to me. Figures.

The drunks that need your help when they get sick: You gotta love assisting the buddy that is blowing chunks as his face is crammed into the recycling bin. The sight, the sound, the aroma — the experience is truly gratifying.

The drunks that get horny: Everybody.

The real Clinton health plan

Polls have shown the American people split over Clinton's health care reform plan. At the same time, most Americans can't tell you what the Clinton health care plan is about. All they know is that the Clintons are smart, but those Harry and Louise ads talk about Clinton's tendency for big taxes and big bureaucracy are worrisome. So, what is the Clinton plan about, beyond the rhetoric and pie–in–the–sky claims by both sides?

Neil Carpenter

Universal Coverage: The most famous Clinton claim is also the one most founded in fact. Under the Clinton plan, everyone will be covered all the time. There are currently 37 million Americans without health insurance.

Who are the uninsured? They are young people, people who are both employed and unemployed. In fact, contrary to public perceptions, young people belong to the least insured age group, and most of the people without health insurance have some sort of job.

Universal coverage will be accomplished through "employer mandates" — large and mid-size employers have to offer health care and pay 80 percent of health care costs for their employees. People at small firms will also have to be offered health care, but the firm won't have to pay as much of the cost.

Most firms already pay a little over 80 percent of their employees' insurance costs. However, many small business and firms which pay low wages don't offer coverage to their employees. People who are unemployed for a day or a year will be covered by the government.

The reason for universal coverage is twofold. One, the Clintons think that health care is a right. I think they are correct. Secondly, and more appealling to more conservative Democrats, is that if the claim that the plan will aid economic growth. How?

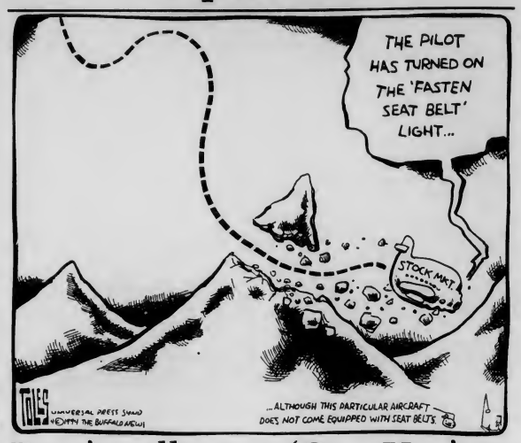
Insurance Reform: Currently, insurance companies spend a lot of money trying to figure out who not to cover. if they are made to take all of those trying to get insurance, then that money can actually be spent to provide people with health care.

At present, many people don't change jobs because if they did, their health coverage would be impaired for years. Why? Health coverage by all insurance companies excludes all conditions a person has before starting with their company. So, if your heart condition begins at one job and you switch jobs and start working somewhere else, chances are you'll have to pay for your own heart treatment. The insurance industry is not liable, and will spend lots of money on lawyers to make sure it stays that way. That's not efficient for employers or the health care industry.

Health Care Costs: The most problematic of the Clinton's claims is that his plan will reduce the cost of health care for most people while giving people the new security of universal coverage and portability from job to job.

The claim to reduce costs is based on a few assumptions. First, it is assumed that a lot of money can be saved by reducing bureaucracy generated by existing insurance practices. And second, the Clintons feel that the fundamental problem with health care costs is the lack of accountability and bargaining power on behalf of consumers. They think that when consumers are banded together, they will negotiate better prices from the suppliers of health care.

The problem with the first assumption is that, since these reforms have not been tried before, the amount of savings is really unknown. The problem with the second assumption is that many consumers don't want to be banded together. They would prefer to go out and fight for want they want individually, rather than collectively, and if enough people jump off–board, the power of the group is diminished too.



However, the bi-partisan Congressional Budget office did estimate that the Clinton health plan would restore hundreds of billions of dollars to the economy over the long-term. However, over the first five to ten years there would be barely enough cost savings to cover the cost of insuring the uninsured, and the plan would not decrease the deficit as the Clinton admistration had claimed.

Like most politicians, the Clintons promised more than they could deliver with their health care plan. Yet, like most of their other promises (and unlike other politicians), they are trying to live up to their campaign pledges.

Neil Carpenter is a Junior in the School of Management who turns 21 today.

Doonesbury — by Garry Trudeau

Don't call me a 'Gen Xer'

Why does it seem that every educator, author, ad–rep and journalist so desperately wants to label my generation? Since I started college three years ago, I've been called a "slacker," a "twentysomething" and a "Generation Xer" which has now been conveniently abbreviated to "Gen Xer." Thanks, I was overwhelmed. After a brief period of trying to envision myself as a member of one of these manufactured categories, I've decided I don't want to be labelled.

Is this a new concept – doing less than one is capable of? Is resentment for the neglect of my elders revolutionary? Not the last time I checked.
Adam Goulston

My slacking attributes are nothing new. I will not be defined.

In all honesty, a 27–year–old in Peabody is responsible for my little epiphany. His name is Jason Pramas and he is the publisher of an ambitious new literary magazine entitled "As We Are." As I was savouring a mug of Bonducci's mocha java a couple weeks back, I spotted a modest stack of "As We Are," and, with little else to do, I glanced through one and came across Mr. Pramas' lengthy article, "Why Corporate America Wants a War Between the Generations."

Captivated by the notion that I was being manipulated (always intriguing), i read on. On page 24, in a sidebar, Pramas writes, "Young people shouldn't believe that the lives and experiences of 80 million folks between the ages of 18 and 35 can be condensed into a media–created label like 'Gen X' — no matter how cool it may sound to some." This may seem like base logic, but I must confess, I felt a tad enlightened.

Pramas elaborated on his theory that corporate America welcomes such categorizing as a powerful selling point and a way of manipulating the younger generation. He also went on discredit the U.S. Social Security system. Somewhere between the first and last drops of joe, I began to see myself differently.

Richard Linklater's cult film Slacker was a subtly accurate — albeit comically exaggerated — look at young adults with simple or no goals, going nowhere in particular and getting progressively more pathetic by the day. I found some solace in the conviction that I would never be this stalled in life, but also some intrigue and fear that a young writer is a prime candidate for such a fate. Naively, I came to accept this as one path in life — that I was a prospective slacker. Man, was I naive!

While Linklater's portrayal of underachievIng, "slacking" youth was passed off as reality, I don't think it fitting that my peers and elders accept this as accurate, which is apparantly just what they did. Countless times have I heard "slacker" volleyed about as if this was acceptable. I'm no slacker, nor will I be associated with them. Let me come down off my high and mighty perch and clarify this.

Slacker is a detremental term. It is detremental as it leads my peers and I to think there are no expectations of us. That like the girl who futily tried to pawn Madonna's pap smear in Slacker, it is understood that our lack of focus is the anticipated product of our absurd (and in this case surreal) hangups. I am also not a "Gen Xer."

Author Douglas Coupland came up with this one. And after reading his pretentious philosophical lamenting in Life After God, and learning of his equally pretentious, artsy demeanor, I am convinced he is not a suitable valedictorian for my generation.

It would take very little prodding to get me to admit I am an underachiever, just like many around me. Is this a new concept — doing less than one is capable of? Is resentment for the neglect of my elders revolutionary? Not the last time I checked. So why is the media and the corporate world so quick to rush and tell me who I am?

"Big Media makes Big Money out of clever labels for Big Generations because Big Companies that advertise in Big Media need clever labels to help them sell lots of stuff to Big Generations," explains Pramas in his article.

I feel so used! Here's a label, "The Generation of People Born Between the Years of 1959 and 1976." I'm going to bed, I've done too much work.

Adam Goulston is a Collegian staff member.

Letters to the Editor

Christianity isn't the only religion

To the editor:

In Michael Morrissey's recent column ["Generation X doesn't care," April 1] he gives examples of the terrible acts of violence that our generation faces and the apathy with which we face them. The bigoted, religious–supremist views that he espouses, however, have historically fueled much of the very violence he seeks to eliminate.

Mr. Morrissey states that, this year, April Fool's Day was also "Good Friday, for all you non–religious types." Is Mr. Morrisey inclined to believe that Muslims, Buddhists, Hindus and members of the myriad of non–Christian religions on this planet are somehow less religious than he is — even "non–religious"? I would remind him that freedom of religion is a major tenet of the democratic philosophy of this country, and flaming fundamentalists like Mr. Morrisey are an ever–present threat to our philosophy of freedom.

I highly recommend that Mr. Morrissey take a course in World Religions, or do some traveling, so that he may better appreciate the variety of world views that citizens of this planet choose to live under.

Maybe then Mr. Morrissey would not create the "large number of atheists today" with the U.S.'s decline into a "nation of pathetic losers." I would like to inform Mr. Morrissey that attempting to deride a group of people solely because they choose to follow a different set of credos is known to us educated citizens as "prejudice."

Being an atheist myself, Mr. Morrissey's blatant prejudice against my lack of religious views is particularly insulting. He fails to realize that simply because I choose not to believe in Judeo–Christian mythology, Greek mythology, Native American mythology or some other, I should not be considered immoral and opposed to the good of society.

I ask Mr. Morrissey and the readers of the Collegian to eliminate any unfounded hatred on the basis of religion — or lack thereof. It is only then that we may begin to halt the violence that we all detest.

Morrissey's column raises ire of reader

To the editor:

When Michael Morrissey became editor of the Collegian, my apathetic Generation X soul (if such a thing can exist in a non–Christian) was unexpectedly stirred. I almost got up from my face. Could this be true? Could the former self–prociaimed moral–silent– majority authority of the deregulated Ed/Op page now be in charge of our media? Then the X factor kicked In. My well– honed cynicism took over and I was again reminded tthat values today are up for grabs. The moral relativism that is a de–facto policy of our society has once again prevailed in bringing the voice of "shut up, obey and keep your eyes on your own work" to a position of authority.

I looked closer at Cindy's beauty mark. Admittedly, she is overqualified for this job on MTV, representing the ins and outs of the fashion world. But does fashion really matter? I looked down at my thrift shop clothes, confident that this season, the fashion statement to make is an anti–fashion statement, and now thrift shop clothes have been marked up in boutiques across the country. It wouldn't be fashion if it wasn't a status symbol, after all.

I thought about Cindy's husband, the oft gay–baited Richard. A self–proclaimed Zen Buddhist, after a life of fast times and fast cash. How enlightened of him to embrace the unspoken, to look within, while living a respectable married life with supermodel Cindy, making blockbuster films (like, say, Pretty Woman) tthat really express that unspoken oneness with life one feels after turning a rich trick.

Then my bleary eyes wander, through the pungent smoke– filled air, to Michael's ruggedly individualistic, and maybe just a little cynical, face. I'm really glad that his life in the media is cut out for him, because he's one of the few from our generation whose smugness will be confused with moral fiber.

Congratuiations Mike, you have absorbed all the cynicism that made great hypocrites like Nixon, Reagan and Bush such great voices of revival against the people who are forced to acquiesce to their undemocratic rule and then protest. When you say we don't care, you must include yourself as the exemplary model of a sanguine, unprincipled cynic in an unjust society at its ebb. Peace, man.

Station offers ALANA students their own voice

WMUA is making a renewed effort to recruit African, Latino, Asian and Native American students for the radio station to give minority students a more prominent voice on campus.

"I don't think a lot of students know about the opportunities at WMUA and feel as if they'd be welcomed," said Michelle Cannon, WMUA ALANA Affairs director. "This is an alternative college radio station, so the more diverse it is the better."

Through word of mouth and a newsletter to be sent to all ALANA students registered through the University, WMUA is anticipating increases in minority participaion, Cannon said. A number of positions will be open next semester.

Cannon's position was created about 20 years ago to cater to the needs of minorities and has remained an important aspect of WMUA's managerial system, said DJ Jonathan Jackson. He is also business manager of the Black Mass Communications Project.

"ALANA students complain about being underrepresented at the station," said WMUA chairperson Kenley Obas. "It's not that they don't want to come here; they just don't know about the station."

The BMCP has worked vigorously with the radio station to build up the ALANA program, and has contributed to the initiation of the many urban contemporary shows filling the 9:30 p.m. to 11 p.m. shifts, said deejay Daddy Love. He runs Saturday night's "Soul Food for the Ears" program.

Love said that it is almost essential as staff at WMUA to be a member of the BMCP.

"It helps because you have a foundation. It's like having a union," Love said. "They help minority students get their foot in the door."

It is important to allow minority students to address their concerns and have their voices heard, Cannon said.

The governing board is generally lenient when it comes to freedom of expression, mainly because it is run by students and they are there to be helpful, Love said.

"I have a talk show where we discuss valid issues. It's uncensored so it gives off the feel of the community as a whole," he said. "That helps to really open people's eyes."

There have been minority groups in the past who have had strong programs, Jackson said. "There used to be a group of Latin descent that had a program called Concepta Latino that was really good and has just started back up again."

"I think minority students should get involved. They all say they have no time, but I'm living proof that you can do it," said deejay "Mystery Man," a.k.a. Mike Pierre, who is also co–president of the National Society of Black Engineers.

Conference draws youths

For Thao Le, a Vietnamese–born student at the University of Massachusetts, life in the United States has meant becoming acclimated to a new environment.

"I think that part of the problem is that it's hard to find my own identity," said Le, a junior nursing major who came to the United States four years ago from Vietnam.

According to Le, some Vietnamese–American students acculturate more quickly than others, and as a result may feel distanced from both Vietnamese and American students.

Thu Nguyen, a high school freshman from Springfield who also came to the United States from Vietnam four years ago, said that in his high school Vietnamese–American students hung out almost exclusively with one another. He said the segregation was in part voluntary due to shyness and hesitancy, but noted that American students should try to be more accepting of the Vietnamese–American students.

The concerns of Le and Nguyen, along with many other issues confronting Vietnamese–American students, were discussed at the Vietnamese Youth Conference held Saturday, April 10, in the Campus Center. The event drew about 300 college and high school students, mostly of Vietnamese–American and Cambodian–American background.

Speakers and panel discussions focused on Vietnamese– American relationships, health issues such as AIDS prevention, and discussions of college admissions and the accessibility of financial aid.

After the opening of the conference, Trinh T. Minh Ha discussed her own educational background as an example of the potential of Vietnamese–American students to achieve in the United States.

Ha, a film and women's studies professor from the University of California at Berkeley, is currently Neilson Distinguished Scholar at Smith College.

She urged Vietnamese–Americans to tap their own abilities when deciding on the field to pursue in their education.

"I was emphasizing the fact that we have to be confident in our potential rather than just aim for something that we know," Ha said.

The conference also featured a panel discussion addressing some of the inner conflicts and challenges faced by Vietnamese families in the United States.

"The workshop is about conflicts between parents and children," said Quynh Nguyen, a sophomore engineering major at UMass "In Vietnam, the parents have very strict control over kids. Since they came to America, the children get more freedom and a better education, but there are some drawbacks in that the parents feel they lose control over their kids."

Professor Pho Tuyet Lan, the director of Minority Student Affairs at UMass–Lowell and a participant in the discussion, noted that "the process of acculturation experienced by parents is different from the one experienced by students."

Lan also noted a lack of understanding of American values among Vietnamese–Americans, and said the American media often misrepresents American life.

"What is projected in the media is not really American life," he said, arguing that the media projects freedom experienced by Americans without showing the responsibility that must accompany this freedom.

Following the lunch featuring traditional Vietnamese food and Vietnamese "Sitting String" music, panels addressed health–related issues and financial aid.

Students said these discussions were very helpful. Quynh Nguyen said he now understands the importance of gaining work experience while in college.

"I didn't really think it was important to get a co–op job [prior to the workshop]," he said.

The conference concluded with a dance party in the Blue Wall.

Open Letter to UMass Student Community from the Director of UHS Eye Care Program

Dear Students:

A recent survey indicates that a high percentage of students do not know they can receive Eye Care at the UHS. The purpose of this letter is to invite you to use the UHS Eye Care Program.

My name is Frederick Bloom. I graduated from the University of Massachusetts in 1971 and The New England College of Optometry in 1975. Since 1975 I have been affiliated with the UHS Eye Care Program. I am very proud of the program and the high quality eye care delivered to the over 70,000 individuals at the UHS Eye Care Program over the last 18 years.

I have been on the teaching faculty of The New England College of Optometry where I have lectured to practicing optometrists and supervised fourth–year student/clinicians. Recently I co–authored an article with Dr. Abel, a UHS physician, that was published in a national optometry journal. I am also credentialed in diagnostic ocular pharmaceuticals by the Massachusetts Board of Optometry. I have significant experience in all aspects of contact lens fitting and care.

Additionally, we have a well–trained, professional and caring staff with experience in contact lens care and sports vision.

The eye services offered at the UHS include the following:

1. Complete Optometry Examinations that include a health history review, visual acuity testing, refraction ie. eye glass determination, a glaucoma check, cataract screening, contact lens check for those wearing contact lenses and a retina check with pupil dilation, if necessary.
2. Reduced Rates on Spectacle Frames and Lenses from local participating opticians with a complete optometry examination at the UHS.
3. Emergency Eye Care includes the evaluation of eye disease and disorder; these may include, but are not limited to, the following: ocular foreign bodies, conjunctivitis, lid lesions, chemical eye injuries, corneal problems, inflammation of the iris, retinal problems and evaluation of ocular trauma.
4. A Comprehensive Contact Lens service including initial evaluation, fitting if necessary, follow-up care, and same day service on many contact lenses due to our large in–house inventory; all fittings are done by eye doctors experienced in contact fitting and care. We takes great pride in being able to fit many people who have had trouble in the past using contact lenses.

Patient feedback of those who have used the UHS Eye Care Program over the years has been consistently excellent.

Again, I invite you to use the UHS Eye Care Program, coovenicstly located on campus. If you have any questions about our service, or want to make an appointment, please call 549-2671 x244. I look forward to seeing you.

Sincerely,
Frederick H. Bloom

Battle of the bottle rages between the sexes

• She said: Drunk dudes uncool

By EMILY MARINO
Collegian Staff

Consuming alcohol is probably one of the most common pastimes here at UMass, as it is on most other college campuses around the country. It seems to me, though, that there are a few trends regarding the differences between the way men and women choose to indulge in alcohol.

We all remember freshman year, when we waited 45 minutes at the cold bus stop for that magic vehicle that would carry us away to party paradise (Puffton Village). Throughout the next few hours we huddled with our floormates in the crowded apartment, eventually dispersing throughout the rest of the apartment in an overly friendly haze.

Well, for some (as Garcia can tell you) of us the thrill of getting drunk just never wore off. My colleague who, to put it mildly, gets joy from the most simple things in life, is not alone in his quest to maintain the eternal buzz.

Keg stands, funnels, shot guns, various games, contests, dares and threats — most guys have tried it all. Their goal, I figure, is to prove something about their ability to hold their liquor and, of course, to enjoy the sensation of being completely uninhibited in expressing that same machismo in other, usually socially unacceptable forms (anyone who has been in a Southwest elevator early Sunday morning knows about this.)

While these fine young men are depositing their "gifts" in elevators, yelling about the game that's on the TV in the bar, shouting along to the likes of Pearl Jam or using their best lines on nearby prospects of the feminine persuasion, women experience something a little different.

I am not denying that women like to drink, but there seems to be a discrepancy in just how they go about enjoying themselves. High-pitched choruses of Morrison's "Brown Eyed Girl," eruptions of giggles, and shouts (intended to be whispers) of "Oh my GOD, I am so DRUNK!" often constitute female inebriation, setting a tone a bit more civilized than the guys having pissing contests outside.

By the same token, women are frowned upon for belching, drinking too much and, of course for actually vomiting — the same merits by which men measure their social potency.

I don't suppose I'll ever understand this hypocrisy, but maybe Garcia will eventually explain it all to me over a few beers.

By CUTTER GARCIA

Every two weeks, buried deep within the dungeons of the Campus center basement, Anally and I– — er, excuse me, Emily and I, get together to discuss the issues relevant to the differing lifestyles of Men and women.

This week (since she's the editor and enjoys displaying her false sense of power and self grandeur so commonly experienced by bitter women everywhere who are upset at the fact that they've been born without a penis and therefore can't drive a car very well) Emily has decided that we will talk about drinking.

Normally I would be quite surprised by this intelligent thinking coming from my colleague, but since the idea came from Sports Editor Arthur Stapleton Jr. during an office conversation, all my sense of wonder has vanished.

Mr. Stapleton is, after all, a Man.

Of all the rituals so commonly associated with male bonding — hunting, warring, sporting, etc., drinking is the one which we approach with the most fervor and hold closest to our hearts.

We learn of its power and importance at a very young age. Usually it happens around 13 or so when we gather together in groups out in the forest with a 12-pack of Meister Brau which we managed to convince one of our older brother's wretchedly immoral friends to buy for us at the low extortion rate of only $15.00 and a pack of smokes.

On that day we begin a journey of wonderment and discovery that will take many years to fully explore and complete. And we never travel this road alone. We trod it together, as men, as compatriots, as friends.

At no other time do we communicate as deeply as when we are in the midst of a booze induced stupor. And while the sight of two men vomiting in an alley with their arms wrapped around each other's shoulders while mumbling, "I love you, man," might look like a pathetic version of an Alcoholics Anonymous failed members club to some — to those whom have been there it looks a lot more like a sign of honor and commitment.

Now she, as she smugly sits there drinking her girly drink (probably a Zima), will try to convince you that we're all just a bunch of idiots who live for nothing more than the opportunity to carouse with each other in a drunken fugue, and that all we do is regress to barbarians while in the presence of the evil spirits. But she is wrong to say such things.

New baseball year promises fun times

By ED HUMPHRIES
Collegian Staff

Springtime. A time of birds (and bees), flowers and trees.

Anyway enough with the nature talk, because as the legions of Fenway Faithful are fully aware, springtime marks the return of those hometown boys of summer, the Boston Red Sox.

This, a team that has captured and shattered the hearts of many fans for decades. Those who climb on their ever– rickety bandwagon had better bring dramamine because that steady drop to the cellar is always precariously hiding under toe.

When was the last time they won that World Series trophy — 1918 or 20 B.C.? The particulars in Fenway lore are dubious and it's well known that the Red Sox are just waiting for the last (of those who saw the mythic championship season) to die off, before even making a bid at contention for Major League Baseball's coveted prize.

Still all BoSox fans know to live and learn and the arrival of opening day brings forth an onrush of debate and memories (Remember that time I got beaned by a Mike Greenwell foul?).

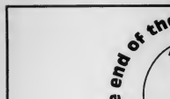
April 4, 1994. Opening Day was here again. Could the curse of the Bambino finally be lifted? Is Major League II rip–roaring, fall out of your pants funny? You make the call.

Well one thing's for sure. There have been a few new additions to the Fenway architecture.

With Nancy Kerrigan on the mound for the opening pitch of the '94 season, Mo Vaughn now has a new wall (next to the Green Monster) to slug for. Word of warning Mo: Watch out for that gap between the incisors and the molars. Kerrigan's dentures are known to rob a lot of homerun bids.

Still, fledgling Sox general manager Dan Duquette, do yourself a favor and sign the Ice Queen of Mean up. Next to Detroit's Mike Moore who chose to kill ants with his "thrown into the dirt" blistering fastballs rathe han grace the plate, Kerrigan is All–Star material.

Duquette, Ink that contract! Wait, that sounded too Corny.



As usual Opening Day was tinged with sadness. Last year it was the passing of co–owner Jean Yawkey. This year it's veteran public address announcer Sherm Feller, whose death brought on the moment of silence. Sherm will be missed. His voice was a road map to the highs and lows of all Boston seasons (and who couldn't suppress a wince and a groan at "Now batting: Bill Buckner.")

His replacement is Harvard grad Leslie Sterling. On her maiden voyage, she feared well and gave deserving homage to Feller with a taped broadcast of him announcing the return of the Sox. Skeptics will argue that Sterling got the job to appease affirmative action. I say she did a good job and a little progressive movement in that constantly sunrising Church of Baseball is a good thing.

Well the end result, after nine tumultuous innings of back and forth ball, Sean McDonough's Insightful commentary and Bob Montgomery's inane chatter (How many times can Monty mention players' underwear?), the Red Sox edged out the Detroit Tigers 9–8.

Mo Vaughn looks good. Old timers Otis Nixon and Andre Dawson were promising (the Hawk delivered a consecutive homerun and double) and Greenwell was booed, but that's usually expected by our legions

Math phobic's nightmare

Your Horoscope
By Jesse Dixon

ARIES (March 21–April 19): interruptions from friends can keep you from completing an important work project or household task. The answers you have been seeking about an investment are forthcoming.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): Your concerns over a relationship are needless. However, get things off your chest, other people are willing to meet you halfway. Listen to an elder's words of wisdom tonight, they could strike home.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): A domestic matter must be resolved before you leave on a business trip. Delight in a teen–ager's good news about college acceptance. New financial developments will work to your advantage.

CANCER (June 21–July 22): Working hard now all lead to huge dividends in the near future. Talks with bankers about a loan or mortgage are favored. A heart–to–heart discussion at home eliminates misunderstandings with loved ones.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): Financial problems will mount unless you act now. Save on groceries by using coupons. Set up a bill payment schedule before you get another reminder.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): Closer scrutiny of your spending habits could be helpful in getting things back on track. Your loyalty to a friend who is in over her head is commendable.

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): A new plan can make your business profitable. Respond to an inquiry promptly and success will follow. A happy surprise could be just around the corner.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): Today offers you a taste of what you face in the weeks ahead. Issuing ultimatums will work against you. Stay calm and rely on like–minded individuals to support you.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): You could be sitting on a powder keg at home. Defuse a sickish situation before it explodes. Trouble in paradise can be avoided. Stop being so sensitive about criticism.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): Lay back and postpone taking action. The passage of time will work in your interest. Although whistleblowers run risks, someone has to stand up for what is right.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18): Switching to high–tech services puts your company and career on the fast track. Welcome change! Cost–cutting moves made now could create big savings for you later.

PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20): A new plan could offer you extraordinary versatility on the financial area. An expert's on–target answers serve you well. Costs will go down. Make yourself comfortable at home this evening.

Hartford blanked by hurlers Daut, Ortega

By TED KOTTLER
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts softball team swept yesterday's home-opening doubleheader from the Hartford Hawks at Totman Field, courtesy of two 5–0 shutouts tossed by Kelly Daut and Dani Ortega, who earned her first victory for the Minutewomen.

Ortega retired the first eight Hartford batters en route to a four–hit gem. The freshman from LaHabra, Calif., struck out seven and walked one while improving her record to 1–4 and ERA to 5.96.

"It's taken a long time," Ortega said of her landmark win. She allowed more than one baserunner only in the fifth inning, when UMass led comfortably, 5–0. After retiring Danielle Evanchik, Jennifer Martin singled to right and Jennifer DiMella walked. UMass Coach Elaine Sortino made her way to the mound.

"[Sortino] just told me to calm down," Ortega said. "She told me to slow down and have confidence in myself."

It could not have boosted Ortega's confidence much when she gave up a base–loading single to Kelly Wilcox. But showing resilience, she then fanned Jen Benet and Amy Sabo to retire the side.

UMass built a 3–0 advantage in the second inning. First baseman Chris Martens (team–best .366 BA) hit a rare triple to right field (UMass and its opponents have combined for only four triples in 12 games) to lead off the frame. Catcher Michele Shaw then walked, and when she drew Hartford catcher Evancik's throw to first, Martens chugged home with the decisive first run.

With two outs, right fielder Amy Powell broke out of a season–long 2–for–23 slump with a single to right, plating Shaw. Powell then stole second and later scored on Sam Cardenas' left–field single which made it 3–0.

In the fifth, Tracey DuEst, Powell, Stephanie Mareina and Cardenas strung together four straight singles, good for two more runs and a 5–0 lead.

When Hartford batted in the second, Mareina made the play of the day, a dazzling snare of Danielle Simoneau's dying quail in center field.

In the opening contest, Sortino called on the veteran hurler Daut, who sought to even her record at 4–4. That was no problem, and in the process she whittled her ERA to a sleek 1.58. The junior from Bucks County, Penn., also brought her strikeout–to–walk ratio to a lopsided 46–12, as she struck out seven and walked none.

"I felt good about [my performance]," Daut said. She had to feel good about the seamless defense behind her. UMass made no errors in either contest. In her first 10 appearances, Daut allowed 26 unearned runs, only 15 earned.

With two outs in the UMass half of the first and runners on second and third, Shaw lifted what seemed to be a rally– killing pop–up toward third base. DiMella camped under it, but she dropped the ball and Michelle Methot and Martens scampered home for a 2–0 cushion.

Methot and Martens, UMass' top two hitters, ignited a two–out rally in the fifth. Methot, now batting .333, singled to left to complete a 3–for–3 line. Martens then singled to center, and both runners advanced on a passed ball. Then it was co–captain Rachel Lawson's turn. She followed Martens' suit with another base hit up the middle to boost the margin to 4–0.

UMass added one more in the sixth when Jodi Sorenson scored from third after Wilcox bobbled Daut's two–out fly to right.

Here, there, and everywhere: Elaine Sortino travels to Hartford, Conn., to Amherst, Mass., to Boston, Mass., to Durham, N.H., to Orono, Maine, to Kingston, R.I., to Storrs, Conn., to Providence, R.I., to Amherst, Mass.,

Police Log

Compiled by Geri Sahn from University reports

On April 1, a vehicle in lot 26 on Governors Drive was destroyed by fire. The Amherst Fire Department extinguished the blaze. The fire was started by a malfunction in the carburetor.

Suspicious activity

Police responded to fireworks in the vicinity of the Observatory building on Observatory Road, Apr. 1. Three individuals were found at the site. A slingshot and a small amount of marijuana was confiscated.

Larceny

An individual reported that he left a clipboard with a hockey team roster and two checks on the top of his vehicle parked in the rear of the William D. Mullins Center on April 2. The item could not be found upon returning to the lot.

The Ski Club reported the theft of a swivel chair from its office at the Campus Center on March 30. Value $100.

On March 31, an individual reported that his laptop computer was stolen while he was at the Hatch. Value $1750.

Annoying behavior

On Apr. 2, three skateboarders were removed from the second level of the garage and issued a warning against this type of activity at the Campus Center.

At the Lederle Graduate Research Tower, an individual reported that as she exited the LGRT, through the north door, she encountered a male subject in the stairwell who exposed himself on March 28. It is currently under investigation.

On March 29, police responded to a call concerning an individual who refused to leave an office when requested at the Campus Center. Investigation revealed the incident was a domestic problem. A judge issued a temporary restraining order.

Assault and battery

On March 28, an individual walking through Lot 62 on Stockbridge Road reported observing another individual and engaged in a discussion with him. The discussion centered on political differences and intensified.

The person who reported the incident said the other person pushed him, causing him to fall to the ground. The alleged assailant drove away and hollered derogatory remarks at the victim and a young lady. It is currently under investigation.

Disturbance

On March 31, fireworks were set off in a men's room and fruit was thrown against the walls in Cashin Residence Hall. Police identified the alleged perpetrators and charges will be sought for possession of fireworks.

Houston pulls a fast one, upsets Rose in election

By JULIA PRODIS
Associated Press

YPSILANTI, Mich. — When City Councilman Geoffrey Rose turned over a voter list to a college freshman to help get out the vote, it didn't occur to him to ask the kid who he was getting out the vote for.

It turns out, the 18-year-old Eastern Michigan University student was looking out for No. 1: he got 32 write-in votes to Rose's 16.

"It was a political move," Councilman-elect Frank Houston said Wednesday. "I wanted him to find out. . .but late enough so I could win."

To Rose, who thought he was running unopposed in Monday's primary, it was a prime example of "that dirty, sleazy, whatever-it-takes-to-get-elected attitude."

"Frank is 18 years old and he's already acting like what most people in the country can't stand in elected officials," Rose said.

Rose, a 23-year-old graduate of Eastern Michigan, had recruited Houston in December to help get out the vote. The student-dominated district has a history of low voter turnout.

Houston, who plans to major in political science, seemed to have clout: he helped found the student government newspaper last fall and was running for dorm president and student senate. He won both school offices last week.

Rose even pegged him as a future city councilman and said he'd return the favor some day. While he didn't pay him, Rose offered him a paid job on his campaign, which Houston declined.

"Frank's a good guy — at least I thought so until Monday," Rose said.

Houston said he never told Rose he supported him.

"I didn't purposefully try to back stab Geoff. I never once told him I was pushing for him to win, not once," Houston said. "All I ever said all along was that I was going to get people to vote." He didn't tell Rose he was running against him because "when you're running as a write-in, every vote does count. That's why I kept it kind of quiet."

Houston said the incumbent would have won "if he had done what he was supposed to do" and campaigned on campus.

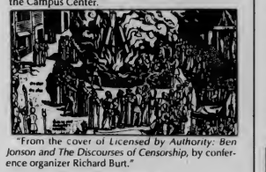
Censorship conference looks at sex in academia

By MARNI E. HELFNER
Collegian Staff

Censorship is the subject of a conference being held on the UMass campus this Saturday. Mainstreaming "Censorship": Academia, Sexuality, and the Celebrity System, sponsored by the UMass departments of English and French and by the Jeffery Amherst College Textbook Store, will develop the idea of censorship and how it is accepted.

Starting at 9:30 a.m. in Memorial Hall, the conference will feature the presentation of several papers by the academic community, a roundtable discussion, and a reception to follow.



Richard Burt of the UMass English Department is the organizer of the conference and he commented, "The conference attempts to rethink censorship and current controversies over sexuality in academia."

The papers to be presented will concern the role of censorship in its varying degrees. Rebecca Schneider of Yale University Theater Department will present "Literal Secretions: Feminist Performance Porn," and Burt will present "Getting Off the Subject: Iconoclasm, Sexuality, and the Celebrity Intellectual."

The next group of papers are about the role of sexuality and academia. Craig Saper, professor of English at University of Pennsylvania, will read his paper "Hot for Teacher: PC, PR, and PP." Also in this grouping is "You Can't Touch This: the Academic as Porn Star," a paper by local Jeffery Wallen, professor of comparative literature at Hampshire College.

After lunch, Dennis Porter, Germaine Brée Professor of French Studies at UMass will present "Should We Burn Sade Again?", Lauren Berlant of the University of Chicago English Department will present "Live Sex Acts," and Frances Ferguson of Johns Hopkins University English Department will present "Pornography: The Theory (A Consideration of the McKinnon/Dworkin Position)."

Following the paper presentations, Judith Frank of the Amherst College English Department will lead the roundtable discussion, Access-orizer/Conference Chain Choker. A reception will follow in the Campus Center.

"From the cover of Licensed by Authority: Ben Jonson and The Discourses of Censorship, by conference organizer Richard Burt."

A clear view of WWII sufferers

By MARNI E. HELFNER
Collegian Staff

As part of Holocaust Memorial Week events, Hillel and the Department of German Languages and Literatures co- sponsored a showing of Marriage In The Shadows Tuesday evening.

Marriage In The Shadows is an East German film directed by Kurt Mätzig. A Post-World War II movie, the film was produced in 1947, and is based on Germany during the war.

Holocaust Memorial Week

The film is based on the relationship of a pair of actors. The female character, Elisabeth Maurer, is a Jewish actress who falls in love with a Nazi sympathizer who later becomes a high ranking official in the Nazi party.

When she decides to keep her Jewish identity, Maurer ends her relationship with the Nazi and instead marries Hans Wieland, another actor, who is not a Jew. The point in the marriage is so that Maurer is not deported to a concentration camp.

The film develops the identities of "mixed couples" during the war, and the conflicts between the desire to stay in Germany for the benefit of the non-Jewish partner, and the need to leave Germany to save the life of the Jew. The sacrifices that these people make for each other, ultimately equal death. Based on the true story of Meta and Joachim Gottschalk, Marriage In The Shadows gave a clear and distinct vision to the lives of the people who suffered in the war.

The film, entirely in German with English subtitles, was filmed in the Soviet Occupied Zone of Germany.

While the lecture was part of the Holocaust Remembrance Week activities, it is also part of the German Film Series on The Cinema of the German Democratic Republic: East Germany – Anti-Fascism – Konrad Wolf.

State of fear and depression fear (fir) n. — awe; reverence; apprehension; concern.

If you ever wondered what fear was, there you go. I have not been in a depression for a long while, but if there ever was a time I dangled in that state, it may be the present. It isn't because I have nothing good to hang my hat on, either.

I'm just afraid. There's that word — fear. What's surprising is I have embodied all four definitions listed over the past five days. Ah, a connection. A wise man said, "There is nothing to fear but fear itself." Exactly.

Arthur Stapleton Jr.

With all these changes taking place in my life, I'm a little apprehensive about the future. Sure, it's been talked about before. Where will we be in 10 years? That's not what I'm talking about. I'm going to miss my daily routine here at the University of Massachusetts next semester.

Two of my closest friends are graduating. My position at this newspaper will be different. I'll either be living off- campus or in the Campus Center somewhere because I forgot to reserve my room last weekend. Classes — well, they are just aberrations.

Lately, all of my friends are getting significant others. I am happy for them — honestly — because jealousy has nothing to do with my situation. Maybe it's reverence. There have been times when I'd been made to feel like I didn't belong, yet haven't said anything. I notice the little things, the snubs. I know I'm too sensitive, but when you see friendships changing, it's frightening.

Balance is tough to attain in the first place. When you have it, something goes wrong to knock it all out of whack. I'm in awe of people who are well-rounded, because I found out I'm anything but that earlier this year. I had always thought I was, but there is always someone better. That's a great feeling to have heading into the competitive workforce.

This semester is wasting away because I'm afraid of what's next. Two nights ago, I sat alone in my room listening to. . . silence. I was making a mental list of petty things I didn't have: an internship this summer, let alone a job; a place to live next semester; a love interest; any idea of where I wanted to live after college. . . the list went on and on. I don't know who the 21st president of the United States was.

I felt pretty useless.

So I decided to do something with myself and play some hoops at the Horseshoe, but I couldn't get my friends to go. They were all busy.

Everything I tried didn't work. I called three friends to talk — that lasted for all of five minutes. My emotions all came to a front. I almost burst into tears, hurled a few bottles around my room and laughed, all at the same time. Then it happened.

I remembered my roommate and I had bought a 12-pack earlier. I looked toward the fridge and considered drinking a beer. I swear, two seconds later a chill shot up my spine and I was concerned. There was no way it was ever this bad. I had never drunk to drown the sorrows. Hopefully, I never will.

After rolling around in my bed for about a half-hour, I put on my Nikes and went to the Shoe. I played through my depression on the court. I realized that whatever happens, happens. Live life to its fullest, right?

Well, fear is a part of life. Depression only comes out of fear if you let it, and I did. When I got home from playing basketball, I went into the fridge and grabbed a Tropicana Twister, not even contemplating a beer. Well, someone sent me a message — while shaking the bottle, I dropped it. Glass everywhere. It didn't wake up my roommate, though — he was still sound asleep.

After I cleaned up the mess, I decided I'd save myself any more stress and go to bed. While setting my alarm, I hit the wrong button and turned it on. Immediately, the buzzer and radio blared simultaneously, waking my startled roommate. I shut it off and dropped back into my bed. Sleep was the only thing that could save me. Tomorrow would be another day and this depression, or lack of luck, was bound to end soon.

I realized you can't evade the future. Or the fear that comes with it.

Our chancellor's new hobby

Yesterday, the first edition of Chancellor David K. Scott's weekly column, "Scott Free," made its way into the Collegian offices. The debut issue included a letter from Dave informing us that we (and other media outlets) can run his literary masterpieces at no charge. He added that he hopes the "earmarks of the column will prove to be style, wit and candor."

The man behind the curtain doing research for the columns is Charlie Creekmore, but the higher-ups inform us that Dave is doing all his own writing. At least now we know why Marcellette Williams was hired in January: someone has to be the acting chancellor when Dave is out pursuing topics for his journalistic venture. I shudder to think of the amount of postage Whitmore is spending on this every week. Ahh, it's been good to see my tuition rise every year.

Tracy Monahan

In the cover letter Dave said that a forthcoming issue would include discussion of the "Minuteman controversy" which he referred to as "the Scott heard round the world." I've heard it referred to as the "shot heard round the world," but the "Scott?" Come on, now, isn't that just a touch pompous, Dave?

The truth is, Dave was just jealous of the Collegian's own David Scott and his "Scott's Shots" column. I applaud the effort, but really, Dave, you could've just come down to the basement and joined the staff. Our own David Scott is on sabbatical this semester, and the position could have been yours. There are still a few weeks left if you're interested...

The University has recently purchased new police cruisers and decorated them with — yes, you guessed it — the UMass basketball logo. The design has the swirly "U" but is missing the basketball and hoop. Everyone is jumping on the basketball bandwagon these days. If I get pulled over on campus, I'm going to hand them my license and registration and say, "So, how 'bout that hoop team, eh?" Maybe they'll be a little more lenient.

Somehow, the logo just doesn't translate well onto the body of a car. Not only do we have the classiest fans in the nation, but now we also have the classiest police force in the nation. I wonder if coach John Calipari gets a royalty from every logo used on a cruiser. Maybe he cut the police department a deal at the Northampton Saab dealership he's been doing ads for.

After a two full semesters of climbing over couches, slipping down side staircases and lying in various other ways to duck by the blood drive people, I decided to come to campus early on Wednesday to donate blood. Luck would have it that there was no blood drive that day. Of course, it was probably some sort of sign from above. I guess I can look forward to a few more weeks of guilt because the blood drive ladies are so nice. And they give you free Cheez-its.

I've never utilized the services of the escort service, but every time you get into the vehicle, the drivers supposedly won't move the car until you fasten your seatbelt. But, according to several riders, the drivers don't wear seatbelts themselves. Isn't that a state law? I guess it doesn't apply to University officials. Of course, if they get pulled over they can just ask the cops about the hoop team...

Cruel and heartless behavior award of the week goes to: the Board of Governors. In the past, the BOG has allowed the Girl Scouts to set up a table on the Campus Center Concourse for free to sell their cookies. This year, they've asked the scouts to fork over $120, which is at least half the profits the girls make in the day. How sick is that? My goodness, these are Girl Scouts. How can you try to make a profit off them?

The BOG should be ashamed. No wonder everyone wants to restructure them.

* * * * *

How about that new game that's taking Southwest by storm? Strobe light basketball in the Horseshoe. I don't play, mind you, but rumor has it that as you run up and down the court, the lights flicker at will. it must be too taxing for anyone from the physical plant to take 15 minutes and change the bulbs.

I've decided to start playing because I want to trip and fall when the lights are out so I can sue the University for lots of money. The value of my academic degree has already been reduced to the point where the burger industry is in my future, so I might as well make my money off the University somehow. So look for me down on the courts. I'll be the one running with my shoes untied.

Never forget the Holocaust

A few months ago I wrote a column about the horrors my grandparents had endured during the Holocaust. I never imagined that one day I would be confronted, as I am now, with the concept of forgiveness. To me, the words Holocaust and forgiveness never even belonged in the same sentence, because I feel that some things just can't be forgiven.

To quote my friend Cindy Green, the Holocaust can't be forgiven because "people were killed, tortured, abused, and humiliated for the same thing that is a huge part of what I am." And I agree with her. Judaism is a big part of my life, it defines so much of my identity, that I can't forgive those who were a part of creating and perpetuating the Holocaust.

We must look forward to days where anyone can openly embrace their religion without the fear of persecution, and we must remember the six million that died for nothing, those who perished in the Holocaust.

Stephanie Eisenberg

It frightens me that people were destroyed and mutilated for believing in the things I believe in today. And it scares me to know that there are some people out there who would rather believe that the Holocaust didn't exist because they are too scared to face reality.

"Any person who blatantly ignores history and says that the Holocaust did not exist is absolutely and utterly moronic" says Brian Norman, UMass senior. That is surely an understatement, for people who continue to ignore the facts presented before them are as awful as those responsible for the Holocaust in the first place.

Despite the horrors that took place during the Holocaust, I agree that we must move on and look towards a brighter future, but my generation still feels the ramifications of these horrors today, 50 years later. Mine is the first generation in my family in fifty years to grow up with a complete family — aunts, uncles, cousins and grandparents. My mother was not so fortunate; she grew up with two parents who had lost everything and everyone in the war. And my family is still rather small because it takes a long time to rebuild one.

I cannot forgive or forget the archives in the Holocaust museum in Israel, where 13 pages of my family members are listed under those killed in the Holocaust. I won't forgive those who caused the other six million people in that book to perish senselessly and tragically.

There are times when I look at my grandparents and wonder how they survived, I wonder what they thought and what they felt. I cannot begin to fathom what they have endured, because no words or pictures can ever recreate the abominations that they suffered. i rarely ask my grandparents about the Holocaust because I know that each question brings back some of the pain that they have worked so hard to overcome. And when I think of them, I know in my heart that I am unable to forgive.

Part of the reason that I am unable to do so is because part of me feels that there could still be another Holocaust. There are too many people in this world who still hate on the basis of religion, who hate me without even knowing me. Because my religion defines so much of what I am, I take it personally and, I let it frighten me.

It is because of these people that we cannot forget. "We must continue to educate and to teach people about the Holocaust in order to prevent it from happening again," said Larry Selikoff, a UMass sophomore. He is right, of course — education is the key to preventing such tragic horrors from reoccurring.

We cannot allow ourselves to forget these tragedies in the hopes that it was one horrific moment in world history because, unfortunately, we don't know that it won't happen again. Only through remembrance, education and empowering ourselves can we combat the ignorance and hate those who either don't believe that the Holocaust occurred, or who don't realize the true ramifications that it had on this world.

We must work together to move forward, to move toward a world where religious persecution is a thing of the past. We must look forward to days where anyone can openly embrace their religion without the fear of persecution, and we must remember the six million that died for nothing, those who perished in the Holocaust.

The Holocaust is not something that can be forgiven, and it certainly will never be forgotten, yet we can learn from it, work toward a better tomorrow, and make sure that it never happens again.

Some facts about false fire alarms

To the editor:

The article that appeared in Monday's Collegian on false fire alarms on campus ["False alarms waste money"] had basic information that was factual, However, there is some information which needs clarification.

There are two basic reasons that maliciously activating a fire alarm is dangerous, beyond that of just plain being wrong. First, and most important, is that the sound of the fire alarm should trigger one to instantly become alert for danger, and to prepare to take the correct action for self- preservation. On campus, this means to evacuate from the building unless a smoke or heat condition is encountered, in which case a place of safe refuge within the structure must be sought if exiting is not possible.

Malicious fire alarms, we've discovered through study, desensitizes persons to the real meaning of the fire alarm signal. At some point, people no longer will respond correctly to the fire alarm and, in the case of a real fire, may become trapped within the building because they failed to respond appropriately. This has occurred on campus several times in my 18 years here, the worst resulting in scores of students who collapsed while in a stairwell being carried out of a building by firefighters.

Second, in Amherst, we have only seven firefighters on duty. They must staff both fire apparatus and ambulances. A fire emergency may mean that no ambulance readily is available for the sick and injured, and medical emergencies may mean that no fire apparatus is readily available for fire emergencies.

Therefore, a malicious false alarm may strip immediate fire and ambulance coverage from a real emergency. Causing this false alarm, then, may result in more than just a misdemeanor charge against the perpetrator. Every year it happens that at least one malicious fire alarm here delays an ambulance or fire response to someone who really needs it.

The University does not reimburse the town of Amherst for fire responses, although the Amherst Fire Chief states that it costs $500 to dispatch one truck to an alarm.

When Housing Services takes disciplinary action against students for violating a state or University fire safety regulation, such as failing to evacuate for a fire alarm, I do not believe that Housing "simply lets them go unless they have a record of such offenses." Our office receives a steady stream of students who must arrange for fire safety education sessions for their residence halls as a result of Housing's judicial action.

Housing Services purchased all the "stopper" devices that are being installed over fire alarm pull stations. They should be commended for striving to improve the safety and atmosphere of residence life.

The bottom line is that malicious fire alarms are dangerous, illegal and much too immature for adults attending college to initiate. There are safer and more rewarding ways to have a good time or blow off steam!

Keith E. Hoyle
Fire Safety Services Manager

it makes the chairperson the only leader.

"It's an insult to the Board of Governors," Gordon said. "We need more than one person on the leadership [of the BOG] to have diversity in the leadership."

BOG Chairman George Fitzgerald said the motion passed in the senate without any debate because the senators were largely uninformed about the motion and what it would actually do.

"What happened here tonight was that the senate voted on a motion they didn't know anything about," Fitzgerald said. "They voted without knowledge of the student body they were dissolving. It is a body with a rich history of fighting for students for over 30 years. The senate's leadership refused to debate the motion democratically, and there were not enough senators there to make the vote valid."

State rep discusses role of women

By COLLEEN CRONIN
Collegian Staff

In 1869, the Democratic legislature of Wyoming thought it would be funny to play a joke on the Republican governor by giving women the right to vote. To their suprise the governor failed to use his veto power and Wyoming became the first state to allow women to vote.

Nancy Flavin, the state representative of the Second Hampshire District in Massachusetts discussed the history of women in politics as a part of a lecture entitled, "Women in Politics." Flavin received a B.A. from the University of Massachusetts with Honors.

NATHAN MARTIN/COLLEGIAN

State Representative Nancy Flavin spoke recently on women in politics.

Although women have progressed since 1869, Flavin stressed the idea that women still have a long way to go in politics. Her lecture focused on how elected women affect politics and how as citizens women can lobby legislators to enact reform.

One woman who Flavin said has revolutionized politics is Hillary Rodham Clinton. Her confidence and poise are impressive and she is "making decisions that will affect every man, woman and child" through her work on health care.

Along with Mrs. Clinton, individual women are changing politics today but the number of women collectively in politics is still relatively low, said Flavin.

Flavin said that as representatives women must deal with the same issues that men deal with, but women put a different slant on the issues.

Flavin concentrated on four issues while she was running for the position of state legislature: job creation, transportation, health care and education.

"Persistence is the key for anyone entertaining the thought of entering politics," Flavin said.

Flavin also gave advice to the audience on how to get more involved in the political decisions that affect their lives. She discussed the do's and don'ts of lobbying a legislator.

One important thing that Flavin emphasized is that getting to know legislators is important in getting a point across to them. She said that legislators pay more attention to personal visits or telephone calls than to factual dry letters.

Granby principal resigns amid criminal allegations

GRANBY, Mass. (AP) — An elementary school principal has resigned following allegations that he had been involved in sexual misconduct with students more than 20 years ago.

The School Committee accepted the resignation of Richard Langone for "personal reasons" at its Tuesday night meeting.

In a separate unanimous vote the five-member board said it had found the allegations "to be substantiated" following a two month investigation and hearing.

Langone, 57, who denied any wrongdoing, had been on administrative leave since the first of the complaints was made to the board in February, according to School Superintendent Francis Gougeon.

The complaints came from four people who had been students in the 1960s and 1970s, Gougeon said Wednesday. School officials have received no more recent allegations of misconduct by Langone, he said.

Langone, who had been a teacher and principal in the school system for 33 years, has an unlisted telephone and could not be reached for comment Wednesday.

Charles Healy, a lawyer for the Massachusetts Teachers Association, who represented him, did not return telephone messages.

Gospel gala sings praise

Area choirs raise voices in appreciation of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

By Jorma Kansanen ◆ Collegian Staff

With the recent advent of the joyous sights and sounds of spring, the urge to sing about the splendor of Mother Nature's magnificence may suddenly have overcome you.

This evening, in the University of Massachusetts' Bowker Auditorium, a free Gospel concert is being held in honor of the late Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Choirs from UMass, Amherst College and the cities of Springfield and Hartford will be performing this uplifting style of "user–friendly" music. The concert will definitely be appropriate for this time of year.

"Gospel music is a wonderful art form," explained Joe Ravenell, of the Amherst College Gospel Choir. "And not only that aspect, the audience is welcome to participate along, too."

In addition to, if not an eclipse of the lineup for tonight's extravaganza, is guest speaker Dr. Benjamin Chavis, executive director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP). Elected to this prestigious position on April 9, 1993, Dr. Chavis became the seventh, and youngest person to hold this office since it was founded in 1909.

Since the 1960s Chavis has not only worked for the NAACP, but also with important organizations such as the Congress on Racial Equality (CORE), and the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees (AFSCME).

Being an ordained minister of the United Church of Christ, the writer of two books, and a civil and human rights leader, he has amassed a considerable reputation on issues ranging from labor to racism. In light of his impressive credentials, Chavis is also an appropriate person to discourse on of the most enigmatic public figures in American, if not the world's, history, Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

"It's great we are celebrating his life," said Ravenell. "Just concerning the wonderful achievements, and the part gospel music played in his life, its important that he be remembered."

Showtime for this Thursday's Gospel concert in Bowker Auditorium will be 8:00 p.m. The Hope Community Gospel Choir of Amherst, the Holy Trinity Church of God In Christ Mass Choir of Springfield, and the Celebration Gospel Choir of Hartford, plus others from the area will also be performing with the UMass and Amherst College choirs. Admission is free.

The A.L. Interview: Up close with Broadway actor Bruce Kuhn

By SHAWN McDONNELL
Collegian Staff

For Bruce Kuhn, going back to college was a career move.

An unusual one, to be sure, for a professional actor who had been performing lead roles in the Broadway production of Les Miserables. But campuses across the nation provided the perfect audience for his one–man show, and the perfect means for passing from glamour into substance.

"I had spent two and a half years in Les Miz," explained Kuhn. "I was getting tired of climbing that barricade."

As a classically–trained actor, he was also growing tired of musicals. When he stepped down from Les Miserables he was offered a role in the national tour of Chess, but singing different songs didn't enliven the acting experience.

"I wanted to do something of substance," he explained, "I wanted to do something that would impact people's lives."

It was then that Kuhn remembered Luke.

As the "new kid" at the Actors Theatre of Louisville in 1983, Kuhn had done 20–odd performances of a one–man Bible reading, called The Accounts of Luke. For ATL, it was a low budget production sure to profit from the PR–blitz surrounding Alec McCowan's Broadway staging of The Gospel of Mark. For Kuhn, it was simply the best role he had ever had.

So in 1993, having soared through summer stock, regional classics, national tours, and Broadway glitz, Kuhn began playing college lecture halls. The Accounts of Luke in its present form has no lighting, no orchestra, no costumes and no sets. It is simply, as Kuhn describes it, an actor and a great script.

"I think it's the way Jesus did it," he chuckled, referring to the modest setting of Mahar Auditorium (where he recently did two performances). To audiences, the lack of theatrical pretense can have a stunning effect. It focuses attention on the words of a classic and on the apparent love which fills them. Few people are more qualified to speak these words than Kuhn.

Bruce Kuhn

ARAM COMEAU / COLLEGIAN

With a soft insistent voice and slight features centered around eyes of impossible placidity, Kuhn mesmerizes. His mane of grey fiber bobs as he paces the stage, giving him the appearance of a lion with oddly noble bearings.

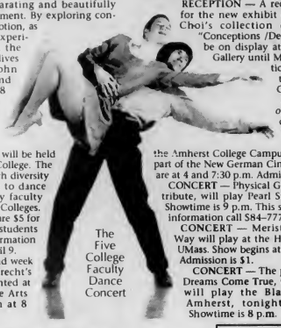
It is a very different view of Christ than was afforded to UMass students by our last Broadway guest, Ted Neeley in Jesus Christ Superstar.

"I'm hoping this theatre project breaks up some presumptions, and that those presumptions and scientific prejudices don't narrow people's eyes," Kuhn said.

The Intervarsity Christian Fellowship (who sponsor Kuhn's college tour) have been baiting people to performances by publicizing Kuhn's Broadway credits, and revealing precious little about the show.

"It's a marketing nightmare," Kuhn laughed, "And we try to promote it as theatre, rather than some sort of Bible club meeting."

Judging from the ovations Kuhn has been receiving, his gamble is paying off. He looks forward to many more years of performing Luke for college audiences, and is currently working to add The Cotton Patch Gospel (Harry Chapin's one–man bible musical) to his repertoire.



Beyond that, his aspirations point him back towards the barricades, chandeliers and chorus lines. "I do hope to be back on Broadway," he said, pausing. "One day."

Graffiti marks return of Zeppelin

By MICHAEL R. DiLORENZO
Collegian Staff

COURTESY © BRONSZ

Led Zeppelin tribute tunesters Physical Graffiti.

Buoyed by a successful February tour of Israel, Led Zeppelin tribute band Physical Graffiti has been assaulting the East Coast of late. Tonight, they bring their blistering rock and uncanny portrayal of Messrs. Jimmy Page, Robert Plant, John Paul Jones and John Bonham to Pearl Street in Northampton for an 18+ show at 8 p.m.

Formed in 1987, Physical Graffiti was the brainchild of guitarist Matt Heatherman, whose sole influence is Jimmy Page.

"It came about from messing around in [Heatherman's] basement," said Bonhamesque drummer John Mac.

"One reason we've maintained credibility throughout this tribute-band glut is that we didn't form to make money. Other bands have less–than–noble goals, but we formed before the whole tribute issue was a problem."

Graffiti accurately combines the musical elements of Zeppelin while incorporating the look and feel of Led's individual members.

"We're fortunate to have [singer] Doug Putnam who looks and sounds like a Robert Plant," said Mac. "Gary Fox [Jones] does so many things, from bass to organ to mandolin. He's a great musician. But the centerpiece is [Heatherman]. He is Page."

While many chide cover bands for being unoriginal, Mac says it is not as easy as it looks. In fact, despite having nearly six years experience as a poor–man's Bonham, Mac says he still has trouble covering the Zeppelin drummer.

"I mean, if I can get through a whole 'Good Times, Bad Times' perfectly, I'm happy. The man was a virtuoso, a pioneer; his bass sound is so powerful, I had a hard time with it."

The band would not say what songs would be on the Pearl St. set list because they were to play in Boston on Wednesday night, and much depends on what singer Putnam can handle on back–to–back nights. A typical show begins in Zeppelin–like fashion, opening with "The Song Remains the Same" and segues into the bluesy "The Rain Song."

Other staples include a haunting "No Quarter" complete with dry ice effects, "How Many More Times," "Moby Dick," featuring a stunningly accurate recount of Bonham's show–stopping drum solo and "Achilles Last Stand," which segues into "Hots on for International festival features worldly film

By CHRISTINA ORWICZ
Collegian Staff

Five–College students and area residents have a unique opportunity to see a host of international films throughout the month, thanks to the Multicultural Film Festival at the University of Massachusetts.

Organized by the Interdepartmental Program in Film Studies, this festival is co–sponsored by a number of groups including the UMass Arts Council, Five College Film Council, the Office of Third World Affairs and Hillel House.

"We wanted to cover a lot of areas of ethnic, American and international film that deal with issues of multiculturalism," said Eva Rueschmann, assistant to Catherine Portuges, director of the Interdepartmental Program in Film Studies.

Because this is the first year of the festival, Rueschmann is hopeful that people will show their interest and support by attending, and that this will become an annual event on campus.

Running from April 5 to May 5, films are by directors from Poland, Vietnam, Senegal and the U.S., to name a few. A highlight of the festival is a selection of the directors presenting their works, such as Trinh T. Minh–ha, Ayoka Chenzira, K. Hariharan and Srdjan Karanovic.

Aside from the importance of showing international films that usually receive limited exposure, this festival has cinematic importance. Some of the works being show have never been seen before in the Pioneer Valley area, such as director Ayoka Chenzira's works as well as films by Ousmane Sembene.

Included in the screenings will be the Black Maria Festival and the Five College Student Film Festival. The Black Maria is an annual film festival which features experimental, documentary, animation and narrative works that began in New Jersey 13 years ago and now travels across the country.

The Five College Student Film Festival, running in its first year, is open to all Five College students and hopes to establish a forum for student filmmakers in the Pioneer Valley for future years.

Submissions will be of film and video and will be judged in four categories. A cash prize of $100 will be awarded to Best of Festival, and $50 prizes will be given to Best of Documentary, Experimental and Narrative.

Submission deadline will be stretched to April 11, and can be dropped off at the Film Studies Office, UMass, or for a location at other campuses, call 545–3659.

Riding the information highway

By MICHAEL MACLEAN
Collegian Correspondent

We've all been bombarded lately with a lot of hype the future of technology. Our lives are all going to change, and everyday tasks will be made easier, and be completed faster, with the help of a little something that the media has dubbed "the information superhighway". Probably not unlike a lot of other people, I had written most of this off as just being premature ranting, so when I returned home for winter break, I was unprepared for what I found.

Only expecting a few good weeks of hanging out with friends until they went back to school and left me by myself for the last two weeks of my break, I was instead given a savior of sorts, for my family had acquired its first personal computer. Oh, sure, we had one before, a Commodore 64, which is now comparable to owning a Dodge Dart. This thing was for real, though, with a mouse, a hard drive, and a modem, which would ultimately become my undoing.

With the computer also came the directions to the on-ramp of the information superhighway. A program with which I could join up with thousands of other people, and have access to an abundance of information. This could have been a good learning experience. But what did I do? I became obsessed with the chat rooms.

Chat rooms are displayed on a menu by their topic (ie. sports) and hold about 23 people per room. The words everyone types come up on the screen next to your name, and scroll up the screen as more people put in their two cents, like 23 people writing a script as they go along.

After about twenty minutes of doing this, I was hooked for good, but of course I didn't realize it then. It took me only a few days to obliterate the 500 free minutes I got for joining, and then I started to realize something was wrong, but still couldn't stop myself. I was on a roll.

How long was I on? Well let's just say that Dave Letterman, Kennedy's Alternative Nation, and that lame Speed Racer theme song were all just distant memories before I closed my red, swollen eyes for the night.

What did I talk about? Just a lot of nothing really. After my free minutes were up, I was spending $3.50 an hour to talk about pressing issues like if the "alternative" music scene really exists anymore, and that "alternative" is really just a different word for the stuff that was punk, new-wave and progressive before it. Is there a shrink in the house?

Oh, I can't forget about "hot-chat". This phrase is exactly what you think it is, and is usually done by meeting someone and after getting to know them a little, asking them if they want to go and "talk" in a private room. I know about this only through other people telling me. . .really! Does this turn people on? I'm not sure about you, but to me, the phrase "hot-chat" ends it right there. It's about as erotic to me as your average Violent Femmes tune.

So after a month of so, my parents got the almost triple digit bill, and pulled the plug on my little world. Looking back, I'd say the moral of the story is, if you're going to get on the highway, get ready for some new driving lessons. Oh, and make sure to bring a lot of money for gas.

Sirens liberates flesh; enchants

Major League II should remain in the old ballpen

Tom Berenger, pictured here in Sniper, makes an all-star appearance in Major League II.

By ED HUMPHRIES
Collegian Staff

In his previous effort, Wide Sargasso Sea, Director John Duigan plumbed his prequel to Bronte's Jane Eyre for a walk on the erotic side, serving up a more stilted than sultry affair.

That's not the case with Sirens.

This pleasantly ambitious film weaves its erotic subtext within a magical aura that seeks to celebrate the liberation of the flesh, and more importantly, the mind. Sirens' song is indeed enchanting.

Set in 1930's Australia, Duigan pursues a young Anglican priest (Hugh Grant) and his wife (Tara Fitzgerald) on a mission to persuade a "free-thinking" Bohemian artist (Sam Neill) to detract his "blasphemous" paintings of nudes in religious settings from a Sidney gallery.

At the artist's compound, Grant discovers Neill's three muses led by the playfully seductive Elle McPherson, and soon he and Fitzgerald become wrapped within the entrancing spell that surrounds Neill's home, awakening within Fitzgerald her long dormant desires.

There's a real poetic feel to Duigan's film, and his camera nicely captures the misty surreal woods that surround Neill's sprawling manse. The dream sequences that heighten Fitzgerald's enlightenment grab the viewer up into their hazy, swirling illusions, leaving one's head swimming in enchantment.

Grant is exceptional as the put-upon priest. His verbal jousts with Neill on the place of religion in people's lives are hallmarks of their career excellence.

But it's Fitzgerald and McPherson who steal the picture as Duigan slowly uncovers

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT
North American Van Lines is now accepting applications from college students and staff for its Summer Fleet Program.
Summer is the busy season in the moving industry, and we need your help to handle the load. We will teach you to safely operate an 18-wheel rig and load household goods cargo - also cross. We pay your room and board while you're in training. Once you receive your Commercial Driver's License, we'll pay you $425 per week, plus $125 per week living expenses, plus bonus.
To qualify, you must be 21 years old, have a good driving record, and be available for training in May (the end of April would be even better!)
Take a break from the classroom, and make the most of your summer with North American Van Lines. We'll promise you an adventure you'll never forget.

Spring fashion savvy at sassy prices

COURTESY ELLE MAGAZINE

Being in fashion does not have to mean being bankrupt.

By TARA MK CONNELLY
Collegian Staff

Here is the deal, you like clothes — you love clothes and you particularly like the numerous collections designers have created for this spring. You're drawn to the simple lines, the pale colors, and the great fabrics. Your only problem is that you can't afford to jet off to New York or Paris. And even if you could, the prices would send you running for a connecting flight home.

So you settle for the next best thing. You shop at home for the newest haute couter. The most marvelous thing about this spring's collection is versatility and neutral colors. Everything you buy goes with just about anything, and you don't need to max out your credit card to get the desired effect.

> Many people are under the impression that if it isn't brand name, it isn't worth buying.

In order to have clothing savvy, you have to compromise. As with all great purchases, take into consideration two words: cost and efficiency. People often underestimate the quality of clothing from lesser known stores. Many people are under the impression that if it isn't brand name, it isn't worth buying. Here is a little consumer-friendly advice as to where and how to go about acquiring the best fashions spring has to offer without going bankrupt.

Every one has their own basic idea of style and of the image they want to project. A good place to start looking is in a magazine. Many of the clothes you see (the Anne Klein suit for $200) can be purchased for a much lower price from a different designer.

Once you have selected a few articles, think about how much you'd like to spend. Can you really afford five pairs of sandals? What shirt, jacket, etc. can be paired with articles you already have? This not only helps you grip economic reality, but your parents will be impressed and more open to the possibility of a loan.

Next step is the stores. Spring is a great time for sales. Keep an eye open for half-priced winter ware. The sweater you wanted and couldn't afford in December is probably on sale too. Many stores are cashing in on similar styles, so window shop and compare. In almost every store you'll enter, a few things will be constant: baby doll dress with empire waists, slip dresses, vests, and lots of linen.

At the Holyoke Mall, you can find the aforementioned articles in Express, The Limited, Aeropostole, Banana Republic, S79, and JC Penney. Many of the clothing will be similar and it's entirely up to you to choose between a $35 dress from Express and a $20 one from JC Penney.

Another hot material on the shelves world-wide is denim. America has long sense has a love affair with this fabric, and the cloth has been whipped together to make skirts, shirts, and vests. The GAP seems to have a monopoly on this as well as Express. They recently launched a campaign ad for their jeans featuring sultry Helena Christianson.

If your more into the athletic line that Donna Karan made popular, look no farther than the GAP. They have a new line of athletic wear from unitards and leggings to sweatshirts. It's a little pricey, but if your into sports, you get twice the wear.

On a local level, Zanna in Amherst and Faces in Northampton, along with other shops in Thorn's Market also have a wide selection of Spring wear from body suits to sun dresses.

The bottom line is that if you look hard enough, you won't have to break your budget to look good. It's simply a matter of style, resources, and a little know-how.

Nowhere," a tune that Led Zeppelin never performed live.

Mac says that the band sporadically plays "Stairway to Heaven," citing possible overkill when combined with the tune's enormous American-radio popularity.

"Of course, when we're in another country, like Israel, we have to play it," said Mac.

Even though the band has maintained a hectic schedule since returning from Israel, with shows in Kentucky, Pennsylvania and New York, Mac said Physical Graffiti looks forward to playing the Five-College Area.

"We like playing [Pearl St.]. The bar scene can get tedious, the college shows are more legit."

Fitzgerald's guarded facade, allowing her to blossom into the woman she has held repressed, spurred on by the sirens' beckoning calls.

All those weary of McPherseon's appearance need to check their reservations at the door. As the veteran temptress Sheila, McPherson uses her startling beauty and sharp intelligence to steer Fitzgerald back into life.

There's a knowing wonder that her character beholds of her own sexual powers and McPhereson's clever grasp on this character leaves the viewer breathlessly anticipant of her next film choice. There's a definite talent bursting here.

Sirens is a dream worth chasing. A (Academy of Music)

Major League II — A horrible nightmare worth packing up, shipping out and hurling back to the minor leagues.

Checking one's intelligence at the door doesn't hold much hope for humor as director Davis S. Ward relfilms his original maiden effort sans breakaway star Wesley Snipes and an actual working script.

The plot is non-descript. If you've seen the original or any of those Mighty Ducks flicks, the template reads: Team of misfit losers starts out poor, learns to work together, goes all the way for team glory and mucho product endorsements.

The original Major League was an often clever (and funny) piece of formula entertainment that tempted baseball enthusiasts with the impossible dream, a Cleveland Indians team that could contend.

Major League II is nothing more than a simple cash coffer whose sense of greed outweighs its obligation of laughs for its faithful fans.

Here's a message to returning players Charlie Sheen, Corbin Bernsen and Tom Berenger. Forget contract negotiations. You're all batting .000 and the next bus for Hackensack leaves Thursday.

While your grabbing some pine in the sultry summer sun at the lowrent Double-A farm division, try not to ignore that constant nagging notion:

"Remember when Major League antics were actually fun." D (Hampshire Six)

Anchee Min will be making two appearances in the Pioneer Valley today, first at Amherst College, then later at the Odyssey Bookshop. In her autobiography, Red Azalea, Min gives an account of her brief film career toward the end of his regime. Min's style is simple, direct and personal. She allows us to understand China's Cultural Revolution in personal, humanistic terms. Min has even been called a Chinese Scarlett O'Hara.

Min does not really examine national politics, instead she tells us what happened to the people. We see how communist propaganda infiltrated every corner of society. Because Min was born under the Maoist regime, its teachings were deeply rooted in her mind. Like the other children, she memorized Mao's poetry and sung songs from Madam Mao's operas.

Ironically, because she did so well in high school, upon graduation Min was sent to work as a peasant at the Red Fire Farm. Along with thousands of other Chinese youths, Min is doomed to life at a work farm because by law every family must have one peasant. Life at the

Legislator wants House, Senate records released

By MARTIN FINUCANE
Associated Press

BOSTON — Citizens should be able to inspect the records of the Legislature, which until now have been hidden from view by an exemption in the state's public records law, a lawmaker said Wednesday.

House Minority Leader Peter Forman said he wanted the Legislature to be covered by the "same laws it mandates on other people and other parts of government."

He said: "The Freedom of Information Act applies to all cities and towns, counties, and executive agencies, and it exempts only the Legislature. . . I think it's time we changed that."

In particular, Forman, a Plymouth Republican, wants to scrutinize the budgets of the House and Senate, bodies controlled by the majority Democrats. He was the only witness to testify Wednesday morning on his proposed legislation before the State Administration Committee.

But by afternoon he had gotten the support of a good-government activist group.

"Common Cause supports the efforts to open up information about the Legislature," said Nathan Gibson, executive director of the group. "Public accountability is best served when this information is available to the public."

Committee Co-chairman Sen. Marc Pacheco, D-Taunton, said the committee already had approved a bill allowing the state auditor to look at the Legislature's books.

farm causes some of Min's comrades to go insane. Min, however, develops a close bond with her commander, allowing them to both remain sane.

Eventually Min is selected by one of Madam Mao's talent scouts to become a film actress in Shanghai. The combination of communism and film studio politics makes life on the farm seem blissful. Then, after she starts as a set clerk, she was able to come to the United States with the help of a fellow actress.

The best thing about Min's book is that she does not directly criticize the Maoist government. She lets us see for ourselves the government induced horrors of her lifetime. We see how her family is torn apart, and are able to feel the hopelessness of life on the work farm. Min makes China's Cultural Revolution real, not just another page in a history book about a land far away. A Anchee Min will read from her book at 3:30 p.m. Friday at Amherst College in the Campus Center Frontroom; then she will be at the Odyssey Bookshop in South Hadley at 7:30 p.m. on Friday night.

U.S.–Haiti agreement cancelled

New U.S. policy the reason for end of 13–year accord

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Exiled Haitian President Jean-Bertrand Aristide is canceling a 1981 U.S.-Haitian refugee agreement on grounds the U.S. policy of repatriating all boat people from the Caribbean nation violates the accord.

Aristide disclosed his decision in a letter to President Clinton, who has retained the Bush administration's policy of sending back all Haitian refugees — including those trying to escape political persecution.

Aristide called the U.S. policy "a perversion of democracy." He said termination of the agreement becomes effective in six months, consistent with the language in the accord allowing that period of time for either country to renounce it.

The State Department had no immediate comment on the letter Wednesday.

The U.S. Coast Guard has been repatriating Haitian boat people since May 1992 to discourage Haitians from fleeing and thus avoid mass loss of life on the high seas between Haiti and Florida. The administration has sought to accommodate Haitians who face persecution by permitting them to apply for refugee status at U.S. consular offices in the country.

In the 1981 agreement, the United States pledged not to return bona fide refugees to Haiti.

Aristide's letter said "the very basis of U.S. refugee policy toward Haitians has rested upon a premise that Haitians are not fleeing persecution." Taking into account the brutality of Haiti's military rulers, Aristide said such an assertion "is no less than incredible."

Copies of the letter were made available to several news organizations Tuesday night, but aides said afterward that Aristide decided not to send it for the time being.

On Wednesday, Aristide's lawyer Michael Barnes confirmed the letter had been sent.

Barnes also disclosed that Aristide has notified the administration that he cannot accept the latest U.S. plan for reinstating the deposed president. Vice President Al Gore outlined the plan in a meeting with Aristide last month.

Barnes said the plan fails to set a date certain for Aristide's return and also calls for the lifting of international sanctions against Haiti before Aristide's reinstatement.

King's attorney moves for mistrial

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Rodney King's lawyer moved for a mistrial Wednesday in King's lawsuit against the city after jurors said a juror in a different case confronted them at lunch and accused them of "wasting taxpayers' money."

U.S. District Judge John Davies denied the attorney the motion after he spent an hour quizzing each juror about the incident.

"These people have the intelligence and desire to put this incident behind them and treat it for what it was, an encounter with a discourteous person," Davies said.

Six jurors said they were pointed out at a restaurant by jurors from a state Superior Court case. That court is in a building a few blocks away from the federal court where King's civil lawsuit is being heard.

They said one man pointed them out and said: "Those are Rodney King jurors. Don't they know they're wasting taxpayers' money." The King jurors took the name of the disgruntled juror, his judge and his and companion jurors' badge numbers. Davies said he alerted the other judge by phone.

"There was anger," one of the King jurors said. "They seemed to be either frustrated or aggravated." She said the remark seemed to ripple through the crowd and others turned to look at them. King's attorney Milton Grimes, worried that the incident could affect the verdict, noted that jurors have been kept anonymous and wondered how they were identified. That question was never answered.

In addition to knowing that three days of rioting erupted after four police officers were acquitted of state charges in the beating, Grimes said, the jurors "know now that they've been identified and they've been approached with anger by other citizens."

He said jurors might now be unwilling to give King a large award for fear that taxpayers will judge them harshly.

Davies said he would seek additional security for jurors during their breaks.

dimpled bastard.

Survive this hole and you are Destiny's Darling. Who can forget Couples' tee shot in '92? Short of the green and rolling down the bank heading for a watery death when all of a sudden, it defied all laws of physical motion and stopped rolling down a hill.

Couples got up and down in two.

Who will be the first to blink?

Last year, Chip Beck was my fave to win, but after the hideous lack of testosterone (for lack of a better word) he displayed in his tepid pursuit of leader Bernhard Langer, I vowed never again to pick someone sponsored by Wal–Mart.

Norman, "You the man." Everyone knows it. He knows it. I know it. It's not anyone who can turn Sawgrass into his personal Putt–Putt.

He's got a favorable first and second round pairing, playing with the knickerbockered one, Payne Stewart, who is having a rather silent '94.

Are his nerves steely enough? Despite his rape of Royal St. George last July in the face of Nick Faldo, the answer is still no.

Faldo. You never hear anything about him until you turn on your set Saturday afternoon to watch the third round and you see his name with something next to it that resembles – 9.

The most composed, icy, consistent player on the face of the earth. Will he give his 1989 and 1990 trophies a companion on the shelf? Who knows?

With no wind, this tournament belongs to the FuzzMeister, who is playing better than anyone in the world right now, this side of Norman of course. Zoeller, with his K–Mart, yes, K–Mart clubs, will be shooting for the pins on the 15–year anniversary of his Masters triumph.

After cleaning up on the Geritol . . . er, Senior Tour, Raymond Floyd (76 Masters Champ) will make a good showing this weekend, as usual.

Always beware the foreigners. Swoozy Woozy, playing with the in–shape, off–the–booze John Daly, could pull a repeat of his winning performance in '91.

Jose Maria Olazabal is still looking to break through and become the duffer everybody thought he could be. Don't forget that Swaggering Spaniard Seve Ballesteros, who is paired with Floyd.

Langer's going for number three and Aussie Ian–Baker Finch is loooking to regain the form that brought him the '91 British Open Championship.

However, this is the year for "the Cinderella story at Augusta." My man is Jeff Maggert.

Your Horoscope

By Jonne Rhee

ARIES (March 21–April 19): You will have to go all–out if you hope to win a career competition or snare a new job. Find out how things work before you attempt to repair them. Your position is strong.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): A dazzling performance puts you in a position to move up. Focus on ways to boost productivity. You can chase the blahs away tonight with good company and a wonderful dinner.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): You have a hidden longing that needs to find concrete expression. Do not discard still–useable items.

CANCER (June 21–July 22): Today's winner will be the person with stamina, not just a bankroll. A special diet brings greater peace of mind while improving your health.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): Pore a collection before even thinking about buying it. Special occasions have real meaning for a child.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): A financial discussion with our mate or boss could be part of today's agenda. If buying a major item, be certain you get any guarantees in writing. A partner's unique talents complement your own.

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): What you suspect about a situation or a person is correct. A loss could be the start of an exciting new romance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): A pet helps you determine the best way to handle a touchy situation. The winds of prosperity are blowing your way.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): An offhand remark could be misunderstood. Watch what you say and do over the next few days.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): Because you have known pain, you now have the strength to survive anything that comes your way. An exquisite career or romantic opportunity has you walking on air!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18): An idea you get today is even more on–target than you realize. You will receive superb coverage if you make a speech or put in a special appearance.

PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20): Controversial help may be the best answer to a teen–ager's problem. Making your job site a better place will boost productivity and profits. A tolerant, open–minded approach keeps you young at heart.

Glass helps fry PC in lax home opener

By MATT VAUTOUR
Collegian Staff

There was no sun and no suspense as the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team routed Providence College 18–2 in a rain–soaked home opener at Richard F. Garber Field yesterday.

The rain made for a smaller than usual crowd off the field, and a lot of slipping and sliding on it.

The Gorillas (3–2) set the tone for the game early. Less than a minute into the game, Brendan Glass took a pass from Chris Nentwich and blasted it past Providence goalkeeper Pat McNiff for his first of four goals. Glass has a team–leading 13 goals on the season.

Eric Triolo found the net two minutes later for his fourth goal of the year giving the Gorillas a 2–0 lead.

UMass kept the offensive onslaught going throughout the first quarter taking a 8–1 lead at the first intermission.

UMass relaxed the pressure in the beginning of the second quarter using the seven–goal cushion as a chance to work on some set plays.

Freshman Ken Sussi broke the 10–minute scoring drought as he beat McNiff for his first collegiate goal.

The Gorillas added two more goals to take an 11–1 halftime lead.

PC Coach Kevin Murray changed goalies in the second half replacing McNiff with sophomore Kieran McCavanaugh.

The switch temporarily ignited the Friars as Andy Hersom beat Gorilla goalie Tom LoPresti to cut the lead to 11–2. UMass responded quickly as Mike Valente made a pretty off–balance move to score his second goal of the season.

The deficit allowed Garber to empty his bench early in the second. Sophomore goalie Kevin Ratkiewicz was very impressive in his first collegiate performance, shutting out the Friars in 24 minutes of action.

"He's worked hard," said Garber. "He deserves to play when he gets a chance. He made some big saves. He's a good goalie."

In a game as lopsided as this one, a coach's worst fear is losing a key player to injury, a fear realized by Garber when freshman Jay Robbins was sidelined with a separated shoulder that may end his season.

Freshman attacker Anthony Piccone looked sharp as well, scoring his first collegiate goal with 18 seconds to play in the game to give UMass the 18–2 blowout.

The Friars looked intimidated at the outset and played uninspired throughout.

"I was surprised," said Glass. "They [Providence] were pretty lackadaisical out there."

The Gorillas controlled the game throughout as almost all of the play was in the UMass offensive end. The Gorillas shredded the Friar defense with crisp passing and good movement without the ball. The Friars had trouble keeping the ball as UMass played aggressive defense forcing PC into multiple costly turnovers.

"I was pleased at what we did," said Garber. "We did what we had to do today."

The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team opened its home season in impressive fashion, rolling over Providence College 18–2.

The Hill doesn't factor into romp

By ANDREW BRYCE

Back to The Hill again, The Hill again.

After compiling a 2–2 record after four consecutive road games so far this season, the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team yesterday returned to Richard F. Garber Field, infamously nicknamed The Hill (referring to the hill where the spectators watch the game from).

And yesterday, The Hill was . . . practically vacant. Only a handful of fans braved the pouring rain as they watched from The Hill. Another small group of people gathered beneath the underpass at Tobin Hall located behind the scoreboard.

It just wasn't the same as the last two games of the 1993 season. Powerhouse lax programs Syracuse and Brown came to Amherst, and a total of 4,481 fans soaked up the springtime sun at Garber for the two matchups. Not a spot could be found on The Hill for the 'Cuse game, as it packed in 4,089 people. And there was the Gorilla, the official mascot for "Garber's Gorillas," arousing the crowds during the two games.

Yesterday was different. 'Cuse and Brown were now Providence, the sun was now a mixture of clouds and rain, and the attendance was a mere 158. And while the Syracuse 17–14 win was close, and the Gorillas' 8–6 win was a tight one, Wednesday's Massachusetts–Providence game was an 18–2 blowout. The Gorilla? Nowhere to be found.

It rained. It was a bit chilly. But, the Gorillas were back home. They were back on their home turf. It was just a week ago that they got to practice for the first time this season at Garber Field. Yesterday, nothing could have stopped Massachusetts from playing on their field. Not the downpour, not the cold air, nor any poor field conditions.

It was freshman Brendan Glass' first game played on the grass (or, the mud) of Garber Field. Glass did absolutely nothing to disappoint his coaches, teammates and the small gathering of fans in attendance, scoring four goals and adding an assist. Did the inclement weather in his home debut disappoint Glass?

"Let's put it this way, if I was a UMass student, I probably wouldn't have went to the game myself," said Glass.

When a freshman like Glass steps on to The Hill on a day like yesterday, he has not seen The Hill. He has not seen the hundreds, sometimes thousands of fans watching from The Hill. He has not heard the lax crowd of what senior Chris Nentwich termed as "intimidating, since they're just five yards off the field."

"When it's beautiful out, 60 degrees and sunny, and The Hill is packed up, there's a sense of enjoyment in the air for the fans and both teams," said goalie Tom Lo Presti.

Glass will just have to wait until the Yale game on Saturday.

"Rumor has it the weather's gonna' be nice Saturday," said Glass. "That'd be great and the place will be packed. It will be my first time playing The Hill."

Second time for The Hill, first time for The Hill.

That time of the year again for Minutewomen

Old friends and old rivals Massachusetts and Connecticut hook up today for a 3 p.m. tilt at Totman Field.

By SEAN P. HAYDEN
Collegian Staff

What do you get when you cross two softball teams — one with six first–year starters and the other with six first– year starters?

Besides getting two teams with 12 first–year starters, you get this year's version of the University of Massachusetts– University of Connecticut softball rivalry.

Gone are stalwarts Dondarski, Kuchinskas and Nichols. Gone are Conlon, Venice and Andrade.

Taking their places are players all relatively new to the UMass–UConn experience. Players like Sam Cardenas, Chris Martens and Stephanie Mareina.

Massachusetts and Connecticut face each other at Totman Field today at 3 p.m. — the first of at least three encounters this season.

"I think it's a good rivalry," said Connecticut Coach Karen Mullins, whose team took all five meetings against the Minutewomen last year. "We always play good ball when we get together."

"It's UConn," said Massachusetts Coach Elaine Sortino. "We better be ready and we better be good."

The Minutewomen stand at 5–8 heading into today's contest, thanks in part to twin 5–0 shutouts against Hartford on Monday. The Huskies are a more experienced 9–9, a point of concern for Sortino.

"I wish we had more games under our belt, but we don't," Sortino said. "They've got more games and more wins."

Gone from the Connecticut lineup are two All–Americans, utility player Janna Venice and national ERA champ Patty Conlon.

"I'm not sorry to see those two go," Sortino said.

"We lost six four–year starters from last year's World Series team," Mullins said. "We are a very young team."

Mullins returns a nucleus of outfielder Andrea D'Innocenzo, second baseman Shari Blackman and shortstop Donna Fagan, who recently had to be switched to first due to an injury.

"They've really stepped it up and got us going," Mullins said. "They're anchoring our team."

Anchoring Sortino's squad is junior pitcher Kelly Daut, who picked up her fourth win of the season in the Hartford outing. In allowing only two hits, Daut lowered her ERA to 1.58.

"She's a tremendous pitcher," Mullins said. "We expect to see Kelly on the mound tomorrow."

Offensively, three first–year players are leading the Minutewomen into the contest. Martens is sporting a nifty .366 batting average, including 15 hits, which ties her for the team lead with Cardenas, who is hitting at a .326 clip. Michelle Methot, who went three–for–three in the first game against the Hawks, is at .310.

The bottom of the lineup, namely sophomore Amy Powell and freshman Stephanie Mareina, have also been producing runs for Sortino.

With so much inexperience, neither coach is worried about having to get her team "up" for this one.

"I think we have a tremendous rivalry," Mullins said. "It's always a bloodbath."

"I think the name 'Connecticut' will motivate them," Sortino said. "I don't think I'll need to make any kind of motivational talk. They'll be ready."

Award time for Pipes

People in Boston, especially those in the Bruins' organization, are upset by Mike Milbury's reignation to become head coach at Boston College. Sure, there is some element of betrayal, but there is likely much more to it than Milbury seeking to take care of his family.

BETWEEN THE PIPES

Just food for thought, but could the real problem be that Milbury sensed GM Harry Sinden was not going to step down anytime soon? The egomaniacal Sinden just will not let go of the reigns.

And the hard–line Milbury has an ego of his own. The college level, where coaches are as much a focus as players, will allow Milbury to become a poor–man's Bobby Knight.

Defense keys women's lax win

By MIKE PINDER
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team posted its second win of the season in a rain–ridden contest at Totman Field yesterday as it defeated a pesky Holy Cross team, 12–6.

The key to the game according to first year coach Francesca Den Hartog, was the "tenacious defense" of the Minutewomen.

"Our team seems to be getting more intellegent each game," Den Hartog said. "The passing has improved and everyone is starting to understand their role for the team."

Over the weekend, the Minutewomen won their first game since the 1990 season, defeating Springfield 14–8.

Freshman attacker Stephanie Walsh scored six goals while tallying an assist in the victory. Also, senior co–captain Rachael Splaine eclipsed the 50–point plateau for her UMass career scoring two goals in the win.

UMass overwhelmed Holy Cross early in the contest, scoring seven unanswered goals in the first five minutes of the game.

Holy Cross finally got on the board, scoring with two minutes remaining in the first half. Freshman goalkeeper Patricia Dibenedetto was stellar in net, turning aside 11 shots.

"We played an excellent game, it was a total team effort," said Splaine. "Patricia and Diana played great defense and we're getting a balanced scoring attack".

While the UMass defense was denying every Holy Cross run, Walsh was scoring at will, tallying four goals and dishing out two assists in leading the Minutewomen to victory.

Splaine and freshman Sara Goddard both netted two goals apiece. UMass kept the pressure on all game, firing 23 shots at the Holy Cross net minder.

Den Hartog has brought a new attitude to the women's lacrosse team. She has stressed teamwork and has deterred selfish play, and the players have responded well to her.

"Early in the year we were more of a individual oriented team, now we are starting to play as team," Den Hartog said. "The 'I' attitude has disappeared and now everyone is looking to get the whole team involved."

The Minutewoman lacrosse team plays next on Saturday, against the Villanova Wildcats in Philidelphia. Den Hartog is hoping that the Minutewomen can come away with their third straight win against a tough Villanova squad.

Or is it the M*A*S*H*sters? It's difficult to tell with all the walking wounded unable to participate in this year's Adventure in the Azalias. The list is long and green–jacket worthy.

Fred Couples, poster boy for golf and 1992 Masters Champion, withdrew last week because of the severe back pain he is suffering due to a herniated disc. Before he withdrew, Couples stood at 8–1 odds, better than anyone else in the field this side of Greg Norman.

It's been long known that Phil Mickelson, tomorrow's poster boy for golf, and 1993 PGA Champion Paul Azinger would be unable to walk the Augusta, Ga., fairways.

Mickelson mangled himself in a skiing accident while Azinger is recovering from chemotherapy to combat a tumor discovered in his shoulder blade last fall. Both are expected to rejoin the tour some time this summer.

You can add Rocco Mediate's name to the injured list. Mediate, he of the pendulum putter, is also suffering from back problems and was forced into the WD.

No use crying over spilt milk as there are plenty of major stars to provide enough weekend action for both the avid golf fan and the execs at CBS.

The key to the tournament will come down to two men, Sunday afternoon, standing at the No. 12 tee.

Minutewomen face ironman schedule

By CANDICE FLEMMING
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's track team is gearing up for a tough week in which it will open up its season with three home meets in eight days.

On Saturday, the Minutewomen will be taking on Rhode Island, Boston College and Boston University; while on Tuesday they will be competing against Vermont, Maine and Springfield College in a meet orginally scheduled for last weekend but was postponed. UMass' third meet of the week will be next Saturday when they meet up with Holy Cross and Hartford.

Coach Julie LaFreniere believes that this weekend's meet will be a difficult way to open the season.

"It's a tough opener. All three of the teams are top teams in New England," LaFreniere said.

The Minutewomen should be strongest in the field events. Sophomore Christie Martin will be looking to continue her indoor performance, where she broke the school record in the 20–pound weight, when she competes in the hammer, discus and shot put.

Junior Natalie Hart, who also owns a school record, hers in the shot put, will be competing in the discus and shot put. Natalie Landry, Dhamana Shakespeare and Stephanie Townson all will be competing in the hammer, discus and shot put. Freshman Heather Brown will be the lone particpant in the javelin.

Janey Meeks will be competing in the triple jump, along with Jesse Rutherford, and the high jump, along with Stacey Barbuto. Meeks has both the indoor and outdoor records in the triple jump and should fare well in that event. Freshman Kimberly Downey will be competing in the long jump with heptathlete Megan O'Neill.

"The long jump will be tough for us," said LaFreniere. "That's gonna be a little bit of a weak event for us. BU and BC have kids that can jump pretty far. In the triple jump, Janey's right in there."

The 4x100m relay team will consist of freshmen Pasha Summers, Downey, Anya Forrest and Erica Doyle. BC is strong in this event but UMass should place high. The 4x400m relay team will be Kerry Aker, O'Neill, Meeks and Doyle with Jen Waeger as an alternate. This will be a tough event for UMass since both BU and BC are strong in this relay.

Forrest will also be competing in the 100m hurdles along with Angela Sorge. Forrest has already broken the school record in the 55m hurdles (8.22) at the indoor ECAC Championships and should be a top finisher in the 100m hurdles. Doyle is another Minutewoman who had a great indoor season. She placed second at the indoor New Englands in the 400m and she will be competing in the 400m on Saturday.

Competing in the 400m hurdles for UMass will be Dianne

U.N. Soldiers Killed in Rwanda

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Rampaging troops killed Rwanda's acting premier and as many as 11 U.N. soldiers Thursday during fierce fighting touched off by the deaths of the presidents of Rwanda and Burundi in a suspicious plane crash.

Reports from Rwanda's capital, Kigali, were sketchy and it was not clear who was involved in the clashes or who was in control of the capital.

Amid the violence, three Cabinet ministers and two Rwandan human rights activists were reported abducted and 17 Jesuit Rwandan priests were reported killed.

The capital in neighboring Burundi was reported quiet.

Intense gunfire and explosions echoed across Kigali, U.N. spokesman Moctar Gueye reported by telephone. He said that there were reports of house–to–house killings and that the city's streets were empty except for small groups of youths armed with machetes and clubs.

U.S. Calls Arafat Response Inadequate

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department is dissatisfied with PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat's statement on a series of attacks on Israeli civilians and is urging other Arab governments to condemn the violence.

"We do believe that people should join with the international community. . .in condemning these acts of violence," spokesman Michael McCurry said Thursday as Israeli reacted with shock and anger to the onslaught.

He quickly qualified the statement to say "all acts of violence" and denounced the perpetrators as "enemies of the peace process, itself."

Unlike some Israelis, the State Department does not want Mideast negotiations suspended in protest.

"The people who conduct this violence prey on fear," McCurry said. "You know, their aim and objective is to raise fears in this region as a way of destroying the peace process."

U.S. Wants to Liberalize Abortion

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration is trying to get more liberal abortion language into a United Nations plan to stabilize the world's population.

Already under attack by Roman Catholics and anti–abortion forces, the draft of a 20–year population stabilization program is under negotiation at a U.N.–sponsored meeting in New York. The 170 participating nations are preparing for an international conference on population in September.

The population plan that ultimately is adopted by the International Conference on Population and Development in Cairo, Egypt, will outline goals and actions that participating countries should take to help check the world's burgeoning population.

The administration believes the draft under consideration in New York should support broader availability of abortion.

Pope Joins in Holocaust Commemoration

ROME (AP) — In an important step toward reconciliation with Jews, the Vatican on Thursday formally commemorated the Holocaust for the first time.

It did so with music by the Beethoven, Leonard Bernstein and Franz Schubert – German, Jewish and Roman Catholic composers respectively - in a concert that brought together Pope John Paul II, Jewish leaders and survivors of Nazi concentration camps.

The concert was held on Holocaust Day, when the extermination of six million Jews is remembered. In Israel, sirens blared across the country to begin two minutes of silence commemorating the slaughter and its legacy.

At the Vatican, the Pope told an audience of 7,500 attending the concert that the evil of the Holocaust must not be allowed to reoccur.

NAACP head cites work of students

University organizations such as the Asian Latino African Native American (ALANA) Honor Society show that the majority of people of color are not on drugs nor in gangs, said the executive director and chief executive officer of the National Association of the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) last night in Campus Center.

Benjamin F. Chavis, who is the youngest person to be named CEO, the highest position in the NAACP, was the guest keynote speaker for the ALANA Honor Society awards banquet as well as a guest speaker at the Martin Luther King Gospel Extravaganza in the Bowker Auditorium.

Chavis, 46, praised ALANA Honor Society members because they break the stereotypes of not only graduating from college, but by doing it with honors. Chavis claimed that the ALANA honor member exemplified the idea that "the future of young people is now, not tomorrow."

A total of 173 students are active members of the honor society, for which they need to have a G.P.A. of 3.0 or higher, among other requirements, to belong.

STEVE PADILLA / COLLEGIAN

Anibere Rogers, a Freshman Dance and Education major from Milford, Connecticut, said that she was "surprised" to see how formal and organized the activity was.

However, not all members walked out happily from the ceremony nor do all understand the role of the organization on campus.

"I felt bad when I did not receive the prize [the certificate of membership]," said Rafael Arteaga, a freshman school of management major from Puerto Rico who was invited to join the organization.

"I do not know what we [the honor society] do [on campus], I just did it to say that I was there," Arteaga said.

During his speech to the honor society, Chavis touched on a number of racial issues.

We live in a society which dwells on the negative, and not on the positive aspects, according to Chavis. Which is what makes people stereotype people of color.

Chavis said all Americans need to move past the negative stereotypes for people of color to gain equal rights.

BOG rejects plan

Board balks at SGA restructuring

By CATHERINE B. PULLEY
Collegian Staff

After a decision to restructure the Board of Governors by the Student Government Association on April 6, due to operational "inefficiency," the BOG executive committee has rejected the proposal for a Campus Center/Student Union Commission to take its place.

The Senate voted to restructure the BOG by "almost a unanimous vote," according to Student Trustee Al Lizana. The restructuring decision was derived after a restructuring committee was formed by the Graduate Student Senate, SGA and the BOG.

See related story, page three

The positions of treasurer and vice–chair were removed from the BOG and created into a commission of nine appointed people. Along with the restructuring of the student positions, a full time 20 year employee of the university was removed.

"The process by which the vote was taken was undemocratic. No debate was allowed on the subject," says George Fitzgerald, the chairman of the Board of Governors. "There were not enough senators to pass the vote."

Fitzgerald said that there were senators present who had been inducted that night, and were not informed of the motion to restructure the BOG.

The Board of Governors operate the Student Union/Campus Center by running the vending program and funding registered student organizations. The BOG votes on prices of food, assigns rooms and keys to RSO's.

In a statement from the BOG, the executive board said that since the Campus Center/Student Union Commission does not provide for a diverse, democratically elected and strong governance, the proposal would not be accepted.

"The SGA created the BOG, so the SGA can remove them. The BOG is not an autonomous body that is separate from SGA," said Matt Pavesi, the acting registrar of the Student Government Association.

"The restructuring of the board doesn't change the student advocacy. It just makes it more cost effective since we don't want to raise fees."

Pavesi said the Undergraduate Student Senate was fully knowledgeable on the motion to restructure the BOG.

"We were created by the Student Government Association, the Graduate Student Senate, and the Stockbridge Senate," said Fitzgerald. "The SGA cannot act unilaterally on its own to remove us."

Fitzgerald said that the BOG is an autonomous body separate from SGA and cited the Fiscal Agreement of 1986 and the Welman document as verification.

As of press time, the BOG offered documentation to The Collegian to verify its autonomy at a later time.

SGA submitted documentation to The Collegian that said, since

Trustees raise fees on campus

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

Students at the University of Massachusetts may see their bill increase next year unless the state legislation increases state appropriations by seven percent.

The University's Board of Trustees met Wednesday on the UMass–Dartmouth campus and voted 13–5 to increase the mandatory fees, tuition and room and board costs by 2.5 percent for undergraduate residents.

"The Board passed a proposal that will increase the overall mandatory cost by two percent," said Lynn Robitaille, the Student Coordinator of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy.

Michael Hooker, President of the University went before the House Ways and Means Committee last week and asked the legislature to support the University's bid for $21.8 million increase in state appropriations.

"Contingent on whether or not UMass receives an increase of seven percent in funding from the state legislature, the increase in fees will be rolled back to zero percent," Robitaille said.

Hooker then spoke before the Board of Trustees in favor of the students and supported other ways to making the university more accessible.

"Hooker basically said he realizes University is pricing students out," Robitaille said. "He has committed to increasing financial aid for the next few years to close the gap of unmet needs for students who qualify for financial aid."

UMass will not be notified of a roll back in the fee increase until the budget is signed by the Governor after July 1, according to Marc Kenen, Director of SCERA.

"The first proposed budget comes out of the House Ways and Means Committee in the end of April, and after that it has five more stops," said Kenen.

Women's Studies praised

By VANESSA AMIN
Collegian Staff

Four University of Massachusetts graduates returned to their alma mater yesterday to discuss how they benefited from the support and help of the women's studies program, which enabled them to establish paths towards successful careers.

According to Nancy Richard, a 1982 graduate and curator for the Massachusetts State Archives in Boston, after she discovered the women's studies program, she was able to understand her thoughts and feelings for the first time.

Richard helped develop a student internship program and says it was "natural" for her to research and record women's lives. She is now researching gay and lesbian history.

"I feel that I have done my job to the best of my ability and I thank the women's studies program for all their support," Richard said.

According to Norma Dana, a 1992 graduate, after just getting over a divorce and trying to raise three children on her own, she decided to start college at the age of 35.

Dana says she had very low self–esteem and no idea of a career choice, until she found the women's studies program.

"I never thought that there was a job that actually could come from the heart," Dana said.

Today, Dana is a Spiritual Counselor for the Hospice of Hampshire County in Northampton, which counsels people with terminal illnesses.

Dana wanted to be a part of this organization, she said, after one of her friends died. Through the support of Hospice, she was able to cope with her friend's death.

"Don't let anybody tell you who you are and where you should be going," Dana said. "Just do what you love."

According to Janet Alfs, a 1979 graduate, the women's studies program gave her courage to be herself and call herself a lesbian.

Alfs, a poet and the head instructor of the Valley Women's Martial Arts in Easthampton, says she used to be afraid to speak in front of people until she started taking martial arts lessons, which gave her an opportunity to open up to other women about violence in society.

"First you have to overcome your fear, then make your own choices and don't follow society," Alfs said.

According to Vicki Pillard, M.D., a 1983 graduate, she always felt that one had to be a genius in order to become a doctor.

Olver–Concord Coalition battle over zero deficit reduction plan

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

Congressman John Olver (D–Mass.) is used to arguing over proposals and bills on the floor of the U.S. House of Representatives, but he was unprepared for the battle he faced while speaking at Amherst College last night.

Approximately 40 people gathered in the Converse Assembly Room to listen to Olver speak about the federal budget deficit. The forum was sponsored by the Five College Concord Coalition.

The main topic of debate was the Coalition's published pamphlet "The Zero Deficit Plan." The pamphlet is a plan of ways the United States Government can eliminate the federal budget by the year 2000. The main proposal in the plan is to cut entitlements in the budget. Olver disagreed.

"I don't think that we can responsibly reduce the deficit to zero by the year 2000," Olver said.

After Olver was introduced he spoke to the assembly about deficit.

He briefly reviewed the economic factors involved in the $400 deficit including health care, social security and defense.

"The atmosphere around Congress about the deficit, is a real need to make cuts," Olver said. "But after you've dug yourself into a hole, it's hard to get out."

Olver opened the floor to questions and was welcomed by several Coalition members that wanted him to review the pamphlet. Olver was even asked to present the plan to Congress.

"I am not going to introduce a full plan of that sort, for many reasons that I have already explained," Olver said.

Olver is a first term Congressman representing Massachusetts' first district. He was previously a Senator in the Commonwealth.

Cookie crumbles the right way in Girl Scout–BOG agreement

By MIKE CARVALHO
Collegian Staff

Despite encountering some initial difficulties with the Board of Governors, an Amherst Girl Scout troop will be allowed to sell their cookies on the Campus Center concourse this year.

When Tina Acker, the leader of Troop 517, approached the BOG about conducting the sale this year, she was told that the scouts would be charged a $120 fee.

"We've done this for three years without paying a fee," said Acker, who said that the $120 would account for almost half of the money the girls usually earn in one day.

According to Andrea Valle, coordinator of the BOG's vending committee, the problem stemmed from the BOG's vending policy which did not allow non-profit community groups to conduct fundraising activities in the Campus Center without paying the standard $120 vendor fee.

"The fee was waived for them last year, but this year we've received a lot of requests from other groups," said Valle. She said other scouting organizations and at least one Little League team have also inquired about fundraising on the concourse this year.

Citing the congestion which already exists on the concourse, Valle said letting all non-profit groups have free tables would result in even more overcrowding.

To solve the problem, the vending committee amended the policy yesterday afternoon. Registered Student Organizations will now be allowed to sponsor tables on the concourse for non-profit groups. Those groups will then be required to pay only a $5 processing fee to the BOG.

"We'll pay the five dollars," said Acker. "And we will sell our cookies." The troop has made arrangements to have the service fraternity Alpha Phi Omega, through which arrangements were also made last year, sponsor the table.

The 17 members of Troop 517 are from sixth, seventh and eighth grade, and are old enough now that they want to do something besides going door-to-door, said Acker. "It's exciting to be doing something different like selling cookies on the campus."

Barring any unforeseen complications, Troop 517 will be selling their cookies on the Campus Center concourse on Wednesday, April 20th, the middle of a school vacation week. But get there early, warns Acker.

"Last year we were only there for about two and a half hours," she said, "Then we sold out."

Money raised in the cookie sale is used for troop activities, such as field trips and special events.

Hillel chooses officers for fall semester's council

By JACOB MICHAELS
Collegian Staff

It is a sign that summer break is near when organizations elect the people who are to guide them through the next semester. On Tuesday night, April 5, Hillel elected their officers for the fall semester.

Each candidate was able to speak for up to five minutes and afterwards answered questions from the approximately 25 students in attendance. The students then voted by secret ballot.

Nurit Ben-Harav was elected to the office of Hillel president for the fall semester. She defeated current Hillel Treasurer Jessica Lopatin. Of her plans for next semester, Ben-Harav said, "Along with other things, I'd like Hillel to be very political. I'd like to expand membership of Hillel, get more people involved. I'd like to bring Hillel to campus and campus to Hillel."

There was a three way race for the office of vice president between current Vice President Steve Simon, Ron Gonen and Ornit Niv. According to the Hillel Constitution a majority of 51 percent is needed for an election. After the first vote there was no majority, so a second vote was held between the two candidates with the highest following. Gonen and Niv. After the second vote, Gonen was declared the winner of the position. Gonen was unavailable for comment.

Lori Rapaport ran uncontested for secretary, and Dror Niv ran uncontested for treasurer. Both candidates were elected.

Niv said he plans to "do a lot more of the job: set budgets for committees, a lot of fund raising events, more movies, a lot of those kind of events. [I'm going to] put the finances of the house in order. . ."

About the elections, Niv said, "The election was good. It was the first time we had 20 people voting. We didn't have to beg anyone to run and we had two contested races."

Rapaport said, "My main goal is to reach the Jewish community on campus because there a lot a people on campus that may be hesitant to get involved and I want to reach out and make them feel comfortable here."

She said, "I'm excited about being on [Executive Council] and working with Nurit, Dror, and Ron. I think it'll be lots of fun."

Rabbi Saul Perlmutter said, "I was really glad there were contests for the various positions. It shows people care and realize how important these positions really are."

Southwest Activities planned

By CHRISTOPHER WARREN
Collegian Correspondent

April 19–22 will be Southwest Week, and this year it is not only a week of entertainment, it is an attempt to improve the image of Southwest residential area.

"We're trying to give Southwest a more positive outlook . . . has a bad reputation on campus," says Southwest Area Government (SWAG) co-president Melissa Schraga.

This "Step in the Right Direction" plan is based on diversity of entertainers and accessibility for all students. Entertainers will include rappers, Latin and South American bands, Caribbean dancers, and a cappella singers. Entertainment will be free for everyone, to attract students from different residential areas.

The four-day festival will have late and early events each day. The early sessions, from noon to 5 p.m., will have DJs, vendors, local bands, and a raffle, with a barbecue added on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday. Evening entertainment starts at 8 p.m., runs to about 10 p.m., and are the heart of the diversity effort.

Tuesday will have the Kandombe Percussion Ensemble from Brazil, with non-stop live drumming and the rhythms of Samba, Frevo, and Marakatu music. Also on Tuesday will be guitarist and recording artist Jose Gonzalez from Puerto Rico.

Then there will be two days of comedy; R-rated hypnotist Frank Santos Wednesday night and three comedians from Boston and New York Thursday: Vinnj Favorito, Tracy Smith, and Royale Watkins.

"We wanted to be new and different and more broad" in choosing acts, said Schraga.

Images lead to eating problems

JESSICA TAVERNA
Collegian Staff

Two groups geared towards providing resources and peer support for women with eating disorders held a discussion at Amherst College last night entitled "Romantic Relationships and Your Body."

The discussion focused on issues of body image, social patterns, relationships, sex, love and college life.

"The percentage of eating disorders on campus is the highest of any environment. It's something like 50 percent," Amherst College senior Barrie Yallof said.

Many women at college resort to eating disorders as an attempt to keep up with the competitive environment they are in, which says that they should be "good at everything", well-rounded and beautiful, Yallof said.

Yallof led the discussion in an effort to expose students to the resources available to them and hold a somewhat open forum of discussion on feelings and impressions of the issues presented.

Because people think that beauty gives you sexuality, Yallof said, "women connect their sexuality with their appearance."

There was a lot of attention given to men's perception of female's sexuality, worth and the way that this perception effects female behavioral patterns.

The beginning stages in a relationship was discussed, particularly the common phenomena of women feeling uncomfortable eating in front of a new aquaintance on a first or second date. Thus, according to Yallof, the women eat improperly.

More importantly, though, were the ramifications of weight gain and loss.

Some thought that losing a great deal of weight would bring them happiness, but the majority felt that being skinny and frail would make them feel more vulnerable.

The discussion was presented by "Listening to Our Bodies," the student-run service for referral, information and support and the "Womenspeak" organization started on the Amherst College campus two years ago, Yallof said.

"I think that I should avoid these types of meetings. If I think about it too much, I get way too over-analytical and over-anxious," Amherst College student Deborah Cohen said.

"Sometimes you just don't want to think about it," Yallof said. "I think that's a sign of healing."

creating the BOG, the act may be amended by a two-third affirmative vote by the senate.

The document says the vote is subject to majority consent of both senates. The act may be amended by a two-thirds vote of each Senate voting separately, but both agreeing.

No one from SGA could be reached for comment after documentation was submitted.

Pavesi said that the SGA received complaints from many RSO's stating that BOG inefficient in their performance. The LBGA, UVC, and LGBCC along with many other RSO's registered complaints calling for a need to restructure.

"As the student government we feel that students should have representation in the CC/SU and students will still get the same services," said Pavesi. "And the forming of the commission will do exactly the same thing. It is our job to use student money in the most cost effective manner."

According to the BOG, the proposal does not reflect the agreements made during the restructuring review.

Also in a press release, the BOG said that they were informed of the Campus Center/Student Union Commission the day before the vote by the Student Senate, and that they did not have an ample amount of time to prepare a response.

"We were told by the budget committee that there would be no drastic changes," said former BOG Vice Chair, Dan Gordon. "They didn't notify us at all, they sent a memo to Director (Bill) Harris. The SGA is not following the ideas of student empowerment."

Gordon said that their budget was cut from $46,000 to $15,000 dollars because of the restructuring.

Pavesi said that all former members of the board were encouraged to be on the new commission.

"I think that the leadership on the BOG is good and competent," said Pavesi. "But the pro's outweighed the cons, and we are in a budget crisis. We are not going to forget all the good things that the BOG did."

The Board of Governor's has not fully decided how they are going to respond to the matter.

Taking time out to reflect

Almost exactly two years ago, on his 18th birthday, one of my best friends Dave was diagnosed with a cancerous brain tumor.

Cancer!?

The revelation shattered the peaceful and secure world that most high school seniors live in. Cancer was supposed to be something for old people who'd smoked four packs a day for 50 years. During your senior year in high school your only worries are supposed to be going away to college and finding a date to the prom, but not mortality. I hadn't even had my first gray hair!

For now, the story has a happy ending. After eight months of chemotherapy and treatment, the tumor was completely removed. The cancer is not expected to return anytime soon, and Dave's life has returned to normal.

Well not quite normal...

Other than the fear and reality crash that this whole event caused, I really learned something from the experience. Dave used to be high strung and short tempered. Not any longer. Dave credits his brush with death as the motivation to reorganize his priorities. What once would have sparked a bad mood is now just laughed off. He seems to like life better this way.

As we hurry through our days, hurrying from place to place missing opportunities we didn't even know were there, these people are appreciating what time they have and taking the time to enjoy life. What good is living until 90 if you've passed life by?

Matther Vautour

My uncle is in his 40s. It would seem as if he were far too young to be thinking about death, but he is now in treatment for bone cancer. His prospects aren't good. But my uncle is a fighter. Nothing will take him without a tight. He's going to battle as long as possible to live to see his young son Brad grow up.

He used to present a macho image, but now not a relative or friend leaves his company without an "I love you," and a hug. He doesn't want to take any chances on not letting someone know how he feels, because he may not get the chance again.

Finally in this trilogy of events that have tugged my heartstrings lately, I went to see last Thursday's showing of My Life at the Campus Center, and anyone who has seen this movie can understand why I was affected.

Michael Keaton plays a rich powerful business man who finds out he has only has four months to live. As the story proceeds, Keaton completely changes his life. Instead of concentrating on business, he just wants to stay alive long enough to see the birth of his first son. Being a sap, I bawled through most of the second half of the movie.

The thing that hit me the most was that, despite their tragic circumstances, none of these people are complaining or asking, "Why me?" Instead of being resentful, they are living life the way it should be lived. They have put more value on life, and have changed theirs for the better.

As a fairly typical college student, I have done my best to overburden myself and fill as many waking minutes as possible. Why? A drunk driver or Dining Commons food could kill me tomorrow, and would I have done enough? Would I have let the people I care about know how I feel? It's a shame that death has to stare us in the face to make us realize how lucky we really are.

As we hurry through our days, hurrying from place to place missing opportunities we didn't even know were there, these people are appreciating what time they have and taking the time to enjoy life. What good is living until 90 if you've passed life by?

Exams, papers and relationships can seem pretty trivial compared to chemotherapy and radiation. When faced with the prospect of death, those little problems that we overemphasize seem pretty trivial.

It's never to early to appreciate life.

Nightmare shakes things up

I had a dream. In fact, it was a nightmare. When I finally woke up this morning (sometime around 11 a.m.), I was downright scared. This dream was so realistic that I briefly contemplated reforming my life; giving up drugs, alcohol, and preservatives of any kind — a sort of compromise with my subconscious. I wouldn't alter my mind and my mind wouldn't wake me up in a cold sweat. I firmly believe this dream was a payback for all the tequila shots I threw down over break. Needless to say, I really like my tequila.

A. J. Stewart

To begin with, I should say that I'm a sound sleeper. For ten hours a night (I need my beauty rest), I am dead to the world. I have slept through fire alarms, earthquakes, and visits from my parents. I love to sleep. And yet, I don't remember too many dreams, other than a recurring dream sequence involving my fourth grade teacher dancing on a table. I have only one vivid dream which occurs monthly.

I am falling from the sky, speeding 100 miles an hour towards a body of water. It looks like almost certain death, my body ready to smash into a million pieces as I perform the greatest belly flop in history. Just as I am about to close my eyes in fear, the water disappears and the Giant Cactus in front of Hilltop Steakhouse takes its place. Then I wake up. I have no idea what this means, but I have had this same dream since I was seven. It was always my biggest nightmare — until last night.

I went to sleep around 1 a.m. after catching Conan O'Brien. My roommate was still awake, doing some project I had conveniently ignored. I was looking forward to another night of dancing with my 23 year-old English teacher. Little did I know that my peaceful existence was about to change forever.

The dream started simply enough. I was a sheriff, wearing a ten gallon hat and a badge. The dream was in black and white, and it looked like I was in a deserted ghost town. I was just acclimating myself to the surroundings when a station wagon roared around the corner, raising dust high into the air.

The car stopped and Mike Brady stepped out, only he had one of those oily moustaches that curls at the ends. But instead of Florence Henderson, he was with the Buns of Steel woman. She was in that pink spandex outfit, and she kept yelling, "Stop staring at my chest." I tried to apologize, but before I knew it, Mike Brady had thrown me to the ground. I was stunned at first, but then I composed myself.

"Hey," I said, "I'm the sheriff!" I went to the holster for my gun, but my hand found only a Charleston Chew. Mike started laughing at me, but the Buns woman was enraged. "I can't believe you're eating that garbage! A half hour, three times a week. That's all. But you go and eat that! You disgust me!" I was doomed.

Mike and Buns grabbed me and threw me into the station wagon. They drove me to the train tracks and tied me down. I tried to escape, but before I could get enough energy, Buns would tell me to exhale. I kept losing my concentration. Then in the distance I heard the whistle of the train. I remember Mike's sinister laugh. He sounded like a cross between the Jolly Green Giant and Charles Manson. The train was now dangerously close.

Suddenly, the Buns woman started shaving my head with a straight edge. The train stopped and people started getting out and sat down in makeshift bleachers. They started booing me as if I was Mike Greenwell. Mike Brady acted the part of emcee. By now I was in tears, and I was nearly bald. I didn't know what was to come.

"And now, for your listening pleasure," Mike Brady announced to the crowd, "Wang Chung!"

People were going nuts. The group came over and rubbed my cueball head. Then they grabbed the mics. "Everybody have fun tonight. Everybody Wang Chung tonight!" Meanwhile, Buns was taunting me, trying to make me do an ab workout despite being tied down with rope. Then the train started up again.

Wang Chung kept singing. Buns kissed my head and went to the stands. Mike Brady was dancing without moving his feet. And the crowd was screaming in anticipation. The train was speeding towards me. My neck was on the rail. I tried to close my eyes, but I couldn't. Then my point of view changed, and I was looking down on myself. I watched in horror as the train decapitated my bald head. That was the last thing I saw before waking up wet with sweat.

Maybe this was a sign, or maybe it was just a subconscious joke. I don't know. All I know is that I'll never be the same. I am living in fear of infomercials, sitcoms and 80s rock. I ask you, what else is there in life? I might as well join the priesthood. I know some of you are wondering what exactly the point of this nightmare is. The moral of the story? Don't sleep through morning classes, and remember to lick, shoot, and suck — in that order.

Opinion

Memories of the way it was

It's about time to write my memoirs at the University of Massachusetts, and I want to focus on some of the great friends I've made during from the Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

Now that I'm editor-in-chief, I don't have the time to spend with the friends I've made away from the newspaper, the ex-roommates, floormates and young women I met along the way. It's the one regret I have and, for all the people who might not realize it, I'm gonna miss you guys.

Without further adieu, I think I'll run off what I feel are my top 10 highlights:

No. 10. If my good buddy Ron Morris hadn't dropped out two years ago, his shenanigans would be No. 1 with a bullet. As it is, here are some of the greatest accomplishments of the man we call "The pathological liar."

As a freshman who exclusively spent his time lifting weights, playing Nintendo (remember, this was the pre-Sega days) in other kids' rooms until 4 a.m., and drinking like a fish, Ron was pretty cool. The only problem was, he mooched money off everybody he knew (and didn't know).

One night after partying beyond Orchard Hill, we were walking home when Ron began his machismo rantings.

"Let's steal some mailboxes," he said, and off he went.

After he ripped up two mailboxes, posts and all, he ran into the nearest party, even though the keg had run dry. He sprinted through the front door, holding one mailbox in each hand and began doing the Cabbage Patch. Even the people who didn't know him thought it was hilarious. Hell, let's knock five spots off the list just for that episode alone.

No. 5. The floor party the September of my junior year was a wild blast and gave me the opportunity to meet a number of people who have since become Collegian staffers (that means Sean, Dave and Redbat are disqualified). The funny thing was that a good friend of mine threw up three times and passed out in a strange room with the pistol he was carrying laid directly against his temple. A funny scene.

No. 4. The first time I got drunk was a scene I'll never forget. I was reeling from a failed relationship and, even though I was well past my 18th birthday, I had never drank more than half a beer.

My next-door neighbor had offered let me hang out and guzzle brews with him and other people on my floor, and I finally relented. One. Two. Three and four. I was almost out of my head. I uttered what will probably go down as my most infamous line, despite what other people think.

"Mike, how are you feeling?"

"I am in a state of bliss."

No. 3. My friend Dave is Irish, but he doesn't know it. His name is Irish, but he doesn't admit it. He drinks more than any Irishman I know. He can't get drunk because it costs too much. Seriously.

Well, one night during my sophomore year, Dave drank more than anyone I've ever seen. I think he had 16 beers (5–foot-7, 170-pounds) and then some. Starts yakking all over the place. My pal Bozeman (Montana) Brian had the bad luck of eating the shrimp before our party. He didn't know about UMass shrimp. Right outside the window of Dave's room, Bozeman Bri puked out whole shrimp! It was there seven months later, although it had turned green. I guess you had to be there.

Mike Morrissey

No. 2. Silent Steve is another good highlight all by himself. The kid does not talk. Ever. I met him through Dave (see above), and he never said word one to me.

One day seven months after I met him, he said, "Hey Mike, what's up?" We've talked at length ever since. Okay, so I'm a man of simple pleasures.

No. 1. Last year, my friends and I embarked on something called Seven Days, Seven Ways (sign up now for this year's event. Begins April 19). It's a hedonistic ritual coinciding with the spring, and it generally causes memory lapses, belligerent behavior, wide-spread looting and the occasional run-in with the police.

We had a few run-ins with an officer. Three to be exact. The same officer. Believe it or not, we didn't get arrested once.

The last run-in came when an unnamed acquaintance attempted to bring a fire extinguisher from Washington to Brett. In 40 degree weather. With his sweatshirt hiding the device. (Kids, don't try this at home. Please.)

"It was kind of like a trophy to bring back to my friends."

He almost got kicked out of school, and I had to pass a sobriety test even though we were walking home. I barely passed.

Officer: "Son, do you have an alcohol problem?"

Me: "Yes I do, officer (sniff sniff, boo hoo)."

As Ferris Bueller so aptly said, "I can't believe they bought it."

Letters to the Editor

Health care should remain unregulated

To the editor:

The recent columns on health care by Peter J. Orvetti ["Health care woes continue," April 4] and Neil Carpenter ["The real Clinton health plan," April 6] have tried to promote plans that would change our system for the worse. They have attacked problems that do not exist, and offered a false sense of hope for their readers.

Since when is health care a right? Did I miss this when I studied the Constitution? Health care is a service that, at one time or another, almost all Americans will need. We provide that service in this country better than any other in the world. The reason for that is that our system strives for excellence and not equality.

Both of your columns claim that there are 37 million Americans who are not insured. Many people doubt that figure, but let us assume it is true for now. The Congressional Budget Office showed that, in 1992, 51 percent of those people were uninsured for less than four months. It has not been the same "37 million" since the first hospital was built. Who are these people? Are they 40, married, employed and seeking health insurance? A few may be. Or are they 25, healthy, and would prefer a new stereo to a little card in their wallet?

Is an increase in taxes on employers the best way to "fix" this "crisis"? I'm sure that taking capital out of the hands of our employers isn't the best way to encourage them to hire new people and research new projects. You even criticized the health care industry for being interested in profits. Well, the more profits they make, the better off people are.

Like all businesses, they put their profits back into the system to create new and improved options for the consumer, and more profits for themselves. In this country, someone who develops a new drug, procedure or anything of the kind will become very wealthy. That is even more motivation for them to do it.

When something is free, people abuse it. If the government paid for your car insurance, how would you drive in traffic? If health care (coverage) were run more like a successful business and less like a public trough, we would all benefit. Some people probably believe it actually costs five dollars to visit the doctor. If over-regulated insurance companies can pass along high bills to us, imagine what the government can do.

Sounding out the big ten

COURTESY GAIL BUTTENSKY

Pavement proves to be prime tunage for Audette.

Last week, when brainstorming for possible topics to cover in this week's column, we came up with the idea of each of us sharing our five favorite albums with our readers. This task proved a bit more daunting than expected, and Sound- from the Valley Top 10 of all time has changed more than once over the course of the week. If you ask us to do the same column next week, I guarantee you will get 10 completely different albums.

With that disclaimer, I humbly begin the Babineau half of the Sounds from the Valley Top 10 albums of all time, in no particular order.

SOUNDS FROM THE VALLEY
Compiled by Brian Babineau & Matt Audette

5. De La Soul, 3 Feet High and Rising. These hip–hoppers proved you don't have to fit a commercial stereotype to be an important musical group. Using creative samples, ranging from Hall & Oates to Steely Dan, they created a seamless and joyful musical backdrop onto which they laid smooth, humorous lyrics. Songs like "Eye Know" and "Say No Go" are bonafide hippie/hip–hop classics that brought rap into the daisy age.

4. New Order, Power, Corruption and Lies. New Order created some of the most shimmering and gorgeous dance– rock ever to grace a John Hughes soundtrack. From the epic, lurching "Blue Monday" to the giddy, euphoric "Age of Consent" and symphonic breeze of "Your Silent Face," New Order's first full length LP still makes me feel warm and fuzzy all over.

3. Jimi Hendrix, Are You Experienced?. To paraphrase Clarence Worley, if I had to sleep with a guy, I mean had to, I'd sleep with Jimi. I hope I don't need to say more than "Purple Haze," or "Hey Joe" for you to understand. If you haven't appreciated the way Jimi could make love to his guitar and caress the most incredible noises out of it, put down this paper and go buy this album. Go on. I mean it. Now.

2. Pixies, Doolittle. In about fifteen years, people will talk about the Pixies the way people now talk about the Velvet Underground. The influence of their punk/surf sound is all– encompassing. Doolittle captures them at a peak, combining diverse ska, swing and big band rhythms with Kim Deal's swooping bass and Joey Santiago's stormy guitar squalls. Black Francis' surreal and disturbing lyrics and whisper–to–a–scream vocals put the finishing touches on this masterpiece that we will be hearing about for years to come.

1. Blue Nile, Hats. Moodier than film noir soundtracks, this is unquestionably the most beautiful seven songs ever combined on one album. Soft and cinematic keyboards, light rhythm guitar, and quiet drum machine beats create a lush, sad tapestry through which Paul Moore's forlorn baritone paints melancholy and rainy pictures of love and youth.

COURTESY VIRGIN RECORDS

Babineau's Blue Nile rates high.

The most depressing, and simultaneously wonderful song I have ever heard is "From A Late Night Train." I think I have to (sniffle) get a box (snort) of tissues now.

Honorable Mentions: U2 — War, The Clash — London Calling, The Replacements — Tim, Afghan Whigs — Gentlemen and The The — Soul Mining.

Now on the Audette half of the Sounds Top 10.

5. R.E.M., Reckoning. Trying to pick the best R.E.M. album has got to be one of the hardest things for any music critic to do. For over a decade now these fine lads from Athens, Georgia have been producing some of the finest pop around, without ever compromising their integrity or creative spirit. Reckoning is probably the best document of the band's jangly pop style that would come to be one of the single biggest influences in college rock. Michael Stipe's incoherent mumbling mixed with Peter Buck's no–frills guitar still seems as fresh and exciting as it did back in 1982. Great band, great music.

4. The Smiths, The Queen Is Dead. This album could be considered a classic for the sole reason that it is the only pop album that could mention Keats and Yeats and get away with it. Sure Morrissey is pretentious. Sure songs such as "Never Had No One Ever" and "I Know It's Over" are basically five minute exercises in self–pity. But everyone has had that moment late at night when Morrissey is the only person who understands, and suddenly everything he is moaning and groaning about becomes unnervingly relevant. Come on, admit it — Babineau and I did.

3. Beastie Boys, Check Your Head. All those who wrote off these three musical geniuses after their frat–boy anthem "Fight For Your Right To Party" sadly ate their words after this little gem hit the stores. Containing forty–five minutes of some of the most genre–melting music ever (there is no way you can pigeon–hole these guys in rap anymore), Check Your Head quietly borrowed from the likes or Santana, P–Funk, and Minor Threat and threw it all into one big musical blender. Amazingly enough this odd hybrid of styles never comes off sounding forced of contrived, proving singlehandly that music indeed needs no labels.

2. Pavement, Slanted And Enchanted. Ok, I know that this album has been on every critics Top Ten list from here to Waco, Texas, but there is absolutely no denying it's greatness. From the loose–limbed swing of "Summer Babe" to the lurching balladry of "Here," this pop gem has "classic" written all over it. Guitars churn and rattle, threatening to skid off track at any given moment, while singer Steve Malkmus nervously talk/sings some of the finest obscure lyrics around. Tricks are everything, and these boys know it.

1. Husker Du, New Day Rising. Before bands like Nirvana and Superchunk had picked up their first guitars, there was Husker Du. Taking the dying spirit of punk rock and shamelessly introducing it to the soul of power pop, these Minneapolis natives created a stunning album that has easily stood the test of time. Even under a mountain of distortion pedals, Bob Mould's gut–wrenching songs still hit home harder than any Sugar song could ever hope to. There is still nothing quite like the real thing.

Honorable Mentions: Violent Femmes — Violent Femmes, Sugarcubes — Life's Too Good, Ween — God, Ween, Satan: The Oneness and Liz Phair– — Exile From Guyville.

Hillel features a historical flick

By JACOB W. MICHAELS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts at Amherst Hillel showed the picture Europa, Europa on Wednesday night.

The basement of Hillel House was barely able to hold the 50 to 60 people, many of whom had to sit on the floor or tables. There were people of all ages to see the movie, ranging from one month old upward.

The movie tells the story of Holocaust Survivor Solomon Perel.

According to Lori Rapaport, the chair of Hillel's Holocaust Memorial Week Committee, the movie is being shown in preparation for Perel's visit to UMass.

"I was so impressed with the turnout," said Rapaport.

The movie is done mostly in German and Russian, with English subtitles. While it is about a serious topic, there are many funny moments from Perel's life and travails thrown in.

The movie begins with Perel's bris, the ceremony in which a person is circumcised, and moves quickly to his Bar Mitzvah.

After his sister is killed in a riot his family moved to Poland, where they thought they would be safe from the Nazis. When news of the Nazi invasion reached Perel's family, his father sent him and his older brother, Isaac, East to Russia.

Holocaust Memorial Week

Perel and his brother became separated and Perel ended up in a Russian orphanage.

After two years the Nazis invaded Russia and Perel was captured. He convinced them that he was a German, and served as an interpreter and a soldier, hiding the fact that he was Jewish.

After an encounter with Russians, Perel was considered a Nazi hero and sent to a school for Hitler Youth. The movie then deals with how he has to hide his religion from the Nazi youths and teachers at the school.

It also deals with Perel's love interest there, Leni, from whom he must keep the fact that he is circumcised, as it would give away the fact that he is Jewish.

As the movie ends, the Russian army overruns Perel's school, capturing him. The Russian army leader, who doesn't believe Perel's story turns him over to former Jewish prisoners, to do what they want with him.

There is a tense movement while one wonders whether he came through the Holocaust to be killed in this way, before he is recognized by his brother. The movie ends with Perel living in Israel.

Freshman Lisa Rubin said, "I think it was amazing. His story is unbelievable. I suggest everyone should watch it and come see him speak."

Stefan Buchloh, a graduate student on exchange from Frieburg in Germany, said, "I tried to think about [the Holocaust] the whole time. It showed a truly interesting life. I feel lucky for him. I think this movie shows how ridiculous all prejudice and racist beliefs are."

Europa, Europa is being shown on Housing Services Cable Network on Wednesday, April 13, at 6 p.m.

Perel will be speaking here Tuesday, April 19 at 7:30 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium.

He is being brought as part of the Holocaust Memorial Week events.

David Parson's Dance Co.
& Billy Taylor Trio
Fine Arts Center
April 5, 1994

Tuesday evening the Fine Arts Center presented the David Parson's Dance Company and the Billy Taylor Trio in an exciting experiment collaborating modern dance and jazz music.

The David Parson's Company took hold of the stage, performing two pieces belonging to their repertory of 26 works. The Billy Taylor Trio followed, performing five works instead of their scheduled four. In the final section the musicians and dancers collaborated on stage with the most current work Step Into My Dream. The entire evening lasted approximately two hours, with two, fifteen minute intermissions.

The Parson's Company opened the evening with Nascimento and Caught. Both extremely aerobic pieces, displaying the dancers incredible technical ability and performance presence. Nascimento had a romantic flavor to it, accompanied by pastel colored costumes and an energetic score, composed, arranged and conducted by Milton Nascimento.

Caught was performed by Christopher Kirby, a dancer who also performed in Nascimento. This climatic piece worked with a strobe light, making it exceptionally exciting to watch. During many given moments Kirby appeared to be soaring, the audience never witnessing his feet touch the ground due to the effect of the strobe light and the height of his leaps.

The Billy Taylor Trio followed playing four pieces, improvising with the program's schedule by alternating Remember April for Paraphrase, You Tempt Me for Cuban Chant and by performing an additional piece, One For The Woofer. The Taylor Trio also played an original of theirs, His Name Was Martin and Gershwin's The Man I Love; scores that were scheduled to be played in the program.

Remember April highlighted the individuality of the band members through improvisation and introduced them to the audience. Many of the performed scores were upbeat except His Name Was Martin which possessed a sad, however soothing quality.

The evening concluded with the collaboration of the two arts with Step Into My Dream. This piece possessed nine sections with different genres of music and various styles of movement.

The curtain rose to display the Billy Taylor Trio who seemed to be alone on the stage. However, the dancers soon crawled from beneath Taylor's piano surprising the audience.

Step Into My Dream also treated the audience with improvising not only on the part of the musicians but with that of the dancers. Four dancers sat on stage supporting one another while they improvised to their chosen musicians. In this section of the piece, David Parson's performed selecting Steve Johns on the drums to accompany him. UMass alum Patty Anne Kenny ended the improvised section with an energetic bang accompanied by the entire Trio.

Step Into My Dream boasted many funny and stunning moments. Also, it possessed that awkwardness found in many dreams, a familiarity most of us can relate to.

The entire experiment between the David Parson's Company and the Billy Taylor Trio was a phenomenal success. The evening's performance exciting, and those who were there will not quickly forget.

Photos portray Holocaust

ROBYN NOVIK/COLLEGIAN

This memorial stone is on display in Hillel house as part of Holocaust Memorial Week.

By JACOB W. MICHAELS
Collegian Staff

A picture is worth a thousand words as the saying goes.

The saying is graphically illustrated in a photo exhibit by Lisa Rubin and Robyn Novick. The exhibit is currently being shown in Hillel House as part of Holocaust Memorial Week.

The pictures were taken when Rubin and Novick went to Poland with a group called the March of the Living, an organization that takes people along the same trail upon which Nazis took their victims to the death camps during the Holocaust of World War II.

Appropriately, the photos are put on the walls of the Hillel House, surrounding the courtyard. This makes the viewer walk down the hall to see the photos, increasing the sensation of travelling the long distance to the death camps.

The journey begins with the train tracks on which millions of people traveled to their deaths. You then travel down the tracks to the gates of Auschwitz, the most famous of the Nazi Death camps.

As you continue walking, you see the bunks where Jews slept until they were killed in the gas chambers. You can see the bins where Zyklon-B, a rat poison used to kill Jews, were kept.

Then are the crematoriums the Nazis used to burn the bodies of their victims. Afterwards come the remains of the Holocaust, destroyed Jewish cemeteries and Nazi symbols.

Last come the memorials and tributes. There is the memorial to those involved in the Warsaw Ghetto, and to those who didn't survive. Many of these memorials are covered with graffiti, giving evidence to the anti-Semitism that still remains in the former Nazi-occupied countries.

The photo exhibit will stay up throughout next week, and is free of charge.

Crew attacked in flight

Boodied crew wrestles perpetrator, lands plane safely

By WOODY BAIRD
Associated Press

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — A Federal Express employee armed with a hammer and spear gun attacked the flight crew of a company cargo plane on Thursday before the crew wrestled him to the ground and safely landed the plane.

Three people aboard the DC-10 were critically hurt and a fourth suffered less serious injuries, said Rick Roberts of the Regional Medical Center at Memphis.

"The three crew members did one heck of a job landing the aircraft. It was a miracle they were able to land," said Jerry McMichael, vice president of the Memphis Shelby County Airport Authority.

Airport Authority President Larry Cox said the crew members suffered head and body injuries.

"They were very bloody," Cox said. "It looked like they had been in an explosion or a film you would see of Vietnam. It must have been hand-to-hand combat."

The attacker was a company pilot but was not a member of the crew flying the plane, Federal Express said. The company often allows its employees to ride free aboard its planes if room is available.

The hospital did not immediately release names of the injured or give specifics on their injuries. Federal Express also withheld names until the employees' families were notified.

AIDS directly causes cancer according to a new discovery

By RICHARD COLE
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Researchers have found that the AIDS virus directly causes cancer, and the discovery offers a possibility of better treatment for both diseases. It also raises doubts about the safety of some new forms of gene therapy.

The results, being announced Friday, could lead to safer ways to treat certain forms of cancer in AIDS victims, said the study's authors, University of California at San Francisco Drs. Michael McGrath and Bruce Shiramizu.

This is the first direct evidence that we have a human virus causing cancer through some mechanism — not just indirectly by immunosuppression, McGrath said.

Cancers, including lymphoma and kaposi's sarcoma, have long been associated with AIDS. But most researchers have thought the cancers were opportunistic, taking advantage of AIDS' weakening of the immune system rather than being caused by the virus itself.

The study, however, found that when the AIDS virus inserted its genetic material into a cell's DNA it apparently switched on a nearby cancer-causing gene, starting up a less common variety of lymphoma called non-B-cell lymphoma.

The scientists spent two years reviewing 30 lymphoma cases, and found four in which the AIDS virus inserted itself into the same spot in a cell's DNA. McGrath said the researchers now have additional examples, and estimated that up to a third of non-B-cell lymphomas in AIDS patients show similar results.

The study is to be published April 15 in Cancer Research, the journal of the American Association for Cancer Research.

Dr. William A. Blattner, chief of the viral epidemiology branch of the National Cancer Institute, hailed the finding as an important step in understanding how a retrovirus, the class of virus that includes the AIDS virus, can cause cancer.

"This has been seen in animal retrovirus, but it's the first example of an insertional retroviral situation in man," he said.

Mitchell no sure bet for Court

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press

WASHINGTON – White House officials tried to slow mounting speculation Thursday that retiring Senate Majority Leader GeorgeMitchell would be President Clinton's choice for the Supreme Court.

"We've not focused solely on Mitchell," senior White House adviser Bruce Lindsey said. "It's unfair to Senator Mitchell and everyone else to write the others off."

Mitchell, a respected political leader and consensus builder, clearly remained a front-runner, though.

White House press secretary Dee Dee Myers said the possibility that he might become the nominee would not undermine his role as the administration's point man in the Senate on health care reform.

"If anything, it enhances his stature," Myers said. Lindsey said he did not intend "to take anything away from Senator Mitchell. He'd make a very good justice. But other people are being considered."

Other potential candidates are believed to include federal judges Stephen G. Breyer of Boston, Jose A. Cabranes of Connecticut, Appeals Judge Richard Arnold of Little Rock, Ark., Attorney General Janet Reno and Solicitor General Drew Days.

Friday night has the potential to be different. If UMass Chief of Police John Luippold approves, the winner of a battle of the DJs Friday night will keep the party going into the next morning. "This is the first time in a long time for Friday night entertainment," says SWAG president Kacey Gillen, because of the security required. No alcohol is allowed, and about 40 students have been enlisted to provide security that doesn't require the police.

More students can still serve as security, and the week is open to students in other ways. Vendor tables for early activities are available to all students who have an art or craft they want to sell. The cost is $10 for students to rent a table for the week. Local businesses will be there also, and they can rent tables for $25. Interested parties can call SWAG at 545–4960.

The only charges will be for vendors' items, that will be sold all week, and the barbecue, where hamburgers will cost about $1.

In case of rain or inclement weather, a hall has been booked, and as many of the activities as possible will continue indoors.

Come Meet Brent Staples On Monday, April 11
He will autograph Parallel Time here 3:30 p.m.-5 p.m.
He will also read at Converse Hall, Amherst College at 7:30 p.m.

Parallel Time is an evocative memoir that poses universal questions. Where does the family end and the self begin? What do we owe our families, and what do we owe our dreams for ourselves? What part of the past is a gift and what part a shackle? For Brent Staples there is the added dimension of race: moving from a black world into one largely defined by whites.
The oldest son among nine children, Brent grew up in a small industrial town near Philadelphia. First a scholarship to a local college and then one for graduate study at the University of Chicago pulled him out of the close family circle. While he was away, the industries that supported the town failed, and drug dealing rushed in to fill the economic void.
News of arrests and premature deaths among Brent's childhood friends underscored the precariousness of his perch in a world of mostly white achievers. A younger brother became a cocaine dealer and was murdered by one of his "clients." His death propelled Brent into a reconsideration of his childhood and coming of age that offers vivid portraits of family and place, of values that supported and pressures that tore apart, of the appeal and pain of entering a predominantly white world, and of the strengths and vulnerabilities of the black world he grew away from.
Brent Staples received a Ph.D. in psychology from the University of Chicago. Currently a member of the editorial board of the New York Times, he has been an assistant metropolitan editor of the Times, an editor of the New York Times Book Review, and a reporter for the Chicago Sun-Times.

"And one more thing about tomorrow's company picnic: Do I have to mention what happened last year when some moron sabotaged the games with a case of acid-filled LD-50s?"

Your Horoscope
By Joane Dixon

ARIES (March 21–April 19): A more daring approach is needed. Step out in style! Pay attention you get with the wear spirits and open career doors at the same time. Do not let a complainer get you down.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): Loosen up your appearance and you will get that coveted job or appointment. Dress as an expert about collecting, cutting or styling your hair. A new look could be just the confidence-builder you need.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): Nothing is more valuable now than the suggestion you receive from a partner or child now. Guaranteed may be costly but essential to future growth. Take heart! You have the will to win.

CANCER (June 21–July 22): You may see or make changes in a current set agreement. Clarifying your goals about steps you and others decide if they suit everyone involved. Aim for stability in love and financial matters.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): Maintaining a positive attitude is the key to a happier home life. Joyful words and thoughtful actions will help. Don't allow frustration or a health skeptic have it advised.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): A real estate deal exceeds your expectations. Your optimism wears others to joint ownership matters. An important project will get a huge boost.

LIBRA (Sept. 24–Oct. 22): An educational opportunity comes from out of nowhere. Most likely, a legal matter will be decided in your favor. If not, you should still count your blessings.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): Today is no time to take out on a tangent at work. Good financial news comes your way. Go out and make the most efforts! Modeling careers are favored, but you need the right connections.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): Your past accomplishments bring new rewards this month. Doors open in response to your efforts. Groom yourself to play a high-profile role at a social event.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): Your personal life must come first today. It's a major shift in mood of you. Drink more. Travel may be the order of the day and changes are welcome. Be open to romance.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18): You may need help to get what you want. Build better ties to those around you. A major business opportunity could arise. Avoid letting money run through now. Be careful not to make a bet.

PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20): The fastest way to the top is to follow all the rules. Be courteous but thorough. A surprising revelation could turn your personal life upside down.

This season, however, the rejuvenated Minuteman pitching staff is very young, with only one senior in the starting rotation. He is right hander Pete Ferrari; so far this season, Ferrari has pitched two complete games, picking up one win.

After Murphy and Ferrari, two freshmen have picked up the slack. Right hander Jason Bennett recorded the last victory for the club, a seven-hit gem against Providence. Amherst native Chad Sullivan has started three games for Massachusetts.

In the bullpen, freshman Chad Paronto has sparkled, compiling a 1-0 record while sporting the second-lowest ERA in the Atlantic 10, a minute 1.62.

The Minutemen have won two conference games in a row heading into this weekend's three–game series with St. Joseph's at Lorden Field (doubleheader, beginning Saturday at noon, and the series finale on Sunday at noon).

Results from last night's game at Holy Cross were not available before press time.

Collegian staff member and Lorden Field public address announcer Michael Reiss contributed to this article.

throne. Trouble here is the teams will beat each other up just to get to the Finals.

The Sonics need Ricky Pierce healthy. This is another team which still hasn't blended in all its first year talent. The first round is no problem, but who takes the big shots as Seattle advances on?

San Antonio and Houston both have great inside power, but more importantly, volatile superstars. Dennis Rodman is the only person with a worse haircut than my roommate. Vernon Maxwell could shoot the Rockets into the Western conference finals.

Phoenix looks right now to be the fourth seed with a match-up against Utah, the Cleveland of the West. The Suns can rip through the playoffs if everyone is healthy. Experts love Seattle, but a Suns–Sonics clash in the second round would be interesting.

The Jazz have seen better days as has Portland. It's time to rebuild these eternal playoff disappointments. If you take away every team's top three players, Utah has less talent than all except Boston and Dallas.

David Robinson and Hakeem Olajuwon are battling for the scoring title as they push to get their teams the midwest division crown. My vote for MVP goes to whoever finishes on top, but Pippen is still the best individual player.

One last note for all you underclassmen who declared for the draft: big mistake, go back to school, unless your name is Kidd or Robinson it's tougher to play with the big boys than you think. Staying an extra two years in college could add seven or eight to your NBA career.

Braud aiming for the NCAA Nationals

ADAM CUMBAN/ COLLEGIAN

Jason Braud of the men's gymnastics team is vying for a spot in the Nationals this weekend.

By DAVID GLEESON
Collegian Staff

This year's men's gymnastics team will say goodbye to one of their biggest contributors when lone graduating senior Jason Braud ends his collegiate gymnastics career.

Before he departs, however, Braud has one more chance to add another highlight to his already successful four-year stint as a Minuteman gymnast.

Braud has qualified for the third straight year to compete in the National Eastern Regional competition.

At the meet this weekend at West Point, he is competing for a spot among the top three individual finishers in vaulting and floor exercise. The top three finishers in each event will move on to the next level, NCAA Nationals.

Among other achievements, Braud holds the school record for floor exercise with a 9.85 and has tied the record on vaulting. In his junior year, he was the first place finisher at the EIGLs and a second place finisher when he returned to the competition this year.

Braud also made it to the national finals meet in his junior year and ended the season ranked 16th in the nation.

In the national spotlight once again this year, Braud is ranked 12th in the nation in floor exercise and 14th in the nation in vaulting going into NCAA competition.

Minuteman Coach Roy Johnson spoke highly of Braud, noting his relentless work ethic, leadership and his steady improvement through his years as a gymnast.

"He fit into our program right away on vaulting and floor and as he continued to improve on the other ones he's really made a big impact on rings and pommel horse," said Johnson.

Braud said that making Nationals and winning EIGLs were his most memorable accomplishments as a gymnast at UMass. In 1993, Braud became the first Minuteman gymnast to win an event in 16 years and the first ever to win floor exercise.

"That was a great feeling," said Braud. "I was the first UMass gymnast to win an event at EIGLs under Roy's coaching, and the first ever to win floor."

Floor exercise has long been a specialty for Braud, earning his way onto the team for his exceptional floor and vaulting skills.

"Floor is by far my favorite event," said Braud. "I can just play on that floor. It's like a playground because I can do almost anything."

Success did not come easily for Braud, however; it's something he has worked on and pushed for throughout his brief nine years as a gymnast. Many gymnasts work at their sport for upwards of 15 years to accomplish the things that Braud has been able to do.

"I came in as a walk-on," said Braud. "I didn't get a scholarship until my junior year. I'm paying for school by myself 100 percent. It's tough."

With all this and 20 hours of practice a week for the entire school year, it's no wonder Braud is the competitor and over-achiever he is. It's more than work to him though it's in his blood. When he graduates this May with an accounting degree, it won't be over for him, though.

"I'm going to miss [UMass]. I've had a lot of great memories here," said Braud. "I'm not giving it up though, I'm doing the Bay State games this summer. I can't give it up, it's just too much fun."

Minutemen benefitting from new blood

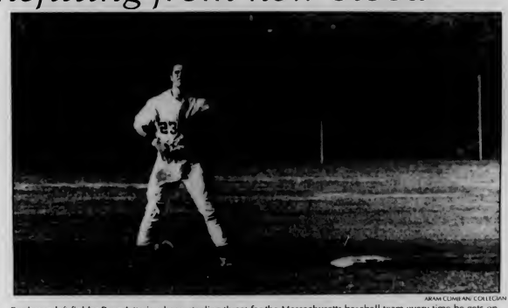
By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR.
Collegian Staff

Good, clean baseball for the University of Massachusetts — a glaring difference between this year's Minuteman squad, which has won five out of its last eight games, and the 1993 team, which was on the losing end throughout most of the season.

Earl Lorden Field was a tough place to sit and watch a baseball game last season; the Minutemen never got it together: offensively, defensively or with their pitching staff.

Massachusetts didn't manufacture runs, relying on the home run and the big inning to blow opponents out. The first inning of UMass' home opener against Providence on Tuesday gave strong indications these Minutemen were different.

Freshman left fielder Ryan Jette, this season's lead-off hitter, walked and stole second base, moving into scoring position. After third baseman Brad Gorrie, another freshman, struck out, designated hitter Justin Howard lifted a fly ball to shallow center; Jette tagged up, beat the throw and slid into third.



Ex-first baseman and now starting right fielder Bill Knight drew a walk and set the stage for junior co-captain Greg LaRocca; the shortstop promptly lined a chalk-raising double down the left field line, plating Jette and giving Massachusetts a 1-0 lead. But that wasn't all.

With sophomore second baseman Mark Pileski at the plate, Friar pitcher James O'Brien uncorked a wild-pitch, allowing Knight to trot home for Massachusetts' second run.

Two runs, one hit, two walks, a stolen base and a sacrifice fly — manufacturing runs. After one time through the batting order, the Minutemen had only three official at-bats, factoring in walks and sacrifices.

• • • •

New blood. Three freshmen have cracked the Massachusetts starting line-up, it would be four, yet Ryan Thistle and Gorrie play the same position: the hot corner. Jette is a fixture in left for the Minutemen and Nate Murphy has supplanted sophomore Nelson Ubaldo in centerfield.

Gorrie has been among the team's leaders in batting all season and has only committed one error so far. Jette jumpstarted the Massachusetts offense in its last victory and is a proven base-stealing threat. Murphy has provided sound hitting in the number nine spot, pulling off two sac bunts against the Friars; what's even more impressive is that he's seeing time ahead of Ubaldo, who hit .359 in Florida.

• • • •

Some people joked about the Massachusetts pitching staff last season by creating a slogan for it, resembling that of old Milwaukee Brave staffs: Toothaker, Telgheder or Pray For The Rainmaker. Seniors Jeff Toothaker and Jim Telegheder were pre-season favorites to anchor the 1993 staff, yet only Toothaker emerged as a solid ace.

The Minutemen struggled to find any consistency, and when they did, from hurlers like right hander Jay Murphy (this year's ace), the offensive support wasn't

UM hosts A-10 rivals

By TED KOTTLER
Collegian Staff

The softball doubleheader slated for Thursday between the University of Massachusetts and the University of Connecticut was cancelled due to Totman Field's unplayable conditions. The contests were not re-scheduled, but the two games that were to be played in Storrs, Conn., on April 21 will be shifted to Amherst.

The Minutewomen (5-8) will next see action this weekend, as they open their Atlantic 10 campaign with a twin bill versus St. Joseph's on Saturday and another against Temple Sunday. Saturday's first pitch is at 1 p.m., Sunday's at noon.

"I know St. Joseph's from last year, and they didn't lose much," UMass Coach Elaine Sortino said. "They're a scrappy, in-your-face team with great pitching."

UMass will have had a three-day layoff since the Hawks were here last. No, not the St. Joseph's Hawks, but the identically-monikered entry from Hartford, which the Minutewomen double-bageled on Tuesday, 5-0, 5-0. Sortino views the extra rest as a mixed blessing.

"The last thing we need to do is rest," Sortino said. "We need to play. But I obviously don't want Rachel [Lawson, who is suffering from a herniated disc] running around in the cold any more than she has to."

"This is a huge weekend for us," Sortino said. "We're up against two of the top teams in our league."

UMass has had its troubles scoring runs this year — scoring only 36 in 13 games while allowing 65. It won't be any easier facing St. Joe's, but Sortino is not concerned.

"I don't think I need to jump start this offense," Sortino said. "I feel I have a pretty solid lineup from one through nine."

That notion is reflected in a batting average comparison, as UMass trails its opponents by only 15 points (.259-.243).

When one considers the level of competition UMass has entertained in the early season, that is not a wide disparity.

Pitching, conversely, has been a real strong suit for UMass. The team ERA stands at 2.36, as UMass has allowed more unearned runs (35) than earned (30). Kelly Daut is largely responsible for this stingy statistic (1.58 ERA in 66.3 IP), but freshman Dani Ortega did her part Tuesday, blanking Hartford in the second tilt for her first career win.

"[Ortega's] the most advanced we've had as a freshman," Sortino said. "She got hit pretty hard down in Florida, but look who we threw her against."

Scouting the NBA playoffs

Anthony Gable's Notes from the Hardwood

The Boston Celtics, Los Angeles Lakers, Detroit Pistons and Charlotte Hornets will not make the playoffs.

It feels good to be able to say that. It's lottery time for three teams that dominated the sport in the 80s and one that was supposed to dominate the 90s.

Well, Commissioner David Stern wanted the NBA to work in cycles and he's got it.

Everyone and his brother picked the Hornets to shine this year. Allen Bristow most definitely will not be back as coach next year; Bristow is to coaching as Michael Jordan is to baseball.

Larry Johnson may just go down as the worst contract signing in NBA history. No more help from the lottery as Philadelphia holds Charlotte's first round draft pick from the Hersey Hawkins trade.

Now to the teams that really matter, starting in the East:

Pat Riley has done the smart thing with the New York Knicks and limited Greg Anthony's playing time and eliminated Charles Smith from the rotation. The Knicks still will have trouble scoring points in their halfcourt offense in the playoffs.

The rest of the East doesn't have a legitimate threat to NY. In fact, you might even throw teams 2-8 in a hat and have a good chance of picking the winners come playoff time.

Atlanta may be a prime upset victim in the first round of the playoffs. The crowds at the Omni in Atlanta have been sparse (somehow the Hawks are an amazing 31-5 at home in front of 4,000 empty seats) and the Hawks haven't adjusted to new teammate Danny Manning. Manning has seen too many of his no-look passes bounce off the chests of unsuspecting teammates.

Chicago has the best crowds in basketball, but it doesn't appear like Scottie Pippen can carry this team very far by himself. Horace Grant dreams of signing a huge contract far away from Chicago. A first round upset is unlikely with the home court edge at the venerable Chicago Stadium in its final season of operation.

Cleveland never does a thing in the playoffs and Orlando is still missing a few parts. The Cavs may win their first round series, only to be swept in the second like last year. The Magic did the smart move for the long term by giving Anfernee Hardaway the starting point guard spot.

For the short term, heady Scott Skiles could take Orlando further, but Penny is the future. I don't know what's worse — Shaquille O'Neal's rap debut, Shaq Diesel, or the fact that Jeff Turner and Anthony Avent are the team's power forwards. What a first round thriller Cleveland-Orlando will be.

New Jersey and Miami are both sleepers for the first round. Atlanta beware, the Nets match up real well with your Hawks. Neither team has a center nor a deep bench; Kenny Anderson is one of few point guards ex-teammate Mookie Blaylock can't smother defensively.

Now to the West:

Seattle looks to have it all together again, but there are no less than four solid contenders to the Western

Men's lacrosse hosts Yale on The Hill

By ANDREW BRYCE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team will get its first dose of ivy of the season tomorrow afternoon as its hosts Yale University at Richard F. Garber in a 1 p.m contest.

The No. 12 Gorillas (3-2) are coming off an 18-2 blowout against Providence College on the cold, rainy Wednesday at The Hill. The 8-1 first quarter lead initiated the explosive offensive attack, led by freshman Brendan Glass' four goals and one assist. Seniors Wes Depp and Greg Kline added to the scoring output, with Depp scoring three goals and an assist and Kline chipping in with two goals and two assists.

"The big thing we wanted to do was to play well-disciplined, fundamental lacrosse," said Coach Ted Garber. "I've been here before when [playing against a weaker opponent] turned into 'personal stat' day. It wasn't like that. They were getting the open man, playing team lacrosse. I thought maybe we should have had 30 goals, we had so many scoring opportunities."

The Yale Bulldogs (3-4) have lost their last two games. their opponents? No. 1 Princeton and No. 13 Brown. On April 2, the fell to the Tigers 11-8. On Wednesday, Brown managed only five goals against their defense in the 5-4 loss.

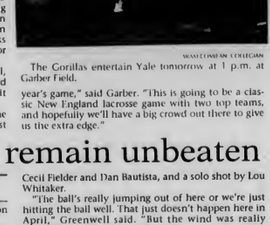
Judging by the final scores, it is obvious that the Yale can play some defense. Senior goaltender Rich Dressler leads the Bulldog defensive corps, along with senior All-America candidate defenseman Dan DeTolla.

"They're a strong team, they got a real strong defense," said Garber. "[Dressler] is probably an All-American, and DeTolla is probably one of the top five or six defensemen in the country."

The scores also show Yale's offensive shortage, as well. The only game the Bulldogs have scored over 10 goals was the season opener against Delaware (14-5).

Yale Coach Mike Waldvogel sees the Bulldogs beginning for prominence in New England lacrosse.

"New England used to be a two-horse race, with UMass and Brown," said Waldvogel. "Some of us are pushing. We're not taking over just yet, but we're pushing them."



The Gorillas' offense has been effective so far this season. Glass leads the team in scoring with 15 points (also team leading 13 goals), with Depp's 14 points (10 goals) and Kline's 12 points (team-leading 5 assists) close behind.

The Massachusetts defense has been strong. Seniors Ken Randazzo and Chris Nentwich head the unit, with junior Tom LoPresti standing out in goal.

If the Massachusetts-Yale game repeats its 1993 contest, the fans on The Hill are in for an exciting game. Last year, the No. 15 Gorillas scored seven goals in the final quarter to defeat No. 16 Yale in what turned out to be one of the biggest comebacks in UMass sports history. What's one positive note for the Bulldogs as they head here to Amherst?

"Well, [Mark] Millon's gone," quipped Waldvogel, referring to the former All-American who scored seven goals and three assists against the Bulldogs. "It was a great comeback."

"I don't think that Coach Waldvogel has to tell the guys much except to show them the videotape of last year's game," said Garber. "This is going to be a classic New England lacrosse game with two top teams, and hopefully we'll have a big crowd out there to give us the extra edge."

Red Sox sweep, remain unbeaten

By HOWARD ULMAN
Associated Press

BOSTON — Strange winds have lifted the Boston Red Sox hitters to an unusually strong start.

They had seven extra-base hits Thursday, including homers by Mike Greenwell, Andre Dawson and Tim Naehring, as they beat the Detroit Tigers 9-6 for a sweep of their season-opening, three-game series.

"This is really different than anything I've seen at this point in the season at Fenway," Detroit manager Sparky Anderson said. "The wind usually blows in, but now it's blowing out."

Of Boston's 30 hits in the series, 16 were for extra bases as the Red Sox opened the season 3-0 for the second straight year. Detroit started at 1-2 last season.

Detroit also had three homers: two-run drives by Cecil Fielder and Dan Bautista, and a solo shot by Lou Whitaker.

"The ball's really jumping out of here or we're just hitting the ball well. That just doesn't happen here in April," Greenwell said. "But the wind was really friendly to use these three games."

"The ball was heading out on a jetstream," Boston manager Butch Hobson said. "Of course, we were hitting the ball well." Of course, the Tigers had the third-worst ERA in the American League last season, and Anderson said "don't expect miracles" with their pitching.

Greenwell had a triple and his second homer of the year, Dawson hit a two-run homer and drove in another run with a bases-loaded walk, and Naehring's three-run drive made it 9-4 in the seventh. "Any time you get off to a good start it's good for the ballclub because it gets your confidence going," Boston starter Danny Darwin said.

Say What?

"I thought the 13th and 14th runs we scored were big runs. They had the momentum coming back to 12-6."

– New York Yankees manager Buck Showalter after his team beat Texas 18-6.

U.S. planes participate in Bosnian bombing

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Two U.S. F-16 fighter jets bombed targets near the besieged Muslim enclave of Gorazde on Sunday after Bosnian Serb forces overran government defenses to reach the outskirts of the town.

It was the first NATO attack on ground positions in its 44-year history. In February, NATO jets downed four Serb planes violating a "no fly zone" over Bosnia, which has been convulsed by civil war since seceding from Yugoslavia two years ago.

NATO headquarters in Naples, Italy, said the planes were U.S. F-16Cs based in Aviano, Italy, and said the attack was requested by U.N. peacekeepers in Gorazde because of the Serb advance.

"The United Nations made it absolutely clear that there were U.N. personnel in Gorazde, that an attack on the town would be interpreted as a clear violation of the rules," President Clinton told reporters in Washington.

"We said we would act if we were requested to do so. We have now done so and will do so again if we are requested."

Soldiers kill patients in Rwandan hospitals

KIGALI, Rwanda (AP) — Fires burned on the outskirts of the devastated capital of Rwanda and hundreds looted aid warehouses as fighting abated Sunday after three days of savagery. At a hospital in Kigali, doctors claimed, soldiers slaughtered at least 100 patients in their beds.

Relief officials estimate as many as 10,000 people have been killed in Kigali alone. The fighting — the result of a decades-old struggle between the Hutu and Tutsi ethnic groups — has forced hundreds of Europeans and Americans to flee the country, many for neighboring Burundi.

Foreigners were leaving by air from Kigali airport or by convoy to Bujumbura, Burundi's capital.

President Clinton said Sunday in Washington that "the last of the convoys containing all Americans who wish to leave has either passed into Burundi or is about to pass into Burundi." About 250 Americans, mostly missionaries and aid workers, were in Rwanda.

In Kigali, Eric Bertin, a coordinator for the French Doctors Without Borders, said when he and colleagues arrived at a hospital Sunday, they found patients they had treated the day before had been killed by soldiers overnight.

Man beats up woman in Barney costume

WORCESTER (AP) — Egged on by a $10 bet, a college student jumped from a car, shouted obscenities and assaulted a woman dressed as Barney the dinosaur, police said.

"I said, 'Why are you doing this to me?'" said Deborah McRoy, who was dressed as Barney to celebrate the opening of a drug store. "And he said, 'Because we ... hate Barney.'"

McRoy told the Telegram & Gazette that her attacker tackled her Friday and hit her in the face after her mask fell off.

"We had a lot of witnesses," she said. "One little boy said, 'I'm going home to get my gun, Barney, and I'm going to shoot him.'"

McRoy was treated at the Medical Center of Central Massachusetts-Memorial and released, but said she returned Saturday after suffering severe headaches and vomiting.

Doctors told her she had a neck injury that would take up to six weeks to heal, she said.

Derrick McMahan, a Worcester State College student, was charged with assault and battery. Police said his roommate, David Murdoch, was in the car and bet McMahan he didn't have the nerve to bash Barney. Murdoch was not charged.

Hillel commemoration pulls on heart strings

Alan Weinfeld lights the first of six Holocaust memorial candles during a Hillel service held last Friday in the Cape Cod Lounge.

University of Massachusetts Amherst Hillel sponsored an all-campus Holocaust Commemoration Service last Friday, at 12:30 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge.

Friday was Yom HaShoah, the actual Holocaust Remembrance Day.

The chairperson of Holocaust Memorial Week Planning Committee, Lori Rapaport, welcomed approximately 40 people to the Commemoration.

She quoted survivor Sam Natansohn remembering those he lost, "they were good people and bad people, but they were all people, and none of them deserved to die." Rapaport also said, "at this point it is too late to help these people, but it is our duty to remember what was done to them."

Six people lit Yartzeit (memorial) candles and read commemorative poems or prayers.

The first speaker, Alan Weinfeld began, "As we light these candles, we commit ourselves to responsibility for one another, to build on this Earth a world that has no room for hatred, no place for violence. Together, we pray for the strength to fulfill this vocation." The poem he read reflected on the lights of the candles and the six million Jewish souls extinguished.

Nurit Ben-Horav read the poem We Are Witnesses, based on Vow by Abraham Shlonsky. The poem promises to "forget not one single thing / not forget to the last generation / lest we ignore / threats to our people / and all human degradation, / or we've learned nothing, / nothing at all."

Holocaust Memorial Week

O The Chimneys, by Nobel Prize winner Nelly Sachs, was read by Alvit Imbal. The poem illustrated the death camps as "ingeniously devised habituations of death / When Israel's body drifted as smoke / Through the air."

The fourth poem, American Liberators, by an anonymous writer, was read by Felice Marcus. It reflected on the loss of the human lives destroyed in the crematoriums.

The poem by German pastor Martin Niemoeller, who spent eight and a half years in a concentration camp, was read by Elena Epstein. Niemoeller spoke of the subjugation of Communists, Socialists, Trade Unionists and Jews, and says, "Then they came for me / and there was no one left / to speak out for me."

The last candle was lit by student Jessica Lopatin, who read a prayer that asked for God to remember those who perished and "hold them in Your heart, that they will find their peace with You."

Scott Kaplan lead the Commemoration in the song Eili Eili accompanied by an acoustic guitar.

Weinfeld then addressed the room, recounting how touched he was recently with a visit to Israel's Holocaust Museum, Yad Vashem.

He said he saw medical experiments, teeth and hair of victims and "It scares me terribly because the Holocaust happened as a result of deep hatred towards Jews taken to the worst possible extent, while the world stood silent."

Weinfeld emphasized education and action against hatred and bigotry towards all people.

Holocaust truths told by survivors

CHRISTOPHER RAGUSA/ COLLEGIAN

Holocaust survivor Sam Natansohn speaks of the struggle he and his wife went through in World War II.

Claims made by Holocaust Revisionists that deny the existence of the Holocaust are the reasons survivors must tell their stories, according to husband and wife survivors Sam and Sidi Natansohn. The Natonsohns spoke before an audience of approximately 125 people last Thursday night in the Campus Center.

Sam Natansohn, born 200 miles from the German border in southern Poland, came under Nazi occupation in Sept. 1939 at the age of 10. Resistance efforts ended after 24 hours, and a German SS Unit took over his small town.

It was then that Natansohn's life changed forever. Jews were no longer allowed to own businesses, attend school or walk in the streets or sidewalk. They were forced to walk in the gutter and any attempt to practice their religion was "punishable under death."

Holocaust Memorial Week

Natansohn said this was still not enough for the Germans who then forced the 12,000 Jews in the area to live in a small ghetto. Food was provided only by those Jews allowed to leave the ghetto to work for the Germans and children who, during the night, would jumo the fence surrounding the ghetto to go into the fields looking for potatoes.

Thirty to 40 people died every day due to the squalid living conditions. "Starvation and disease was rampant," Natansohn said.

"This was still not enough," he said. By the spring of 1942, the Germans decided to "exterminate the entire Jewish population of Europe."

Germans armed with dogs, whips and machine guns allowed only those with work permits and their immediate families to go to a forced labor camp. The others were deported in cattle cars to an extermination camp after being forced to march to the railroad station.

"Those that could not maintain the pace were shot," said Natansohn. The road was "littered with bodies. It was one of the most gruesome things I have ever seen."

At the age of 13, Natansohn was sent to a German labor camp where his father was shot and killed. Natansohn was separated from his mother and forced into slave labor, laying down railroad tracks by hand. Prisoners had to give up all of their possessions and were given a single set of clothing and a small amount of food every day. By November 1943, only 150 people from Natansohn's community remained.

Natansohn and a few other prisoners were able to escape from the labor camp and hide in the cellar of a Christian Polish woman. Natansohn lived in darkness and with little food for four months until the German authorities informed the woman that they would be taking over the building for military purposes. The stowaways were moved to the cellar of the woman's sister until July 1944, when they were liberated by the Soviet army.

After his liberation, Natansohn tried to contact the family and friends he was separated from during the war. He found no one remaining.

"I don't have anybody I played with as a child around. They may be faceless to you but to me they were people with hopes, with aspirations. They did nothing to deserve this," said Natansohn.

Sidi Natansohn suffered a different experience than her husband. Born in Hungary, a German ally, Jews were not U.S. government misconduct responsible for a Native American political leader's life sentence of imprisonment for a crime he allegedly did not commit was a key topic of conversation at the day-long Native American Awareness Social yesterday.

In between drum circle sets pounding through the walls of the Student Union Ballroom, there were guest speakers presented who spoke of issues presently at hand within the Native American community.

"We figured we'd put on an event and keep the campus aware of our issues," President of the Native American Student Association Cameron Cuch said.

Spokesperson for the traditional Innu of Quebec Gilbert Pilot spoke about the issue of Hydro-Quebec.

The Hydro-Quebec group is attempting to battle the rejection of the Innu people to allow them to build a series of dams on the river that is traditionally Innu territory and legally under their ownership, the Innu Support Committee said.

Abortion conference at Hampshire College

By VANESSA AMIN
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: This is the first in a two-part series about this weekend's abortion rights conference.

Students and community activists from all over the world joined together to inform and motivate the Massachusetts community on the importance of reproductive rights for all women in The Fight for Abortion Rights and Reproduction Freedom at Hampshire College last weekend.

The eighth annual conference consisted of speakers, speak-outs and workshops on various reproductive rights issues including self-help and empowerment, discrimination, racism, women and violence, population control and organizing for lesbian liberation.

According to Marlene Fried, the director of the Civil Liberties and Public Policy Program and the director of the event, this conference is important for younger activists, who have just come into the women's movement, to learn from the older actvist experiences.

"Reproductive freedom is so important for me as a mother and as an activist," Fried said. "No one has a right to control my life and sexuality."

Abortion is a little piece of a set of bigger issues like freedom from violence, Fried said. Taking away a woman's right for reproductive freedom is the same as "sterilizing" her, she said.

"People need to trust women to make the best decisions for their lives," Fried said. "No choice, no trust."

One of the workshops called self-help and empowerment was

SEATTLE — As lead singer for the groundbreaking grunge rock band Nirvana, Kurt Cobain became the spokesman for a troubled generation even as his own troubles overwhelmed him.

■ Singer will be remembered for expressions of pain and angst, page 5.

He died at age 27, an apparent suicide.

Cobain, who spent several days in a Rome hospital last month after falling into a drug-induced coma, was found dead Friday morning of an apparently self-inflicted shotgun blast to the head. The shotgun lay across Cobain's body on the floor of an apartment above the detached garage of his Seattle home. A one-page note written in red ink lay nearby.

Investigators would not divulge the contents of the note, but, citing an unidentified source, The Seattle Post-Intelligencer said Cobain wrote that he loved his

A child of Holocaust survivors, Tom Bales, related the story of realizing his mother's pain and burden in seeing her parents taken to death camps.

Bales then shifted the focus to the genocide and ethnic cleansing in Bosnia, pointing out that April 8 marked the second anniversary of the siege of Sarajevo.

Rabbi Saul Perlmutter lead a traditional Jewish prayer for the dead, called the Kaddish. He said, "This prayer is not a funeral hymn, but an affirmation of God's everlasting Presence and dominion, praising God's existence and creative love."

Perlmutter asked everyone to remember the generation the Holocaust affected; "the generation that perished," the generation that survived, the present generation who lives "in the shadow of the Holocaust," and lastly, the future generations.

He said it is important to "celebrate who we are... not in spite of those who may try to destroy us, but because we love so much who we are."

Scott Kaplan closed the commemoration with a traditional Chanukah song, Light One Candle.

At 7 p.m., in the Hillel House, there was a Shabbat Service with the theme of honoring those who were murdered in the Holocaust.

about how to deal with stress, low self-esteem, and oppression. According to Chris Leonard, the self-help workshop facilitator, opening up and sharing experiences to a friend or family member is so important in dealing with the stresses of life. "For many years, I felt ashamed and isolated because I was raped," Leonard said. "But after sharing my feelings and experiences with someone, the isolation slowly went away."

Sometimes, one tends to forget about oneself in order to help other people, Leonard said. Each day, take time to think about yourself and relax or meditate, she said.

"We don't have to do everything, even though society says we do," Leonard said. "It's hard, but I try to set limits and boundaries so I don't forget to think about myself."

According to Clare Lewis, a volunteer for the Civil Liberties Program and a reproductive/politics major at Hampshire College, the decision to have an abortion or not should be up to women, not society. The decision is very hard and could be detrimental, she said, however, if one has the right support, an abortion decision may become easier.

"Having an abortion is a choice and a simple right," Lewis said.

Couple adopts children despite language barrier

By JOHN CURRAN
Associated Press

BROOKLINE, Mass. — Discouraged by infertility and desperate to adopt, Carol and Justin Kuo got a telephone call one day that changed seven lives.

Their adoption agency had a question for the childless couple: Would they consider adopting five Russian children? By the way, the youngsters don't speak English.

The Kuo's answer: Yes, yes, yes, yes, yes.

"We thought, 'There's more than one way to start a family,'" said Carol Kuo, 46, a teacher with two grown daughters from a previous marriage.

The couple's 100-year-old triple-decker underwent its own kind of Russian revolution as the Kuos rushed to make room for a rambunctious quintet of children ranging in age from 2 to 9. "We dashed around the house, childproofing, putting special covers on the stove's burner handles, locks on drawers. We built shelves in the kitchen to put dangerous things up high and bought a huge table to seat eight or nine," she said.

The Kuos guest room was refitted with bunk beds, toy dinosaurs, balloons and building block sets for the three boys. A second bedroom that had been used as a computer room was dismantled byte by byte, replaced by two beds and an old chest of drawers painted pink.

Toys have come cheaply. Neighbors and the town's large Russian community have flooded the home with puzzles, stuffed animals, balloons and other toys.

The couple paid $5,000 to authorities in Russia, $6,000 to an international adoption service, $3,000 for plane tickets and $200 per child for visas, said Carol Kuo.

On Easter Sunday, the Kuos returned from Russia with the new brood in tow. There's Yevgeny, 9, Yuri, 8, Anatoly, 6, Anna, 5, and Masha, 2.

They were welcomed by 30 family members and friends and two television news crews at Logan International Airport.

The couple has been showered with gifts, featured on television news programs and lauded by neighbors as humanitarian saviors. "We've been told by people in Russia that we saved five lives. That feels good. It's amazing to me that we've touched so many lives," Carol Kuo said.

The children had been placed in an orphanage in Taldom, a city of 50,000 located about 72 miles north of Moscow, in August. They had suffered about two years' of neglect and were taken away from their parents, who lost their factory jobs, Russian authorities told the couple. The Kuos visited the children in February and returned three weeks ago to take custody.

"It was for Carol and myself. We're astonished that everyone thinks it's such a wonderful thing," said Kuo.

strations going awry and Quebec Nationalist vigilantes eliciting violence, the committee said.

"Gilbert Pilot was inspirational," Cuch said. "He spoke of traditional people whose convictions come from the heart, coming together as one."

The Executive Director of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts Commission on Indian Affairs John "Slow Turtle" Peters spoke about the state seal and why Native Americans find it offensive.

Peters, the Supreme Medicine Man of the Wampanoags, believes that the sword above the head of the Indian encourages the acceptance of violence against Native Americans.

Peters suggests a revision of the seal, by changing the sword to a pine tree and putting a peace pipe in the hand of the Indian instead of a bow and arrow in an attempt to eliminate the stereotypical association between Indians and violence.

A spokesperson spoke on behalf of Native American political leader Leonard Peltier who has been in prison for 17 years and tried to motivate the audience to get involved in the Leonard Peltier Support Group's fight to free him.

Spokesperson Tim Redloon, who has been speaking for Peltier for about six years, said that Peltier is literally a "Native American political prisoner in the United States."

Peltier, charged with the murder of an FBI agent in the midst of a riot, was not given a fair trial that is guaranteed under the law, as a result of information being withheld from the defense due to government misconduct, Redloon said.

Flyers were handed out, refreshments were served and dancing to the Traditional Native American Full Circle Drum Society's rhythms took place periodically.

"This was a great event," UMass Alumni Kitty Truax said. "I'm surprised that more people didn't come; the issues that were covered are really important."

The Mushy Martian Space Patrol did not take kindly to young folks... That's why it was no surprise when little Max, Brad, and tiny tot Andrew were thrown in the Intergalactic Slime Pen. "Why is it always the good ones that suffer?" whined Andy. "Shaddup!" replied Maximillian and Brad. Andy ignored the older boys, as he scavenged another twist-tie. He had plans, BIG plans. He didn't plan on sticking around.

Getting too tough on crime

It is hard to be opposed to crime prevention. Crime, especially violent and youth crime, is at its highest rate in memory, and the government has recognized its duty to address the problem. As usual, though, the government spent very little time considering what leads people — nowadays, especially young people — to commit crimes, and has acted recklessly. It is very likely that by the end of this year, some variation on last fall's dangerous Senate crime bill will become law.

This Senate crime bill is the most regressive, authoritarian crime policy to be seriously considered in decades. This bill offers the following "solutions;" read them, and you may be surprised to find out that they were passed last November, 95–4, by the Senate of what is called the most free country in the world.

Could it be that the polarization between the wealthy and the rest of us foments racism and militarism in the inner cities? Who cares. Pull the switch and fry the kid.

Peter J. Orvetti

If adopted into law, the plan would allow states to execute prisoners for more than 50 crimes. At the same time, minimum sentences would be lengthened and made mandatory. Historically, mandatory sentences have been applied disproportionately to non–White prisoners.

$500 million would be used to establish prisons for juveniles, under the buzzword "secure facilities." States that choose to prosecute 13–year–old violent offenders as adults would be given federal bonuses, and all states would be forced to prosecute minors as adults for some federal offenses. It is entirely possible that a 13–year–old offender could ultimately be executed under the plan.

The plan would authorize the government to investigate anyone engaged in political activity, no matter how peaceful, if it was determined that they supported "terrorist" causes. A study of recent history shows that this term has been applied whenever necessary to allow the United States government to violate the First Amendment and the right to privacy. In fact, some Collegian columnists could be investigated; there have been pieces on this page about Palestinian rights and the Irish Republican Army.

Immigrants who have entered the United States lawfully would lose some government benefits, and schools and health care providers for these people would be forced to report on them to the Immigration and Naturalization Service, as part of a racist plank in the plan that has absolutely nothing to do with crime prevention.

The populist, rhetoric–borne "three–strike law" — endorsed by faux–liberal Massachusetts Gov. Bill Weld — will take effect. Anyone convicted of any of a list of about 40 crimes three times during her or his lifetime would be sentenced to prison for life. Some politicians have suggested making it a "two–strike law." Along with this, more "boot camp" prisons would be built, which employ abusive shock tactics to subdue prisoners. Recent studies of current boot camps programs show that they are ineffective.

And finally, anyone who tries to encouage someone to join a gang could be executed. This, like the lengthened sentences statute, is a racist, ignorant proposal that denies the cultural and economic reasons why young people join gangs and, instead, kills them for it.

But what else can we expect from the white–haired, white– skinned golf players who dominate this country's legislature? These savvy politicians know that no one really cares about why someone commits a crime, or wants to spend time reading reports about why violence is increasing in the cities. Could it be because this country has no economic future left for them, and that the little economy that does exist is increasingly polarized between the wealthy and the rest of us? Could it be that this division foments racism and militancy in the inner cities? Who cares. Pull the switch and fry the kid.

Some people are surprised that Bill Clinton signed on to this oppressive piece of citizen–control legislation. But they shouldn't be. During his presidential campaign, Clinton flew home to Arkansas to carry through the execution of a man who, after shooting a policeman 11 years before, shot himself in the head and had been a vegetable propped up in a chair ever since. Clinton was ambivalent about the execution, but he authorized it because it would win him votes. In a few months, he will have the choice whether or not to put pen to paper and sign the crime bill into law. What do you think his choice will be?

Women oppressed by media

I know that sometimes I can be a bit naive, but I truly never realized how oppressed women journalists are in our society. I have read a lot of material on this subject, but there is a big difference between casually reading studies and actually participating in a factual study and analysis. During the week of February 28 to March 4, 1994, I analyzed the differences in percentages between men and women journalists on the front, local and editorial/opinion pages in The Boston Globe.

Women need to have the opportunity to make decisions on who will write the stories and where the stories will be placed.

Vanessa Amin

My focus was on bylines, references in stories and photographs. What I found was very shocking. These are the percentages I came up with: 24.3 percent of bylines were women, 21.9 percent of references in stories were made to women, and 26.7 percent of photographs were of women. I could feel my dream of becoming a successful journalist come crashing down around me, all because of my gender.

In this analysis, I focused on how men are considered more newsworthy than women. The different topics covered by female versus male journalists are also quite telling. In addition, my analysis showed that women are seldom portrayed in photographs and in opinion pieces.

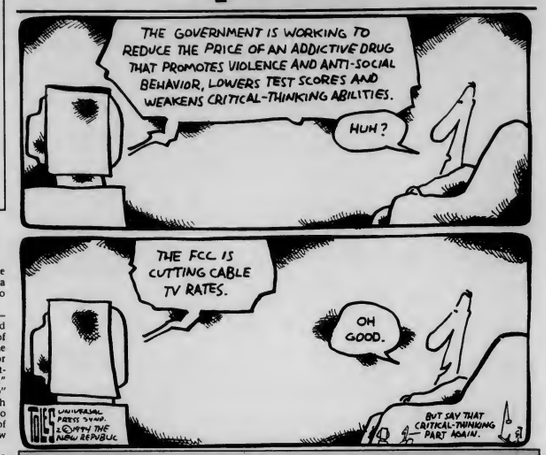
On Friday, March 4, there was not one story written by a woman journalist on the front page. Does this mean that no woman reporters wanted or could have covered a front page news story? No, it means they weren't given the opportunity. On this same day, there were only three references to a woman whose baby dying of leukemia. And while this mother was referred to three times, she wasn't quoted even once.

Also on the page, there were three photographs taken, all of men. Actually, one photograph pictured President Clinton, Sen. Dan Rostenkowski, and half of an unknown woman. If this day was the first time I ever picked up a newspaper, I would have thought that female reporters do not exist and that women aren't newsworthy.

The topics that were covered by woman journalists varied dramatically from those covered by male reporters. Front page woman reporters covered such topics as health concerns, education, foreign relations, some politics (if they were lucky) and "spot" news (stories about accidents and disasters; crime, cops and courts).

Male reporters, however, wrote 25 articles for the front pages which ranged in subject from politics, war, foreign affairs, crime, government and social issues such as welfare and the homeless. As a whole, national stories were covered by women and international stories were covered by men.

What really shocked me was the difference in the number of references to males versus females. The women who were quoted or referred to were secretaries, teachers, mothers of sick children, a director of a day care center, a daughter of a male who owns a restaurant, or victims of violence like Nancy Kerrigan.



There were actually two references to women which stood out, one was a lawyer, and the other was Attorney General Janet Reno. As far as coverage in The Boston Globe goes, women are still oppressed. There are either no woman experts or professionals in our society, or no one considered asking them questions. Do women in our society have opinions? I know all the women that I have encountered in my lifetime do. Let me first point out that all the managing editors on the Globe are men. There is one woman who is the graphics managing editor, but she doesn't have a say on what editorials get printed. This is the reason why women are under–represented on the editorial pages.

When a woman's column is printed, the topics are health concerns, expensive museums, parenthood, good schooling for their children, and only one piece, during the entire five days, was about politics.

In order to bring about change, I feel that woman journalists need to fight to get into those executive positions, thus breaking that glass ceiling. These women then would have the opportunity to make decisions on who will write the stories and where the stories will be placed. If men continue to hold high positions in the media, women will stay oppressed.

At first I was depressed, and I thought that I should find a new career. However, I have never let a man or society run my life, so I am going to be one of those women who fight their way to the top. Watch out glass ceiling, you are going to shatter!

WWII comparisons called inaccurate

To the editor:

In response to the article by Juan Jose Chacon Quiros ["The Holocausts closer to home," April 4], we would like the opportunity to point out some factual inaccuracies. Equating the Holocaust with other crimes, atrocities and difficult predicaments around the world is preposterous and offensive. Indeed, by doing so, Mr. Quiros in fact denigrates the very event he claims he wishes to commemorate.

Allow us to draw on the example of the former Yugoslavia. In the past few years, the ethnic cleansing in Bosnia has become inaccurately synonymous with the Holocaust. Terrible crimes are being committed, but it is in the context of a civil war, thus one must take into account that atrocities are being committed on all sides.

In addition, we do not see Serbs invading neighboring countries looking specifically for Bosnians to murder, as the Germans did to the Jews. Nevertheless, seeing the pain of Bosnians and being reminded of their own, the Jewish community has been at the forefront of alleviating the dire circumstances in the region.

Likewise, your equation of the Holocaust with the predicament of the Palestinians is also ludicrous. The analogy would be humorous if it were not so inaccurate and widely believed. The government of Israel is hardly engaging in a systematic murder of millions or even thousands, it is a state of war. A war with a people whose constant calls for a Jew–free Middle East is quite familiar to the ideology espoused by Mein Fuhrer.

The main point of this letter is this: the pain of the Jews is legitimate and unique, it should not be watered down because of other tragedies on the world scene. Likewise, one should base arguments on rational thoughts rather than vague, inaccurate ideologies as the author of the article has so successfully done.

There is only one Holocaust, and it happened to the Jews. The recognition of anything less would be an insult to the survivors of the horror of the second World War.

BOG detractors should check facts

To the editor:

The Campus Center/Student Union Board of Governors has been attacked unfairly by many who do not know what the facts are. The BOG has been perceived as an incompetent organization that does not care about the students who use the Campus Center/Student Union complex.

• The BOG makes tables available to Registered Student Organizations on the Campus Center concourse. This gives them the chance to communicate their services to the student body. Without the BOG, this could not happen.

• The BOG administers office space allocation and funding through the table vending program for the RSOs. It has had a good record in dealing with the RSOs and providing the necessary space for them. Without the BOG, the process of getting space in the CC/SU complex would be handled by the administration.

• The BOG is the organization that runs the Casino Night. this is not only an exciting event for the entire campus community to enjoy, it also provides a service for the Amherst community. The proceeds from this event will go to the Brain Tumor Society which conducts research for cancer, one of the biggest health problems in this country. Therefore, the BOG cares a lot about different kinds of people.

• Concerning the article in the April 7 edition of the Collegian ["Our chancellor's new hobby"] written by Tracy Monahan, the Collegian has not researched the facts. It was Building Services who allowed the Girl Scouts to sell the cookies for free in the past.

Last year, Alpha Phi Omega (which sponsors the table) was referred to the Board of Governors by Building Services. An exception was made to the current vending policy in order to allow them on for free but this year, because of a number of calls of the same nature from other groups, the Board decided to charge the correct amount of money for the designation under which these organizations would fall.

The problem is not that the BOG is a bad organization, it is that not enough people know about them. As far as I am concerned, the Board of Governors is the most underrated organization on campus.

Beauty is in the eye of the letter–writer

To the editor:

I am writing in response to a letter you printed on March 30 entitled, "New Durfee artwork 'ugly, meaningless.'" Being in a design program, I fully understand that beauty is in the eye of the beholder, so let me make it clear that I am not criticizing Libby Hubbard a/k/a Doctress Neutopia's beliefs but, rather, the date on which she arrived at them.

She is not alone; we have all passed the gardens and come to some individual conclusions — which is perfectly normal. But what the Doctress failed to do, and should feel embarrassed about, is wait for the project to be completed before voicing her beliefs. Just as no one would call a newly–erected building ugly because of the scaffolding which encases it, no one should condemn the artist — a title well–deserved in this case — for the unfinished design.

What most people fail to realize is that the landscape is a most dynamic media with which to design. Unlike a painting or building, the landscape is a living, growing entity. The newly planted trees which line the perimeter of Durfee Gardens are just saplings now, and if you want to hold that against the designer, that is your prerogative. But understand that those saplings will one day grow into magnificent trees.

What bothers me the most, though, is that you didn't even enter the garden. Your own words tell us this, reflecting your ignorance. If you had taken the time to actually walk through Durfee Gardens, you would have recognized that the pink street lights to which you refer are nothing of the sort, yet you speak as if you are an expert on landscape design? For goodness sake, inform yourself or look like a fool in a public forum.

I think, Doctress Neutopia, the fair thing for you to do would be to wait five years and reevaluate your premature assessment of Durfee Gardens. You might be surprised at just how many students are enjoying it.

Cobain's suicide illustrates the irony of success

Kurt Cobain

By BRIAN BABINEAU
Collegian Staff

No one seemed that surprised. Disturbingly, it almost made sense.

The more people I talked to as news of Kurt Cobain's suicide spread, the more I realized that any initial shock people felt was replaced by ideas that this was the way Kurt Cobain was meant to go. Why do we have such a haunted and pained picture of the talented musician?

It goes beyond the everyday clues that told us Cobain was in deep inner turmoil. Beyond the heroin addiction, the stomach illness, the anguish of songs like "Rape Me," "Drain You" and the unreleased "I Hate Myself and Want to Die." Cobain reeked of problems, and his face and voice constantly betrayed pain and discontent, a pain that apparently permeated his life.

Ironically, it is these expressions of pain and angst that helped Nirvana become the "band of the '90s," and labeled an unwilling Cobain as the "voice of our generation." The fact that thousands of young people attached themselves to his music and lyrics made the label inevitable.

Cobain was desperate to make his own music, on his own terms, without compromising his integrity. Soon after the breakthrough "Smells Like Teen Spirit" wore out its overplayed welcome as a hit, Nirvana stopped playing the song completely at its live shows.

Young America had hooked themselves to a song they believed to be an anthem written for them, when in reality, Cobain penned "Teen Spirit" as a scathing insult to the very purchasers of the record.

Cobain often looked up to REM as a source of inspiration, a band whose career he ultimately wanted to emulate. He often talked of how they had always made the kind of music they wanted, without any compromise whatsoever. REM never struggled with newfound popularity the way that Cobain did. He often said that he didn't know how to be a rock star, how to deal with success.

However, for all of his worries, Cobain handled the stardom fairly well. He responded to the mainstream achievements of Nevermind with a collection of ugly, punky B–sides entitled Incesticide and a noisy, distorted and less polished follow–up album in form of In Utero. In fact, Cobain appeared so at ease with himself after the release of In Utero that he and the band accepted the headlining spot on this summer's Lollapalooza tour after turning down the same offer last year.

Truly, voice of a generation or not, Nirvana's popularity reached incredible heights over the past three years. From Jim Morrison to Bono, every decade has a singer /lyricist who disaffected teens claim is the "only one who understands them." For the past three years, that person has been Kurt Cobain.

> "Young America had hooked themselves to a song they believed to be an anthem written for them, when in reality, Cobain penned "Teen Spirit" as a scathing insult to the very purchasers of the record."

After the announcement of his death, radio stations from here to Seattle were literally flooded with calls from saddened adolescents who said, "I just don't understand, and, um, could you play 'Heart Shaped Box'?" Thousands are also expected to attend a candlelight memorial in Seattle on Sunday.

Of course, it is important to recognize that Kurt Cobain's music would not have affected people if it did not affect the music world first. "Smells Like Teen Spirit," albeit misunderstood, shoved "alternative" music to the forefront of pop culture. Without Nirvana and their original breakthrough, there would be no Pearl Jam, no Stone Temple Pilots, no Smashing Pumpkins ruling the top of the album charts. They paved the way, and told us that it was OK to express anger and angst in really loud and angry songs.

Truly, they began a movement that revitalized rock n' roll as we know. A SPIN magazine from 1988 asked the pertinent question, "Is Rock and Roll Dead?" At that point, "rock and roll" meant insipid bands like Bon Jovi, and synthesizers ruled musical style. Nirvana and the Seattle scene changed all that, and reintroduced our generation to real rock music. To write about Kurt Cobain's suicide is hard without understanding what motivated his actions. In searching his lyrics for a reason, one might come up with this classic line, "I found it hard, it was hard to find/ Oh well, whatever, nevennind."

Does any of this help? No, we'll never be really sure why Kurt Cobain ended his promising life too soon. As for myself, I sum up my feelings with this lyric from a Nick Heyward song, "Everybody's young, and far too serious." Too soon, Kurt. You could have done great things.

Critiquing the commercials

On the Tube
by Caleb Cochran

Before I start this week's column, let's have a moment of silence for Nirvana's fallen leader, Kurt Cobain. If this were a music column, I'd write about him today.

Since this is a TV column, however, I'm going to write about Sally Struthers. You heard me. I was watching the Yankees on Saturday (the Sox weren't on yet) when a large, blond woman came on the screen and started to talk about hungry people over in Africa, and how for the price of a cup of coffee a day, I can help save them. This is a very noble cause, no doubt.

My question is this: Why is Sally Struthers the spokeswoman for this cause? The woman has absolutely no influence on what I do or how I choose to spend my money. Not that anyone should have that influence on me, of course. But if anyone were to persuade me to buy something or give money to a cause, it would not be the lovely and talented Ms. Struthers. Sorry.

What has this woman done? How did she get this job? Does she act, or just eat? I want to know.

I'm also pretty sick of seeing Candice Bergen in my face all the time trying to convince me to switch to MCI or stay with AT&T or switch to Sprint or whatever the hell it is she is trying to do. I read somewhere that Americans listen to Bergen and that her commercials are very successful. If that's the case, bravo, Candice. But I hope you realize that I still have no clue which phone company you represent.

The new Michael Jordan "If there were no sports, would I still be your hero?" commercials from Nike get a thumbs up from me, though I've heard a lot of people cracking on them. I like them because when I see and hear Jordan on the screen, I forget for a moment the current baseball fiasco and remember his days on the basketball court.

The female version of the commercial, starring Jackie Joyner–Kersee, doesn't do much for me. I was sitting up at the TOC Lounge with my two friends watching the Arkansas–Duke game when this ad came on. When Joyner asked "Would i still be your hero?" at the end, I could say nothing except, "I don't even know who you are, to be completely honest with you." One of my friends told me that it was Kersee, and I was still not impressed. If I don't recognize the person and she thinks she is my hero, she's got another thing coming.

She's a wonderful athlete and a hero to many, I'm sure; but to run her in a series of nearly identical ads opposite Michael Jordan is ridiculous. I would think she could realize this. I'm sure the paycheck from Nike erased any questions she had about the commercials, however.

The best new commercials, in this writer's humble opinion, are the "1–800–COLLECT" ads starring

Film battles bad body image

By EMILY MARINO
Collegian Staff

If the arrival of spring and the thought of abandoning bulky sweaters and baggy jeans is giving you the body image blues, tuning into HSCN may improve your mood. This week channel 17 is featuring The Famine Within, a provocative film about eating disorders.

The Famine Within is comprised of a series of staged, voiced–over skits which provide information about eating disorders in a dramatic way. Interviews with professionals from the field are also presented.

"The film itself is not from the medical aspect, but is about the social atmosphere that focuses on women and how they feel about their bodies," said Robin Levine, a senior nutritionist and the coordinator of Nutrition Services at University Health Services. The film is intended "to bring some information, some education and some outreach to people who may be dealing with an eating disorder," according to Levine.

Levine, who has been working at the University since 1981, asserts that the film deals with issues concerning attitudes and behaviors involving food that are extremely important to the campus community.

"I truly believe that 95 percent of all women suffer with this kind of problem," Levine said. The nutritionist said that most women do not have clinically diagnosed eating disorders, but suffer from a more subtle, but equally disturbing problem.

"How many times have you said to yourself, 'I should really lose five pounds,' or 'I shouldn't eat this?'" said Levine. She said that many of the women who come in to see her with a desire to lose weight are healthy and in accordance with physical guidelines which are "wider than we would like to believe."

The nutritionist cites low self–esteem as a key factor in body image and in weight maintenance. According to Levine, women have historically been evaluated by their bodies, and physical appearance is still one of the first places they look to increase their self–esteem. By "carving out a body," women look to feel better about themselves in other areas, like academics and in relationships.

"It is a very superficial answer to a much more com-wife and daughter.

"Now he's gone and joined that stupid club," said his mother, Wendy O'Connor, referring to other rock stars who died young, including Jim Morrison and Jimi Hendrix. "I told him not to join that stupid club."

O'Connor, interviewed at her home in Aberdeen, said her son had been missing for six days and she had feared he would be found dead. She filed a missing person's report with Seattle police last Saturday.

A summary of the report said, "Cobain ran away from (a) California facility and flew back to Seattle. He also bought a shotgun and may be suicidal."

The California treatment facility was not identified.

After the report was filed, Seattle police made periodic checks at Cobain's home and found workers there each time. Capt. Brent Wingstrand said the workers were asked to call police if Cobain showed up.

"It was something I felt was not unusual that he would disappear like that," Wingstrand told the Post-Intelligencer. "I thought he may not have been truly a missing person but a person who didn't want to be found. It was unfortunate what happened."

arrested until 1944. However, at age 16, Natansohn was sent to Auschwitz.

When she arrived at the concentration camp, she was put through the selections to see who was healthy enough to work. A man whom she did not know told her to lie about her age and say she was 18. After doing so, she was allowed to go work with her mother and two aunts. She found out later that all children under 18 were sent to the gas chambers.

After three days in Auschwitz, Natansohn and her family were sent to Plaszow, a labor camp in Poland, where they worked digging ditches. She was soon sent back to Auschwitz and tattooed on her left arm with an identification number.

"Strangely enough, I don't remember the number on my arm," she said as she showed it to the audience. "I guess I don't want to."

Natansohn was next sent to a forced labor camp in Germany until her liberation at the end of the war in April 1945.

Mr. and Mrs. Natansohn ended their stories with a plea for students to challenge statements made by Revisionists and to remember the past as it will influence the future.

"Our motivation to tell our stories come from those who deny the existence of the Holocaust. This was not a hoax. I wish it were — then my father, mother and sister would be alive today," said Mr. Natansohn.

The speeches were given as part of the Holocaust Memorial week and sponsored by the University of Massachusetts Hillel, UMass Arts Council and other campus groups.

The Famine Within

plicated feeling," Levine said. By focusing less on physical appearance, Levine feels that many women would be able to fulfill their potential in these areas and have richer lives.

However, a woman's battle with food may be part of the war the media has waged on body image, in Levine's eyes. She asserted that images of attractive, slender women not only pervade magazines and television but have become standard representations of women in the public arena.

According to Levine, women on TV (such as morning talk shows "Good Morning America," "Today" and "CBS This Morning") are almost required to be attractive while often their male colleagues are not. This trend, she said, is indicative of the pressure that women are under to work as hard as their male peers (if not harder) and maintain charming good looks in the process.

"Today's woman is expected to bring home the bacon, cook the bacon, but not eat the bacon," Levine said. As a result, the dissatisfaction that women feel if they do not measure up to these expectations is manifested in a dissatisfaction with their weight.

"You have to ask yourself, if you took away the media, would you ever think about going on a diet?" Levine pointed out. She said that maintaining healthy eating habits and exercise patterns should be a reflection of a good self- esteem and the desire to take good care of your body.

Levine recommends that everyone can benefit from watching The Famine Within. Whether it be to examine your own feelings about food or to understand eating disorders from which someone you know may suffer, the film aims to provide information and insight.

The film will be shown Monday, April 11 through Thursday, April 14 at 10 p.m. on the campus cable TV channel 17.

For more information about eating disorders and campus resources, call UHS, 549–2671 ext. 233, Mental Health Services, 545–2337 or Everywoman's Center, 545–0883. A peer support group also meets to discuss eating disorders every Monday at 4:30 in the Campus Center. Check schedule by elevators for room number.

David Spade of "Saturday Night Live." Spade is hilarious opposite Calvert DeForest (Larry 'Bud' Melman of the old "Late Night with David Letterman"). I usually don't go out of my way to praise commercials, but these are especially well done. Spade is a very funny guy who deserves much more time on "SNL" than he currently gets. He is too talented to simply serve as Adam Sandler's understudy, and hopefully he'll soon get bigger parts on the show.

I read somewhere that Spade should replace Kevin Nealon on the "Weekend Update" segment of the show. This sounds like a good move to me. Nealon is utterly unfunny throughout much of his skit, with the highlights usually coming from guests such as Sandler or Spade and his "Hollywood Minute." Nealon is the Jay Leno of phony newcasts. Give the job to the spicier, wittier, funnier Spade, and watch the ratings improve.

In Case You Missed It: I was about to wrap things up when I remembered that I wanted to talk about the Jim Rome–Jim Everett brawl on ESPN 2. I wish I had seen this. Apparently Rome, the host of "Talk 2," a sports talk show on the fledgling network, kept calling Everett, the former LA Rams quarterback, "Chris," in reference to the women's tennis legend Chris Evert. Everett took exception and warned Rome not to do it again, at which point Rome proceeded to say, "O.K., Chris," or something along those lines. Everett then turned over the table which separated the men and came after Rome.

Jim Rome is an idiot, plain and simple, and I wish Everett had broken some bones. I'm not an advocate of violence, but in the case of the pompous, ultra–cool Rome, I think it could be the only solution.

So until next week, happy viewing — Chris.

Your Horoscope
By Joann Stone

ARIES (March 21–April 19): Business and financial matters must have your full attention this week. Procrastination could leave you in an unhappy hole. Let romance simmer for a while.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): Adding a dash of the unexpected to an old tradition will improve it. The sheer joy of romance is worth the effort. Spending is even more exciting when you know you can afford it.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): Although travel is time- consuming and expensive, it may be the best way to achieve a financial goal. If uncertain whether a plan is right for you, buy time by asking pointed questions.

CANCER (June 21–July 22): Be realistic when it comes to spending. A practical, limit-setting approach is essential. Do not expect to resolve financial woes with a lottery ticket.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): A message or letter gets your day off to an impressive start. Dashing about has its thrills, too. Improving your vocabulary and writing skills will impress higher-ups.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): You should make good headway this morning and do even better this afternoon. A co-worker may offer to pitch in. Socializing tonight will put you in touch with interesting people.

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): A real estate deal or home improvements project should turn out profitably. Do not skimp on personal effort or your heart's desire will remain elusive.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): Your charisma and business know-how will impress a newcomer. Spending quality time with an authority figure gives you a chance to develop rapport. Take an experimental approach in the areas of writing and public speaking.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): Private meetings, telephone calls and behind-the-scenes maneuvers are favored. Play your hunches and put your ideas into action.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): Your outgoing, responsive manner makes you very effective in one-on-one encounters. Try to take an objective view of an emotion-laden situation. Keeping your promises to loved one is your top priority.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18): Business and social activities will keep you on the run during the next few days. Make certain you and an associate understand each other.

PISCES (Feb 19–March 20): Sensible decisions are easy to make if you heed the voice of experience. Inspiration should send giants soaring! Ride the current wave of prosperity.

in the sixth to close out the Hawks.

Daut (5–4) gave up one run on four hits while striking out three, lowering her ERA to 1.53.

Ortega (four innings) and Colla (two innings) combined on a two–hit shutout in the nightcap. Ortega raised her record to 2–4, while Colla saw her first action of the season on the hill.

"Dani's got a really good inshoot (screwball) that has been working really well for her," Shaw said.

The Minutewomen again jumped on top early, scoring three runs on three hits in the first inning; UMass was led offensively by Sorenson, who had a hit and two runs batted in the contest.

I kept them off balance somehow. Pileski and LaRocca were excellent, the best double–play combination in the east," Ferrari said.

The third game of the series was scheduled for yesterday, but rain postponed the match–up until this afternoon, a 1 p.m. start at Lorden Field.

From the press box: UMass pinch hitter Nelson Ubaldo shattered his ceramic bat while batting in the second game. Stone expects to start freshman Chad Paronto on the mound in today's finale.

There are some radical potential changes, including changing the groups official name to include heterosexual allies. This is a controversial change that we are sure will bring up a lot of emotions and opinions as it has even amongst those of us on the steering committee. Therefore we encourage everyone concerned to attend the meeting and make their voice and vote heard.

Gorillas roll over Yale Elis, 14–8

By MATT VAUTOUR
Collegian Staff

Led by the seven–goal, two–assist performance of freshman Brendan Glass, the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team dominated the Yale Elis, 14–8, for its second straight victory.

The party atmosphere that is associated with UMass lacrosse was in full swing yesterday, as the Gorilla patrolled the sideline and fans covered the hill. The Gorillas (4–2) treated their fans to the best game of the young season.

The Gorillas jumped out to a big lead, scoring the first five goals of the game, as Yale's defense seemed confused by the crisp passing of UMass.

The Elis finally got on the board at 5:03 of the second quarter when Simon Duxbury whipped a shot past keeper Tom LoPresti. The Elis cut the UMass lead to 5–2 three minutes later, as the momentum seemed to shift to Yale.

Glass took the momentum right back, scoring his third of the game, with a nifty over the shoulder shot that completely fooled Yale goalie Rich Dressler.

"Everything is going right," said Glass of his performance. "Halfway through the second quarter Wes (Depp) was saying I was shooting fireballs."

"That's what he's out there for," said Gorilla Coach Ted Garber. "He's really a fine player."

Glass has 20 goals on the season.

After trading goals, Yale called a timeout which proved to be a boost as the Elis scored two goals in the last 20 seconds, closing the halftime gap to 7–5.

Perhaps angered by Yale's late outburst, the Gorillas dominated the second half.

The third quarter was barely underway when Mike Valente scored his second goal of the game, giving the Gorillas an 8–5 lead.

Yale's Tom Zaccagnino cut the lead to 8–6 just over a minute later, but that was as close as the Elis would get as UMass outscored them 6–1 the rest of the way.

The Elis were considered one of the top defensive teams in the nation coming into Saturday's contest, giving up only five goals to a talented Brown team earlier in the week.

However, the vaunted squad struggled against the Gorilla offense, giving up 14 goals, their most of the season. Instead, it was the UMass defense that dominated, playing well throughout.

Matt Noone had a particularly strong performance, limiting Yale's superstar attacker Duxbury to three goals.

"We're starting to get a feel for each other," said senior captain Ken Randazzo. "We're starting to really come together. Everything's coming along nicely."

"I think they feel pretty good about themselves," said Garber. "Our defense has a lot of pride. They were focused all week for this game.

The Gorillas believe this win will serve as a stepping stone for the rest of the season.

"This sets the stage for the New England Championship. It's now basically between us and Brown," said senior midfielder Chris Nentwich. "This starts our winning streak."

The Gorillas return to action Wednesday afternoon at 3 p.m. against the University of New Hampshire at Garber Field.

Landmark victory for UMass

By MICHAEL REISS

In its dual meet against Tufts on March 30, the University of Massachusetts men's tennis team was constantly on the defensive, due to Tufts aggressive style of tennis.

On April 7 at Holy Cross, the Minutemen showed the offensive punch that was lacking against Tufts, aggressively picking apart the Crusaders en route to a 5–2 victory.

The win was the team's first of the season and first in two years. The men's tennis program was reinstated this year after a two–year hiatus.

Early signs were positive for the Minutemen, with the first three matches going UMass' way.

The doubles teams dominated Holy Cross, giving UMass momentum heading into singles play. The number one doubles tandem of Keith Murray and Kevin Hicks pulled out an 8–4 win, showcasing a nice combination of consistent ground strokes and pinpoint volleying.

Darren Tow and Joe Twer gutted out an 8–6 triumph at second doubles, while at third doubles, Ankur Baishya and Eric Peters hustled their way to a 8–4 victory. The doubles sweep set the tone for the day. A tone that was all UMass.

Murray, who has sacrificed himself for the team at first singles, was bumped down to third singles. The senior wore down his opponent, winning the first set 7–5 and cruising to a 6–1 second set win.

Murray was forced to play at first singles at the start of the season due to the loss of freshman phenom Kasper Vaala (declared ineligible by the NCAA), the team's top player.

Hicks worked his way to a three–set win, 6–4, 3–6, 6–1 at second singles. Twer (6–2, 6–4 at fourth singles) and Tow (6–0, 7–5 at sixth singles) also were victorious.

Baishya and Greg Hsiao played well at first and fifth singles, respectively, but fell in hard–fought matches.

While the reinstatement of the program certainly was sweet for the Minutemen, their first victory was just that much sweeter.

Minutewomen tame Hawks

Big first innings lead to 10–1, 4–0 Saturday sweep

By SEAN P. HAYDEN

The weather was cold, but the pitching was hot for the University of Massachusetts softball team Saturday afternoon as it took a pair from the St. Joseph's Hawks on a blustery day at Totman Field.

The 10–1, 4–0 victories upped the Minutewomen's record to 7–8 on the year and also allowed them to open the Atlantic 10 season with a 2–0 record.

Massachusetts was denied the chance to raise its record above .500 Sunday when a double–header with Temple had to be postponed due to poor weather conditions. The game will instead be played today at 1 p.m. at Totman.

Junior ace Kelly Daut, freshman starter Dani Ortega and sophomore reliever Dana Colla combined to limit the Hawks to six hits and one run in the double–header.

"I thought they did really well," said sophomore catcher Michele Shaw. "They've been working hard and starting to get their curves to be effective."

The Minutewomen jumped out to a 4–0 lead early in the first game, thanks in large part to four first–inning errors by the Hawks, three of them by third baseman Trish Treskot.

Freshman Sam Cardenas doubled to open the home half of the inning and consecutive throwing errors by Treskot plated her and left the Minutewomen with second and third with nobody out.

Another error — by second baseman Janielle Hoffman off the bat of senior Rachel Lawson plated the runner from third. After a Shaw groundout moved Lawson to second, freshman Jodi Sorenson hit a ball to the first baseman who threw it to third to get freshman Chris Martens, who was heading home, in a rundown.

Treskot saved the day for Massachusetts again with another throwing error when she tried to nail Martens at the plate. The throw sailed wide, Martens scored and again the Minutewomen had runners at second and third when sophomore Amy Powell lofted a sacrifice fly to right, scoring Lawson and ending the rally.

Massachusetts added a run in the second on a Martens double, another in the sixth when a Sorenson double scored pinch runner Heather Dorsey and four

Ferrari flirts with no–hitter, Minutemen win double–dip

By ANTHONY GUIDO
Collegian Staff

Combine great starting pitching, power–hitting offense and solid fielding and you get winning baseball.

Flirting with a no–hitter, now there's something special.

The University of Massachusetts baseball team had all of that and more on Saturday, sweeping St. Joesph's in a doubleheader by scores of 10–5 and 2–0 at Earl Lorden Field.

Peter Ferrari pitched a one–hitter for his second win of the season and his third complete game. Jay Murphy got his second win of the year in the opener as UMass (8–11, 5–2 in Atlantic 10) exploded with three home runs in the first inning.

"That usually won't happen, but it was a nice way to start a doubleheader," Coach Mike Stone said.

Murphy (2–3) cruised until running into trouble in the fifth, giving up two runs while issuing two walks. The junior right–hander went five innings, giving up five runs on nine hits.

Greg Dowd relieved and picked up his second save of the season by pitching two perfect innings.

The wind was blowing out all day at Lorden Field and the Minutemen took advantage of that. In addition to the three first–inning home runs, designated hitter Justin Howard hit a mammoth HR deep over the wall in left field, the third homer of the year for the senior co–captain.

LaRocca, the other co–captain, ended up going 4–4 with two RBI and three runs scored. Center fielder Nate Murphy went 2–4 with two RBI.

"Everyone did a good job, we needed that kind of start. We have to get up for every team in the Atlantic 10," Stone said.

The story of the second game was Ferrari. The senior right–hander was three outs away from a no–hitter only to have St. Joesph's (10–19, 1–9 A–10) Brian Obermeier single cleanly to left.

"I knew I could finish it; I just put it over the plate and our defense spotted me all day," Ferrari said.

UMass turned three double plays in the nightcap, including the game ending play by second baseman Mark Pileski, who tagged out one Hawk runner and threw to first.

The Minutemen got all the offense they would need in the first inning as LaRocca plated Pileski with a two–out single. In the second inning Murphy smacked a triple, scoring catcher Andy Pelis, who had singled, to give Ferrari a two– run cushion.

Ferrari's control led to 14 groundball outs and kept the ball out of the fierce wind. Ferrari ended up with the shutout, yielding the one hit while striking out three and walking one.

Sox pitching falters again

CHICAGO — Alex Fernandez pitched a six-hitter — all singles — for his first shutout in nearly a year, and the Chicago White Sox beat the Boston Red Sox 8-0 Sunday.

Fernandez (1-1) struck out six, walked one and was backed by three-run innings in both the third and fifth. It was his first shutout since last April 13 against Minnesota and the fourth of his career.

Julio Franco and Frank Thomas drove in two runs each for the White Sox. The Red Sox helped Chicago by making three outfield errors.

Fernandez worked out of trouble in the second after Mo Vaughn and Andre Dawson opened with hits. Damon Berryhill flied out, with Vaughn taking third, but Dawson was thrown out trying to steal and Tim Naehring lined to shortstop.

Boston also put two on in the sixth before Mike Greenwell and Vaughn flied out.

Franco, who has nine RBIs this season, hit an RBI double in the first off Joe Hesketh (0-1), who allowed six runs and six hits in 4 and two–thirds innings. Thomas hit a two-run double in the third, advanced to third when right fielder Greg Blosser dropped a relay flip from center fielder Otis Nixon and scored on Franco's single for a 4-0 lead.

Darrin Jackson singled home a run off Paul Quantrill in the fifth. Joe Hall followed with another run-scoring hit, and the seventh run scored when Blosser let the ball go through his legs in right.

Johnson had an RBI groundout in the eighth.

Notes: Tim Raines missed Sunday's game after straining his left hamstring Saturday. Trainer Herm Schneider said Raines should be able to play Tuesday against the Yankees. ... The White Sox's 13 homers in their first five games are their most during the first five games since 1962, when detailed statistics were first kept. Hesketh's 1993 season, in which he pitched mainly out of the bullpen, was cut short in August by elbow problems. He had surgery Sept. 30.

Jordan gets his first hit

HOOVER, Ala. (AP) — Michael Jordan is on the board.

The seven-time NBA scoring champion got his first two hits as a baseball pro, a pair of singles in four at-bats Sunday for the Double-A Birmingham Barons.

Jordan, 0-for-7 with five strikeouts in his first two games in the Southern League, broke through with a sharp single in the third inning off former golf partner Joe Ganote in a 7-1 loss to Knoxville.

"Yeah, it was a little bit of a relief," Jordan said. "I really believed I could hit the ball, but it was nice to get that first one. You get confidence by getting hits, and that's what I got."

In fact, Jordan got half his team's hits in the defeat. Jordan and the Barons still do not have a win, however; the defending league champions dropped their season opener to Chattanooga without Jordan, and have lost three straight with him.

"Even though I had a good day overall, it's no fun to come in here after you lose," he said. "Today, it seemed like I was the only one getting hits. Last night, it seemed like I was the only one not getting a hit."

The crowd of 7,520, part of the largest weekend attendance in the seven-year history of Hoover Metropolitan Stadium, gave Jordan a standing ovation after his first hit. The scoreboard, which had all zeroes after Jordan's average, home runs and RBIs, flashed "BASE HIT."

Tubbs leaving Oklahoma

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Leave it to Billy Tubbs to do the unexpected. If his 14-year stay in Norman proved anything, it was that he was as unpredictable as the weather.

Word first came Friday that Tubbs, the most successful basketball coach in University of Oklahoma history, had interviewed that day for the job at Texas Christian.

TCU? The Horned Frogs? Aren't they in the soon-to-be-defunct Southwest Conference?

Tubbs wasn't kidding. He agreed to a five-year deal Saturday that will reportedly pay him more than $200,000 per year.

"I came here because I think it's an exciting adventure," he said. "It's a tremendous challenge, and it brings with it a lot of excitement."

At second glance, the move makes sense.

Tubbs spent 14 years at Oklahoma. He inherited a bad program and turned it around, winning 20 or more games in 12 straight seasons. Twice he won 30 or more. The Sooners won four Big Eight championships under Tubbs and made it to the NCAA championship game in 1988.

His 333 victories at Oklahoma are the most by a Sooner basketball coach, by a long shot. Next is Bruce Drake, who won 200 games in 17 seasons.

Tubbs' up-tempo game helped transform play in the Big Eight. He brought in some of the greatest players in league history, such as Wayman Tisdale and Stacey King.

Bombing continues in Sarajevo

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — U.S. bombs destroyed a tank and struck several personnel carriers outside the besieged Muslim enclave of Gorazde on Monday in NATO's second air strike on Bosnian Serb positions in two days.

After two F-18 warplanes based in Aviano, Italy, ended their bombing mission, the Serbs responded with renewed fury, firing a barrage of artillery shells on Muslims holed up in the battered town 35 miles southeast of Sarajevo.

Lyndall Sachs, a spokeswoman for the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees in Belgrade, reported "indiscriminate shelling" of Gorazde. She said a shell landed close to UNHCR offices in Gorazde, blowing out all the windows. There were no casualties.

Violence rips through Rwanda

BUTARE, Rwanda — Chaos, despair and blood flowed through this small African country for a fifth day Monday. The air was heavy with the stench from thousands of corpses and from the smoke of villages burned by marauders.

Hundreds of foreigners have fled since the ethnic-based violence gripped Rwanda. Some foreign aid workers had elected to stay, but even some of the most dedicated were packing their bags Monday and hoping to find a way to escape.

In Butare, Rwanda's second-largest city, refugees from the countryside told of gangs of men roaming the countryside, setting fire to villages and hacking the residents to death with machetes. In Kigali, the capital 50 miles north of Butare, automatic weapons fire in the streets played a terrifying counterpoint to the roar of shells on the city's outskirts.

Clintons owe back taxes

WASHINGTON — The Clintons failed to report $6,49B in income that Mrs. Clinton made in commodities trading in 1980, the White House disclosed Monday. They wrote checks totaling $14,615 in back taxes and interest to cover what the White House called an oversight. The checks were written to the U.S. Treasury and to the state of Arkansas.

"The Clintons do not know how the error occurred but accept responsibility for it," the Clintons' personal attorney, David Kendall, said in a statement.

The income is in addition to a nearly $100,000 gain that the White House previously reported Mrs. Clinton made in 1979-1980 in commodities trading.

The White House has said Mrs. Clinton made the money after staking $1,000 of her own money on risky cattle futures.

New documents made available by the White House on Monday showed Mrs. Clinton put up $5,000 of her own money in a second trading account in October 1979.

Abortion ruling handed down

BOSTON— In a sharply divided ruling Monday, the Supreme Judicial Court upheld an injunction prohibiting the anti-abortion group Operation Rescue from blocking abortion clinics.

The high court, in a 4-3 decision, said the injunction properly protects the civil rights of women seeking abortions. The dissenting judges, however, said the injunction was too broad and could restrain First Amendment rights.

The injunction, in place since 1991 at the request of the Planned Parenthood League of Massachusetts, bars anyone connected to Operation Rescue from trespassing on or blocking abortion clinics.

The attorney general's office, which helped seek the injunction, has used it to more than a dozen protesters to jail.

Last year, Massachusetts passed a law barring all people from blocking clinics. But Assistant Attorney General Judith Beals said the injunction was still necessary since it can provide stiffer penalties.

Students demand better services

The cookie and coffee bar at the Blue Wall may be popular on campus, but the vegetables have got to go.

Yesterday, a public forum was held on the eighth floor of the Campus Center where the study of the University's food services revealed its evaluations and recommendations.

Last year, the hotel, restaurant and travel administration department was given a proposal to work on a study analyzing the food services and operations on campus by Paul J. Page, vice chancellor for administration and finance.

In August, Fred Smith, Professor Frank Lattuca, Associate Professor Linda Shea, Chris Allen and Eric Nusbaum began the study. The examinations reviewed the financial and consumer aspects of places such as the Hatch and the snackbars at Whitmore, Hampden and at the physical plant.

The studies revealed a desire for better service, better food offered, and more popular brands besides Taco Bell and Colombo Yogurt.

In order to find out the "customers perception" of the food services on campus, focus groups were put together to discuss their opinions.

Students from the general education course HRTA 100, which are mainly freshman and sophomores, was one focus group. Shea said she was able to get many opinions about the dining commons from this group because a majority of the students lived on campus.

"Many students said the service is slow and they don't seem to care about what they are doing. Yet, students also said they are willing to wait longer to get their food if it is better quality," Shea said.

Constitution up for vote as SGA passes new rules

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association has presented its plan now it is up to the students at the University of Massachusetts to decide whether it will pass.

The undergraduate student body will vote to ratify the proposed SGA constitution on Tuesday, April 26. The constitution was presented by Attorney General Matthew Malone and the Senate Select Committee on By–Laws and Constitutional review.

The Student Senate voted unanimously to pass the proposed constitution on March 30. The new constitution will move on to be voted by the students. If the students pass the constitution, it will progress to be voted on by the Board of Trustees.

"The proposed constitution was approved by a unanimous vote by the student senate. That is why we feel confident the student body will approve it," said Cam Tewksbury, the chair of government affairs.

"But, if the constitution is voted down, then the committee will work on another proposal, which will have to be approved by senate and brought to a revote for the students," Tewksbury said.

Malone began to investigate ways to restructure the SGA's constitution and by–laws in October 1993. He found the need to adapt the constitution to the needs of the SGA today.

Malone held a public presentation in the Cape Cod Lounge on April 5, during which he explained the problems with the old constitution and the changes made in the new constitution.

"The major problem with the old constitution was that it was simply outdated," Malone said. "It was 20–years-old and it was designed to suit the needs of the SGA in 1974 not 1994."

The old constitution was incomplete according to Malone. There were entire sections that were missing or ignored. The new constitution further defines the leadership positions in SGA and develops a three–branch system of government, according to Malone.

"Essentially what is changing, is the removal of the president, and the creation of the three forms of government, the legislative, executive and judicial branches," Malone said.

Payback time comes for avid hoop fans

By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR.

For Coach John Calipari and the University of Massachusetts men's basketball program, it's payback time this Friday night in the William D. Mullins Center.

However, it won't be the Minutemen winning in the building they have never lost in. Instead, it will be the students who have a chance at victory.

Four $1000 scholarships will be raffled off during an awards presentation for the 1993–94 Minutemen, two donated by Calipari and his wife, Ellen, and two by the UMass Court Club.

Calipari said the donation of the scholarships was given to show the students how much he and his team appreciates what they mean to the program.

"The idea is this — we know how the students have been in support for our team. Here's our reward," Calipari said.

Ron Nathan, the executive director of the Court Club, said the purpose of the scholarships was to recognize the efforts of students and their support.

"It's the Court Club's way to give back to the kids who really support the program," Nathan said.

Students must fill out the entry form which appears in the Collegian today and Thursday and drop it into a container outside the Mullins Center before entering the event. The amount of the scholarship will be credited to the Fall 1994 tuition bill.

The annual Court Club banquet honoring the team, which includes dinner, will precede the awards presentation and tickets cost $40. Those interested in attending the banquet should contact the UMass Athletic Office at 545–0290.

This year marks the first the general public will be allowed in after the banquet. Nathan said the Court Club has never been able to invite students to come for free because of where the event has been held; places like the Campus Center Auditorium were just big enough to admit those attending the banquet, according to Nathan.

The awards presentation will include a 1993–94 highlight film and will be shown live on Springfield's WWLP–22 with Rich Tettemer as host, beginning at 8 p.m. Friday night.

Israeli sees no peace in our time

Last night a retired Israeli politician, recently turned political critic, said no progress has been made between Palestinians and Israelis because peace agreements deal with politics and not the "very profound" emotions of the people involved.

Meron Benvenisti, a columnist for Haaretz, the leading Hebrew newspaper in Israel, who claims no political party as his own, spoke to a full audience at Amherst College's Campus Center, about what he described as the bleak prospects for an Israeli/Palestinian peace in our time.

The issue of peace in Israel and the Occupied Territories is not one of land, Benvenisti said, but one of "constant friction between human beings using the same road."

Despite the Arafat–Rabin handshake, between the two communities "hatred and rage is there very much," the result of 110 years of conflict, he said.

The fundamental differences between Protestants and Catholics in Northern Ireland will likely prevent an agreement from being reached between the Irish Republican Army and England any time soon, two journalists from Ireland said last night.

Suzanne Breen, a journalist for The Irish Times in Belfast, Ireland and James Downey, a political analyst for the Irish Independent spoke about conditions in Ireland that prevented the most recent attempt at peace between the two nations, The Downing Street Declaration.

The Downing Street Declaration was reached between Irish Prime Minister Albert Reynolds and British Prime Minister John Major on Dec. 15, 1993. The agreement said Northern Ireland would remain British for as long as the majority of its population wanted it to stay that way. It also asserted that England no longer had any strategic or economic interests in Ireland.

An assistant professor at the University of Massachusetts is taking NASA into a new direction this week — 1,000 feet below the surface of the earth.

Lawrence F. Mallory, a five–year member of the plant and soil sciences department, is leading NASA researchers into Lechuguilla Cave in Carlsbad Caverns National Park, New Mexico, as part of a project exploring the possibility of life on Mars.

A frequent visitor to Lechuguilla, Mallory's interest in the cave isn't exactly the same as NASA's. According to Lyle L. Craker, head of the plant and soil sciences department, Mallory is interested in previously-unknown microorganisms found in caves.

"He's primarily interested in ones that would help produce antibiotics and anti-cancer agents," Craker said.

NASA researchers hope the samples of bacteria they collect from Lechuguilla's 70 miles of passageways will provide clues to life that may exist or may have existed on Mars.

"It's kind of an inner trip to outer space," said NASA engineer Larry Lemke. "We're going in the opposite direction to get to outer space."

Golden Key sponsors test

By CATHERINE B. PULLEY
Collegian Staff

A rare opportunity has fallen at the feet of all university students who are sweating out results or are nervous about taking the GRE, LSAT, MCAT and GMAT.

The Golden Key National Honor Society and Order of Omega are sponsoring diagnostic tests that will be administered by Kaplan along with a personalized computer analysis of results for a donation of eight dollars.

"With a [computer analysis], students can have the chance to see their weaknesses or see where they need to improve," said Neal Goldenberg, the Treasurer of the UMass chapter of Golden Key and President of Order of Omega.

According to Goldenberg, the eight dollars donation is a small fraction of the $75-100 of what the tests usually cost to be administered.

The diagnostic tests will be given on April 16, 23 and 30 at 1 p.m. Students can reserve seats with a donation of eight dollars at the Dean of Students Office, and will be notified of their test location when they reserve their seat.

The proceeds will benefit Golden Key community activities which, according to sponsor and Associate Dean of Students, Gladys Rodriguez, are very extensive.

"Golden Key is not only academics," said Rodriquez. "It extends beyond that. It encourages continued achievement and leadership."

She said that members can become involved in hunger drives, and The Best of America Say No program, a drug and alcohol awareness program that is directed at middle school children in the community.

Golden Key is an international honors society that is open to the top 15 percent of a specific class. Membership is by invitation only during the fall, and the UMass chapter currently has 400-500 members.

The $50 membership fee is returned by funding scholarships, certificates and through the local chapter funding.

"You could pay the fee and not get involved," said Goldenberg. "But you would be missing out. You create your own opportunity."

The UMass chapter recently attended a regional convention in Hartford, Conn., where student delegate and former UMass Golden Key President Dina Raimo spoke on AIDS awareness.

WASHINGTON — An Indiana woman has won agreement from the U.S. Tax Court that her breasts are business assets and can be depreciated for tax purposes.

Cynthia S. Hess, known as "Chesty Love" in her professional life as an exotic dancer, and her husband, Reginald R. Hess, claimed a $2,088 deduction in 1988 for depreciation on the surgical implants that enlarged her bust size to a 56F.

The IRS turned down the deduction, citing a long list of court decisions holding that expenditures to enhance a taxpayer's health or appearance — while useful for business — are so inherently personal that they can't be deducted as a business expense. But Hess found an ally in Special Trial Judge Joan Seitz Pate, who ruled that the implants increased Hess' income and that the breasts are so large and cumbersome — they are about 10 pounds each — that she couldn't derive personal benefit from them.

"Petitioner's expenditures were detrimental to her health and contorted her body into a grotesque appearance, all for the purpose of making money. Thus, even though the implants were surgically made a part of her body, we are convinced that they are not inherently personal in nature," Pate wrote in the March 30 decision.

"Petitioner, in pursuit of additional income, had inserted implants that augmented her breasts to such an extent that they made her appear 'freakish,'" the judge wrote. "They were so large that they ruined her personal appearance, her health, and imposed severe stress on her personal and family relationships."

Dancing as "Tonda Marie" before the implants, Hess grossed from $416 to $750 per week. After "multiple medical procedures" to enlarge her chest, her fees almost doubled. In a 20-week period of 1991, "petitioner realized gross income in excess of $70,000," the judge wrote.

Farm flourishes

Local project provides fresh food

By ALEXIS A. PAPALI
Collegian Correspondent

There is a feeling these days that mass-produced products of inferior quality are inundating the shelves of America's supermarkets. Where, for instance, can one find fresh- picked, affordable oregano or butternut squash?

Look no further; the Smith Community Farm, a Community Supported Agricultural (CSA) project, has quietly begun in Northampton. Run by the Friends of the Farm at Smith Vocational Agricultural School, the effort is in its first year.

CSA is a new method of farming by which farmers receive a fairer return for their product by eliminating the middlemen who buy at a lower rate. The consumer, in turn, enjoys fresh, locally grown produce, with the knowledge that their food dollars are reinvested into the local economy.

The grower for the project, Polly Ryan, is a recent graduate of the plant and soil science department at the University. Her efforts have contributed to a broadening trend in community farming education.

One harvest share, an average of 10-14 pounds per week — enough to feed three adults or two adults and two children — costs $425 for the entire season, which runs May through November. A half share purchase (five to seven pounds a week feeding two adults) comes to $250.

Included in the cost is a $25 donation to The Friends of the Farm, a non-profit group of individuals devoted to supporting the Farm. By having members pick up their produce at the farm, the project avoids expensive distribution costs, thus applying returns directly to operating costs.

A hardly publicized facet of the project is the work experience afforded to high school agricultural students on the farm.

"The Smith Community Farm can become a showcase and a learning center for our students and the town," Steve Johnson, superintendent of the school, said.

Among the 35 varieties of vegetables being cultivated for the harvest are tomatoes, watermelons, broccoli, collards, cress, kale and leeks. The farm offers, outside the cost of the shares, special harvest items such as berries, asparagus, apple cider, honey and fresh eggs. They also have order forms and price lists for whole or sides of pork and lamb, in small cuts.

For more information on CSA and details on the purchase of shares, call Polly Ryan at 253-2984.

LOOKING FOR A SERIOUS

AND YOUR WHEELS ARE SOMETHING SPECIAL, TOO.

There's a Ford or Mercury Just Like You... and Your Ford or Lincoln-Mercury Dealer Has a Graduation Present to Help Make it Your Own... • $400 Cash Back or • a Special Finance Rate*

Personally speaking, what you drive says a lot about who you are. So why not say you're one of the most exciting, fun-loving, even sensible people going? In other words, why not say it with a sporty new Ford or Mercury?

Now's the perfect time to make a personal statement—because the 1994 Ford & Mercury College Graduate Purchase Program gives you your choice of $400 cash back or a special finance rate when you buy a new Ford or Mercury. Or lease your vehicle and get $400 cash back!

Plus, Ford Credit can offer qualified applicants pre-approved credit up to $18,000 or the MSRP, whichever is lower, which could mean no down payment on finance purchases. You may also defer purchase payments for 120 days in most states (excluding Michigan, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Washington, DC).

So take time out to see your Ford or Lincoln-Mercury dealer today and ask about the College Graduate Purchase Program. (It's a terrific way to show the world just how smart you really are!)

*Special Finance rate alternative and Ford Credit programs not available on leases.
To be eligible, you must graduate with a bachelor's or graduate degree, or be enrolled in graduate school, between 1/1/94 and 9/30/94. This program is in addition to all other national customer incentives, except for other Ford private offers including the Young Buyer Program. You must purchase or lease your new vehicle between 1/1/94 and 9/30/95. Some customer and vehicle restrictions apply, so see your dealer for details.

The announcements for the 1994-95 Lilly Teaching Fellows are in. The program helps establish the teaching careers of junior faculty by giving them release time to design or revise a course and improve teaching skills under the supervision of the University's Center for Teaching.

The Lilly Fellows for the upcoming year are: David Mix Barrington, computer science; Daniel Bentil, mathematics and statistics; Elizabeth Connor, biology; Martin Espada, English; Ann Forsyth, landscape architecture and regional planning; Laetitia Amelia La Follette, art history; Helan Page, anthropology; and Michael L. Williams, geology and geography.

Stop the presses

Two University of Massachusetts professors have been very busy lately.

Edward Bruce Bynum, a psychology professor, has written a book titled Families and the Interpretation of Dreams: Awakening the Intimate Web. The book explores the link between family life, dreams and physical health and discusses the influence family life has on dreams and vice versa. It covers the history of dream interpretation in Europe, Asia, Africa and ancient America.

Bynum, a clinical psychologist and director of behavioral medicine and the biofeedback clinic at University Health Services.

Masha Rudman, a professor of education, has co-authored a book to help children who are faced with difficult emotional problems. The book, titled Books to Help Children Cope with Separation and Loss: An Annotated Bibliography, is in its fourth edition.

The book deals with death, divorce, stepfamilies, adoption, economic loss, chronic illness and moving. The updated version has been expanded to include war and peace, the Holocaust, AIDS, drug abuse and homelessness. Designed for children aged 3-16, the final section lists a directory of organizations providing support services.

Working the lecture circuit

Barbara Banik, assistant professor of nursing, has been invited to participate in the Governor's Conference on Alzheimer's Disease May 20 and June 1 in Boston. The conference will examine current policies and services for those affected with the disease and their caregivers. Banik has been asked to serve on the conference's education committee.

Rod Warnick, associate professor of hotel, restaurant and travel administration recently taught a two day educational seminar for 120 golf professionals in Orlando, Florida. The seminars were offered by the Professional Golfer's Association (PGA). Each member certified by the PGA must earn continuing educational units each year. Warnick teaches marketing, promotion, pricing and market research in recreation and golf services at the seminars.

Professor Melvin Janowitz of the department of mathematics and statistics was in Oldenburg, Germany to lecture at the 18th annual meeting of the German Classification Society.

Congratulations are in order

Kudos to history doctoral student Margaret Lowe who has won a dissertation grant in women's studies from the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation. She was one of 16 award winners, all of whom received a grant of $1,600, selected from 314 applicants. The grants are awarded to students in the last stages of doctoral study. Lowe's topic is "The Mind/Body Problem: How College Women Understood Body Image, 1875-1930."

The University of Massachusetts student chapter of the Club Managers Association recently won the association's National Student Achievement Award, presented at the group's national conference in San Antonio, Texas. Thirty- four students attended the conference.

tion on the ground."

Jewish Israel controls the vast majority of the natural resources of the Occupied Territories and Israel proper, he said, and since the signing of the accord, the basic power relationship between the two communities has not changed.

"All these things must be rectified or no agreement will ever take hold," Benvenisti said, concluding that Israelis are not yet willing to pay the price for such an agreement.

According to Benvenisti, the beginning of the Palestinian uprising, or Intifadah, in September 1987, is of more historical note than the September 1993 accord signing.

There was "not a clear mandate for peace," Benvenisti said. He saw the accord as an attempt to cut Israel's problems in half by relinquishing control of destitute Gaza, and Jericho, a symbolic, but politically unimportant, 16,000- person city in the West Bank.

"The Israelis will always win, but the Palestinians will never allow them to enjoy the fruit [of their victories]," he said.

"My prognosis is very bleak," Benvenisti said.

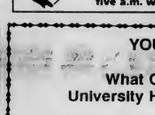
Weekend forum wraps up

Abortion rights, reproductive freedom was discussed

By MEREDITH GLASSMAN
Collegian Correspondent

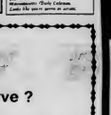
Editor's note: This is the second in a two-part series about this weekend's abortion rights conference.

The weekend-long event, "The Fight for Abortion Rights and Reproduction Freedom" at Hampshire College ended last Sunday, after discussing National Perspectives on Campus Organizing. The panel featured five political activists fighting for abortion rights.



The panelists discussed their personal experiences and the political status of reproductive freedom, and techniques for successfully organizing to raise awareness for women's issues on campus, such as reproductive freedom. The overall conference was attended by some 230 students, political activists, and representatives from a number of national organizations representing women.

The conference was successful in building alliances between a number of different organizations by featuring a variety of national representatives for organizations, such as Leslie Watson Davis of CARE (Campaign for Abortion Rights and Reproductive Equity). Davis focused on the importance of "choosing one's issue," and becoming a political activist at a level that best suits each person. Davis emphasized the importance of activism and described her personal goal "to promote a better life and status of women around the world."



Lisa Vasquez, representing Health Care - We Gotta Have It, focussed on the importance of the proposed single payer health reform. This health plan would allow all United States citizens to receive health care regardless of one's race, class, or gender. Vasquez supports the single payer health plan because it would change a perception of health care. Vasquez stated that "health care is a right," not something that should be awarded according to one's level of income.

Anna Maria Nieves sat on the panel representing SOS (Students Organizing Students), and traced her personal history leading up to her political/feminist activism. Nieves emphasized the importance of the

Open Letter to UMass Student Community from the Director of UHS Eye Care Program

Dear Students:

A recent survey indicates that a high percentage of students do not know they can receive Eye Care at the UHS. The purpose of this letter is to invite you to use the UHS Eye Care Program.

My name is Frederick Bloom. I graduated from the University of Massachusetts in 1971 and The New England College of Optometry in 1975. Since 1975 I have been affiliated with the UHS Eye Care Program. I am very proud of the program and the high quality eye care delivered to the over 70,000 individuals at the UHS Eye Care Program over the last 18 years.

I have been on the teaching faculty of The New England College of Optometry where I have lectured to practicing optometrists and supervised fourth-year student/clinicians. Recently I co-authored an article with Dr. Abel, a UHS physician, that was published in a national optometry journal. I am also credentialed in diagnostic ocular pharmaceuticals by the Massachusetts Board of Optometry. I have significant experience in all aspects of contact lens fitting and care.

Additionally, we have a well-trained, professional and caring staff with experience in contact lens care and sports vision.

The eye services offered at the UHS include the following:

1. Complete Optometry Examinations that include a health history review, visual acuity testing, refraction ie. eye glass determination, a glaucoma check, cataract screening, contact lens check for those wearing contact lenses and a retina check with pupil dilation, if necessary.
2. Reduced Rates on Spectacle Frames and Lenses from local participating opticians with a complete optometry examination at the UHS.
3. Emergency Eye Care includes the evaluation of eye disease and disorder; these may include, but are not limited to, the following: ocular foreign bodies, conjunctivitis, lid lesions, chemical eye injuries, corneal problems, inflammation of the iris, retinal problems and evaluation of ocular trauma.
4. A Comprehensive Contact Lens service including initial evaluation, fitting if necessary, follow-up care, and same day service on many contact lenses due to our large in-house inventory, all fittings are done by eye doctors experienced in contact fitting and care. We takes great pride in being able to fit many people who have had trouble in the past using contact lenses.

Patient feedback of those who have used the UHS Eye Care Program over the years has been consistently excellent

Again, I invite you to use the UHS Eye Care Program, conveniently located on campus. If you have any questions about our service, or want to make an appointment, please call 549-2671 x244. I look forward to seeing you.

Sincerely,

Frederick H. Bloom

Straight talk about sex...

Sex. Like the song says, everybody is having it or wants it. It's an important part of our lives. Some people want to wait until they're married (I'll get back to this later), but for some of us, it's too late. I readily agree it's a great thing and everybody should be having it. However, in this age of AIDs, HIV and a myriad of other sexually transmitted diseases, you need to be careful — caretul of who you sleep with, how you sleep with them, and who they have slept with.

Marni E. Helfner

Sex involves relationships — where do we draw the line that sex begins in a relationship? For some, it's meeting a hot guy or gal at a party and sleeping with them that night. For others it means a long celibate relationship and then sex only after a commitment or marriage. At what point in a relationship does it become okay to say "So, do you want to have sex/make love/do it?" without sounding like a fool or a sex-crazed maniac?

For women, this is a hard thing to swallow. Most women truly enjoy sex — I know I do. The more the better. However, societal morals tell us that women are asexual creatures, and therefore cannot desire sex. If we do, we're seen as sluts, whores or simply mislead - the kind of girl you don't want to marry. That's a shame, really. I enjoy sex, and I know that the partners I have had relations with have enjoyed it too.

I feel the need to add here that I don't claim to have a ton of sexual experience, but because I speak frankly about sex and how it is involved in relationships, people sometimes think I'm promiscuous. For me, promiscuous means jumping from bed to bed and from relationship to relationship. My shortest relationship has been six months, and my longest has been two and a half years. I believe in serial monogamy, and I believe in long term relationships.

Anyway, getting back to sex and relationships, I think the hardest part of having sex are those awkward lengthy conversations couples need to have about past partners and relationships, AIDS, safer sex and the consequences of possible pregnancy. If you read this column on a regular basis, you know I believe in honesty — and that conflicts with those awkward conversations.

I have a problem starting any of these conversations, especially the last one. I have a nasty habit of getting involved with men who are politically opposite to me. I am openly and defiantly pro-choice. The men I date are usually openly and defiantly pro-life. This leads to all kinds of arguments and discussions.

This is not because I want to change their minds, but because they need to realize that if I became pregnant at this point in my life, I would probably have an abortion (please note: I practice safer sex, but as well all know there is no 100 percent safe birth control device). I would not carry the pregnancy to term for several reasons, including the fact that I am not emotionally, physically and mentally ready to have a baby. I have my whole life in front of me, and I won't waste all the hard work I've put in so far so that my life will be forever changed by a baby. Even if I put it up for adoption, my life is changed, knowing that a part of me is out there somewhere, and I didn't have it together enough to take care of it.

Another thing — how do you tell someone that you've had HIV testing? Of course, people automatically assume if you're having a test, you must be sleeping around, even in this age where everyone is at risk. Well, I don't think I've been promiscuous, and I've been tested. I recently learned that my last partner slept with another woman while sleeping with me. I can never be sure that they practiced safer sex, and I'm stuck with tremendous anxiety until I get the results. Telling your partner about previous relationships is one thing, but discussing your previous sex life is another.

The only discussion I don't have a problem with is the safer sex issue. I expect all my partners to practice safer sex. So many options are available - dental dams, the pill, diaphragm, condoms, etc. — that there's no excuse not to use one.

If you can't get it together to practice safer sex, you shouldn't be having sex.

I think abstinence can be a good thing. Sex can often cloud your thoughts. I have stayed in bad relationships because I couldn't stand the thought of not having someone to sleep with. Abstinence can help you to see that perhaps the person you've been having sex with is probably the last person you should be with.

It also gives you the opportunity to realize that there is more to relationships than sex. Things like friendship, laughter, trust, good times and good smiles. The best relationships have been with people who have been my friends first, and were my friends last.

Sex is a great thing, but only if you've got the foundation to make a relationship last. Otherwise, life is just a series of orgasms.

Marni E. Helfner is a Collegian columnist.

Will wonders never cease?

There are some things which really make me wonder. Here's a sample of things which make me shake my head:

The box covers to board games: I was looking through my closet over the weekend and came across the game Life. Growing up, I played this game semi-religiously and never once did I strike the pose that any one of the family members on the box cover makes.

Jeff Crofts

I mean, gimme a break. Each person, especially the father, looks as though they struck gold while playing Life. It's a pathetic joke. Really pathetic.

Tom Arnold: I happened to catch the beginning to MTV's "Rock N' Jock Softball Game" over the weekend and I couldn't believe my ears. The crowd gave Tom Arnold, the manager of the Away Boys, a bigger hand than Norman Fell, the manager of the Home Boys. Now, I know why this country is so screwed up.

When Arnold, who Howard Stern affectionately calls "Tom Ono," gets a better ovation than the great Norman Fell, something is definitely wrong. Arnold thinks he's hilarious, while he is really anything but. Fell was the definition of comedy while playing Stanley Roper on "Three's Company." Do I want to watch the "Tom Arnold Show?" In the immortal words of Fell, "Not tonight, honey. I got a headache."

Commercials for Mentos: Who came up with these? Are you in jail yet? You really should be. These ads are classic head-scratchers. First a kid grabs a camera so he can follow a pseudo-celebrity around. Then a kid cannot go climb over the bumpers of two cars to cross the street, so he decides to cut through some stiff's car instead. Finally, some woman breaks a heel while walking, so she daringly rips the heel off the other shoe and keeps on walking. Let's get some Mentos so we can act crazy. Real crazy.

My Freudian slips on the radio: During a basketball game earlier this year, instead of saying that a player needed a break on the bench or was trying to get a rest on the bench, I mistakenly combined the two words into "getting a breast on the bench." Once wasn't enough, either; I did it on three different occasions. Now I wonder what was on my mind.

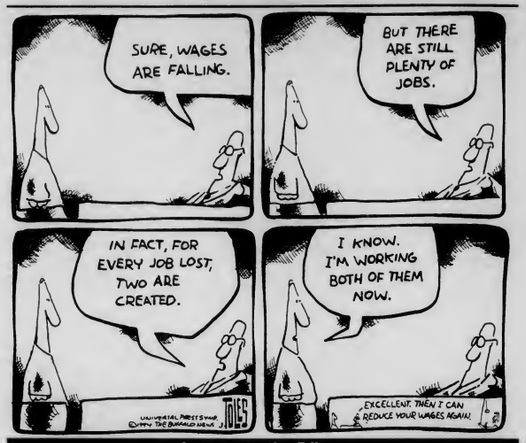
I don't feel as bad as I should, because earlier in the same game, my broadcast partner mistakenly combined the words shot and hit in the same way I erred. I just hope he wasn't thinking about his new word the way I was thinking about mine. Alright, I think I've gone a little overboard here.

Some of the things my hometown friends decide to do for fun: On Saturday afternoon a couple of my buddies went to the dog track where they decided to try an experiment. They would drop a fake $20 bill onto the ground and walk away to see what would happen. Every time, a person — and believe me, I use that term loosely — would pick the bill up, scamper off and then throw it away in disgust when they realized it was fake.

It was hilarious, according to my friends. Yeah, I can imagine. I guess all the fun, exciting things to do in a big city like Newburyport (pop. 17,000) would be the only explanation as to why my buds would play a joke on the fans at the dog track-. Actually, now that I think about it, it does sound kind of fun. Real fun. And give me a trifecta 8-4-1 while I'm there.

My past celebrity sightings: Why do I see these people where I see them? Here is my list, I saw: Liz Walker in a K-Mart buying batteries, Danny Ainge at the Liberty Tree Mall, Bob Stanley at the dog track in Seabrook, Jake "The Snake" Roberts at Dick's Variety in Newburyport, "Big" John Studd at a Celtics game, Telly Savalas at a Mobil Mart in Maine (no joke) and Robert Ulrich at a bridge near my town as he was filming a "Spenser for Hire" episode.

Of the above sightings, Studd was definitely the best. I sat next to the big guy at the C's and was able to talk to him for a little bit. He told me that wrestling was not as fake as you would think. Yeah right, and I'm sure he paid Andre ten grand after the Giant slammed him.



My last item of astonishment for today involves only two words from the eighties: Pound Puppies. Until next time. . .

BOG members like restructuring plan

To the editor:

We, current and former members of the Board of Governors (BOG), are appalled by Friday's headline reading, "BOG rejects plan: Board balks at SGA restructuring." The opinions attributed to the BOG reflect those of the Executive Committee, and all of the quotes from BOG members were also from the Executive Committee.

We, who are not members of the Executive Committee, support the restructuring of the BOG that passed at last Wednesday's SGA meeting. Though we do not see the wisdom of ceasing to fund the classified position at the BOG, we believe the plan is designed to empower students in the operation of the Campus Center.

The Student Union–Campus Center Commission has a clear mission to allocate student office space, oversee vending, handle keys to student offices and serve as an advocate for students with the administration of the Campus Center. The only thing the BOG has done well is the vending program, which the Commission can continue by maintaining the same vending practices as did the BOG.

History shows that the BOG has done poorly in its responsibility to allocate student office space. RSOs have had belongings stolen while the BOG moved them, and groups that have been around for years have been threatened with loss of space, or have actually lost space. The Commission, with fresh membership and without an unreasonable commitment to status quo, will not allocate space arbitrarily.

As student advocates, the BOG does not send a representative to the weekly Campus Center Department Heads' meetings, the BOG does not review the Campus Center budget (as it is charged to do in its constitution), and the BOG rarely even disagrees with the Campus Center administration. This inaction is because every year new boards look for direction from the BOG's advisor, the director of the Campus Center.

The Campus Center administration, desiring a passive boards, discourages real action and any communication between the BOG and the student governments. There is effectively no student voice in the operation of the Campus Center. The Commission will be staffed by students who know the concerns of students and student groups in the complex, have strong ties to the student governments, and they will not be influenced by the Campus Center administration.

We applaud the creation of the Student Union–Campus Center Commission as one of the most important actions of student government this year.

Tutors can learn while they teach

To the editor:

There is one class offered on campus that is like no other, a class that allows you to be both teacher and student by tutoring at local schools. TEAMS, Tutoring Enrichment Models for Schools, Education 497J, offers UMass students the opportunity to work in middle and high schools tutoring primarily English as a Second Language students in all subject areas.

The students come from all around the world, and are working diligently to improve their communication skills using English as their primary language in school (who knows — you may even learn a few words of Khmer during the process).

Rather than sitting in another lecture, tutoring gives you a chance to learn how people learn while giving a little back to the community. TEAMS tutors are viewed as role models; as successful students that have done well in the education system. They are partnered with students needing help: on Monday you may compose an essay on the Constitution, on Tuesday you may help define parts of the circulatory system.

There is nothing more satisfying than seeing the light bulb turn on over your student's head when they understand the lesson. You know your actions have made a difference.

Students interested in TEAMS tutoring should attend the information session at Earthfoods tonight at 4:30 p.m. Students currently enrolled in the class will be available to answer questions and offer stories from the classroom.

People should unite to end suffering

To the editor:

In response to Josh Slomich's letter ["WWII comparisons inaccurate, offensive", April 11], I would like to say that there has been more than one Holocaust in this world. How can one not call what happened to the Native Americans in North, South and Central America a Holocaust? I'm sure there are other atrocities that have occurred on this planet that I am unaware of that would also be deserving of the title "Holocaust."

Why should we waste time arguing over who has the right to feel more pain, or who was the biggest victim? All oppressed and persecuted peoples have been served a great injustice, been treated unfairly and seen their families torn apart by it. What makes one loss of life or spirit more profound than another?

I do not discount the tragedy of the Jewish Holocaust for one second. It is mind-boggling that it happened and inconceivable to imagine how those who had to go through it felt.

I submit that the Jews are not the only group of people in the world who have been treated like animals, been the object of a large-scale genocidal plan, or have been loathed by a nation.

Together we could understand each other and be strong, not to mention achieve the richer life that comes through cultures sharing and building off each other. Separate we are weak, each with our own self-centered agenda.

We are not alone in this world unless we want to be. Let's acknowledge the suffering of others and not try to be the king of the mountain.

Music program is first-rate at UMass

To the editor:

I transferred here from SUNY Potsdam last fall. Potsdam is world-renowned for the Crane School of Music. I went there in the 1992-93 school year as a music education major for that reason. But as the year went on, I realized all there was to that school was its good name. The faculty did not care for the most part about how their students were doing, and there was a very high dropout rate. It goes to show how little a name can mean.

Upon coming to UMass (still as a music education major), I realized that this school has as much, if not more, to offer. The music faculty, for the most part, is well-trained and they are very concerned to see their students are doing well, and they like to help us out.

I was also astonished to find out about the low dropout rate. When I announced that I would be transferring, people couldn't believe I was actually leaving Crane for UMass. I got comments about UMass not being a good enough school, and that it couldn't offer what Potsdam did. But I now know that those comments were not true. Even my GPA has risen considerably since coming here.

The aspect, in my opinion, that is most underrated is the performance part. I am currently in the symphony band and the wind ensemble, and we have performances throughout the semester.

Unfortunately, there is a very low turnout for these performances. Most of the audience is parents and family members of the students.

It is well known that UMass has a very strong athletic department, and the turnout for those events is very high. It is disappointing that several musical groups perform great concerts and get nowhere near the recognition they deserve.

And I would like to tell all the students reading this that I'm sure that if they decided to attend a concert, they would really enjoy it. There is so much talent not being recognized, and it's very sad people might not get a chance to appreciate it.

Anchee Min discusses her autobiography

By CATHY CHANG
Collegian Staff

Some western critics have called Anchee Min's book Red Azalea a chronicle of "Counterrevolutionary Sex" or "Stolen Kisses." While the media has focused on the racier aspects of her autobiographical account of Maoist China, Min said that the book is indeed about relationships.

"It cannot be more proper to say this book is about human love and sacrifice," Min said at a reading last Friday at Amherst College. Looking not much older than her audience of mostly college students, Min spoke quiet, halting English, but her eyes and voice had an intense directness.

The book travels from Min's childhood in Shanghai, when she was forced to prove her "redness" to her peers by denouncing a teacher as a U.S. spy, to her intimate relationships, one with a woman named Yen, in a labor farm.

"I'm very embarrassed to say I don't know the definition of 'lesbian,'" Min said in halting English. "To me, that affair, it has to do more with the brain, not sex or gender."

Min explained that relationships were discouraged in the labor farm, where she and her peers spent their young adult lives building bridges and planting rice and cotton. "To have an intimacy is to risk your life" she said.

Even making friends had a cost for Min. "Being friends at the time means you have to sacrifice the only time you have to rest," Min said, explaining that most of the day was devoted to hard physical work. Min injured her back so badly carrying mud and bricks that she wouldn't be able to move.

"You wanted to die for communism, die for selflessness," she explained. "Our motive is to die to make a better world."

But Min said her motive to write the book arose out from her concern that China will continue ignore the significance of human love, even though much of communism has given way to capitalism in modern China. "The same people who made Mao are gaining from capitalism," she said.

Still, Min said no one is to blame for communism's control over China. "It's not just a flat drawing of who's the victim, who's the murderer," she said. "The tragedy of China is 'everyone for himself.'"

Min said coming to America to study at the Chicago Art Institute in 1984 gave her a new insight to view her experience. "I would never have written the same book had I not been educated," Min said. "American education taught me that it's okay to be human."

"My very first impression of this country [was that] you can say anything you want," Min said.

VIVA goes into Amherst

By JACOB W. MICHAELS
Collegian Staff

Normally when hundreds of people go someplace they leave a mess behind them. On Saturday, April 30 hundreds of students, faculty and staff will go into the town of Amherst. However, when they leave this time the town will be cleaner than when they arrived.

April 30 is the second annual "Into Amherst" community service program. Last year 400 students, faculty, staff and alumni participated in the project to clean up the town. The program is sponsored by Volunteers Vitally Involved in Action (VIVA) community service program at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst and the town of Amherst.

Volunteers will meet at 10 a.m. at the Amherst town common. They will then go to various sites, refurbishing schools, town swimming pools and community agency sites, and cleaning up conservation trails, green spaces and other public sites around town.

According to David Schimmel, chair of the VIVA council, "This is an important part of our service program to make UMass a campus that serves."

Schimmel said the event has several goals, including:

- To promote community service on campus and encourage students to develop the "service habit" regardless of their field of study.
- To encourage teamwork, providing an opportunity for students from all backgrounds to work together on problems affecting the larger community.
- To provide an example for all campus groups about the value and strength of collaboration.
- To provide students with inter-generational experiences that are generally unavailable in a youth-oriented campus culture through the involvement of seniors, children, parents of young children and town employees.
- To foster campus pride by engaging in an activity that links UMass with the national community service movement.

Gun bill cracks down on felons

By ROBERT W. TROTT
Associated Press

BOSTON — The House passed a bill Monday to take guns away from domestic abuse suspects and crack down on illegal gun traffickers.

But House members vetoed a move to link bail reform, Gov. William Weld's pet crimefighting project, to the gun control legislation.

Under the bill, which goes to the Senate, people who have had restraining orders taken out against them would have their weapons and firearms identification cards confiscated.

Passed by the House and Senate last year, the bill died as the session ran out.

The goal, supporters said, is to protect battered wives from abusive spouses bent on revenge.

"We wanted this to be the first gun bill to reach the governor's desk," said Rep. Paul Caron, D-Springfield, cochair of the Legislature's Public Safety Committee.

The bill also makes "gun trafficking" a felony crime in Massachusetts, punishable by prison sentences of three years to life, depending on the amount of guns involved.

team was honored in the Fine Arts Center. Calipari said then that the University should take pride in itself.

"The tribute was not just for the basketball team, but for the University," said Calipari, who has always claimed an interest in the University as a whole.

Earlier this year, Calipari was honored for his monetary contributions to the Tower Library. He cited the students as a major reason for his donations, which reportedly totaled over $10,000.

"I want to give back to the students," Calipari said. "What area can I give back that touches all the students? I looked at it and I said it's the library."

At that luncheon, Chancellor David K. Scott said Calipari and his contributions were good for the University.

"What John does, what the basketball team does, is a good metaphor for how we need to work for connecting the whole University internally and externally," Scott said. "Because [Calipari] and your basketball program does just that."

The Minutemen finished this season with a record of 28–7 and made the NCAA Tournament for the third consecutive year. Massachusetts, seeded No. 2 in the Midwest Region, defeated Southwest Texas State before losing in the second round to Maryland.

Doors to the Mullins Center will open at 7:45 p.m. on Friday night.

Texas is pick of week but leave Luna alone

Texas
Rick's Road
Mercury

On their third album, a group of Scots dubbed Texas to go miles farther in upholding American musical traditions than many of their contemporaries in the states.

Ricks Road is a glowing tribute to country, R&B, folk and, most notably, soul.

What cause is there for five white kids from Glasgow to be deftly covering Al Green's "Tired of Being Alone," enlisting the cameo services of Siy and the Family Stone members? I'm happily stumped.

An infatuation with a distant culture has materialized for Texas in the forceful and moving gospel of vocalist Ally McErlaine, most profoundly on take-no-crap "You Owe it All to Me" and gracefully wailing "So In Love With You."

Rugged electric guitar riffs and tastefully syncopated drumming bolster all the tunes which are pulled off with gritty blues and lightly clenched teeth.

Nothing new, just a healthy dosage of inspired, rootsy refrains put Texas on the map and give reason to check out their back catalog.

Move over Junkies. A– (A. Goulston)

Luna
Bewitched
Elektra

Every band needs an influence or two from which to draw their sound.

Nobody creates music from thin air — they hear bits and pieces of things they like and imitate them, work with them, expand them and combine them to make music.

Unfortunately, some bands don't know when to stop imitating and start creating. This is where Luna's Bewitched falls short.

You see, Luna imitate the Velvet Underground to sickening degrees. Granted, there are worse bands to imitate, but Luna simply steal the sparse and slinky guitar arrangements, reserved drumming, and song structure of the Velvets without any of the dark and edgy shadows that gave VU its depth and character. Truly, Luna leave their tunes in the boring light of the shallows.

Trax On Trax Off

The songs are not without some superficial catchiness. Light and airy tunes such as "California (All the Way)," and "Great Jones Street" breeze by without really ruffling your hair.

Slower tunes like "Bewitched" or "Sleeping Pill" are unexciting, and seem false in their exhibition of darker subjects.

It is tough to pull off sounding just like the Velvets without inviting unfair comparison.

However, my advice to Luna is, influences are to be looked to for creative inspiration, not to be imitated. C– (B. Babineau)

Mary Lou Lord
"Some Jingly Jangle Morning" 7"
Kill Rock Stars

Two years ago, Mary Lou Lord could be seen playing at subway stops all over Boston. Last year, Lord moved out to Olympia, WA and since then she has released a couple of singles on small indie labels. Now she is looked at as one of the most talented new artists on the scene.

On this single, Lord is the lead guitarist and singer and is ably backed by members of Bikini Kill.

"Some Jingly Jangle Morning" is an excellent song. it has an insanely catchy melody, and her voice has the same innocent and child–like quality.

Since the release of this single, the buzz around Mary Lou Lord has been growing rapidly. She may well be the next indie superstar, and it is hard to imagine that only two years ago she was playing subways! A– (M. Burke)

Baldwin only standout of Threesome

THE REEL WORLD
by Jon Lupo

There are a few moments in Threesome, a mostly funny and intriguing look at a contemporary college love triangle, that I was cheering. Well, not exactly jumping up and down, but cheering nonetheless for the freshness with which the film dealt with the characters' differing sexuality. There's a refreshing glibness here — frank talk without the P.C. baggage — that in its own little way is groundbreaking. Unfortunately, Threesome can only hold this up for so long, until the sharp edges of the triangle go soft, and we're left with a toothless melodrama.

But the trip there is at least interesting. Josh Charles (Dead Poets Society) plays Eddy, a serious transfer student who moves into a suite with sloppy, sex–crazed Stuart (Stephen Baldwin), the kind of guy who thinks those "Co–Ed Naked" t–shirts are actualiy clever. They bond (in one of the film's many musical montages), only to have their community shattered by the arrival of Alex (Lara Flynn Boyle), an aspiring actress who is placed in the male room because she has a male name. She decides to stay, mainly because it's her most hassle–free option.

Soon, though, the hormones start taking over. Alex finds herself attracted by the intellectual charms of Eddy, while Stuart finds himself hot for Alex, who doesn't want anything to do with him. Then Eddy starts peeking at Stuart's butt, while trying to fend an assertive Alex off.

After making vows to cool this sexual cauldron via inter– group abstinence, the trio folds into itself even more, sealing off from the outside world. This means plenty more musical montages, food fights and groping in vain.

Lara Flynn Boyle, Josh Charles and Stephen Baldwin make quite a Threesome.

But this can last only so long. Passions win over, and the coupling begins. This is where the problems start, both within the plot and the film itself.

Threesome starts off daring, but can't follow through. The film won't let Eddy be adjustedly gay (this being confused has less to do with self–exploration than an excuse to get him in bed with Alex), won't allow Stuart to be bisexual, or Alex truly defined. In the end, Threesome, like Indecent Proposal or Falling Down, seems

The Samples to perform at NoHo's Pearl Street

COURTESY W A R / RECORDS

The Samples are Al Laughlin, Sean Kelly, Andy Sheldon and Jeep MacNichol.

By ADAM GOULSTON
Collegian Staff

A score of bands tours the country or certain portions of the country without allowing themselves a pause for breath, time to collect their belongings, retrace their steps, or comprehend the magnitude of the mileage they've covered. Rather, they stare down the next stretch of interstate, not at all intimidated, and more so excited by the opportunity to do themselves one better than the last show.

Sleep, eat, practice, play–out and repeat describes the story of Boulder, Colorado's The Samples. Somewhere along the road, the foursome has paused long enough to churn out four progressively more mature albums.

Saying The Samples are touring in support of their most recent (and finest) album, The Last Drag would be like calling one of President Clinton's visits a follow–up on his inauguration. Living by the principle that a band can never practice too much or play too much, The Samples pull into Pearl Street tonight.

Fronted by the angelic refrains of vocalist Sean Kelly, The Samples have grown up considerably in their four consecutive years of touring. While The Samples, the band's wistful 1989 debut, and 1992's No Room tended to go overboard on the environmental propaganda, The Last Drag has found a niche. The quartet has struck a tempered balance between the green mind and the red–hot jam.

The intention here is not to say this is your last chance to see The Samples before they go big time, or disband or start doing three–chord, pissy music. They'll be back, mark my word. And by then you'll be dying to see them again.

Feel The Samples shakin' at Pearl Street in Northampton with Lir. Show starts at 8 p.m. Call 584–7771 for complete info.

Campion festival intrigues

By CHRISTINA ORWICZ
Collegian Staff

Second Sight Films and the Women's Center of Hampshire College presented a collection of short films by Jane Campion this past Friday and Sunday.

Featured films ranged in time between 10 and 30 minutes, and included Passionless Moments, A Girl's Own Story, Peel and Afterhours.

Like her recent films, Sweetie, An Angel at My Table, and this past year's The Piano, much of Campion's work deals with female sexuality, the ordinary moments of life, and how in these moments people can easily step into the netherworld.

This prancing between the outer world and the under world is exemplified in Campion's use of soundtrack particularly. One example of this was in Peel, as a boy's bouncing of a ball is distorted to loud, water–muffled noises, in the mind of the female character. In this way, outer reality and psychic reality are toyed with, posing the question of an individual's experiences.

Passionless Moments poses this question for a set of neighbors, each with their own peculiar psychological quirks. Mundane habits of shopping or flower–arranging and their psychic implications become topics of discussion, and as the voice–over narration at the end states, these individual and unique moments, regardless of their being unremarkable, disappear as quickly as they are formed.

Campion's discussion of female sexuality is often about the process of young girls' discovery of their own sexuality and desire; the awkward, beautiful and psychically frustrated adolescent is presented. A Girl's Own Story deals with a girl's confusion about sexuality while growing up in a dysfunctional family. She has to deal with unclear messages about either incest or sexual abuse by an adult male. The young protagonist suffers from memories of a sexual encounter while battling a strong Oedipal attachment to her father. A brave moment in the film is when we see two young girls "practicing sex" with each other, one wearing a Beatles mask of Paul.

Campion's presentation does not lead the viewer to the conclusion that the memories are either of incest or someone else. As in many of the director's other films, the film structure attempts to leave verdicts open–ended. For this, Campion has been cited as a strong feminist filmmaker, not imposing what has been characterized as the traditional decisive, male storyline.

Perhaps the biggest qualifier of Campion as a feminist filmmaker is that she allows non–friendly female characters. In Peel, the woman lead is certainly not nice, friendly or sympathetic. Campion writes and directs women characters whose personalities are multi–faceted and never one– dimensional. They can be strong, with wills the size of Australia (Ada, The Piano), who are not outwardly strong (Jean, An Angel at My Table), who are fickle, who whine — the ordinary woman.

The most interesting thing to note about Campion's early works is that many of her unique camera angles and structure style was present from her early days of direction. Does this lead me to the conclusion that filmmakers will show potential in their early works, that they either "have it" or don't? Should we be on the lookout for budding cinematic wonders at upcoming student film festivals? You never know.

Kristin Hersh to play Iron Horse

By MICHAEL MACLEAN
Collegian Correspondent

COURTESY ANDREW LATHEN

Songstress Kristin Hersh brings her music to the Iron Horse Wednesday night.

After a couple of years absence from the music scene, Kristin Hersh has returned with an album of acoustic guitar work. Hersh's Hips And Makers has achieved listener as well as critical acclaim.

"Acoustic guitar is such a beautiful texture," explains Hersh. "You can hear the sweat of the playing when there's no cord, no amplifier, often no mike."

Since Hersh put the Throwing Muses (considered by many to be one of the most original and innovative bands of the past decade) on hold for a while, much has changed in the music world. The abundance of bands that has stepped out of the small clubs and into the national spotlight has increased dramatically, and this may have caused more than a few fans of the Muses to wonder if the band might get left in the dust.

The Muses have an album due out toward the end of the year however, and in the process of recording the album, Hersh collected some of her more private works, and has recorded an album of songs that stand on their own, with very little need for augmentation.

The first single, "Your Ghost," with accompanying vocals by Michael Stipe, has been received extremely well on college radio. The more organic approach appeals to those who have been bombarded lately with some of the overproduced sounds dominating the airwaves.

"Acoustic guitar is such a beautiful texture," explains Hersh. "You can hear the sweat of the playing when there's no cord, no amplifier, often no mike." When responding to the comment that the music is not easy to listen to, she says, "I hear it's a problem — that you can't just ignore my music. Most music flirts with you, then it leaves. This music sleeps with you; it's something you have to go all the way with."

Kristin Hersh appears at The Iron Horse, Northampton, on Wednesday night at 10 p.m. Tickets are $12.50 in advance and are available at The Iron Horse and the Northampton Box Office.

Meristem rocks Hatch

Cameron's Way & Meristem
The Hatch Bar
Saturday, April 7

Not too many bands around the area can manipulate your eardrums and make you feel good, like the way punk/hardcore tinged groups Meristem and Cameron's Way can.

When the small crowd (it's a small area in which you can actually see the shows, and it is a 21+ venue which further limits attendance) loaded in for the 9 p.m. show, Meristem plugged in, and did they ever.

Meristem, made up of somber, true vocalist/guitarist Cameron Keiber, guitarist/saxophonist/backing screamer Bob Barron, bassist Corey Bretton and inspiring drummer Dennis Grabowski, can somehow be considered a new group on the scene.

With other groups like Borderland and Synaesthesia claiming to originate as far back as high school and having been around for years among years, Meristem is a true UMass product, forming at school last October.

Nevertheless, they played Thursday night like they've know each other all their lives. The unpredictable vocals of Keiber crooned and blasted their way through songs like "Loaded," "Reverend" and the cover of Jawbox's "Savory" like he was doing something he might regret later, but not at the moment.

When Barron had his guitar, he strummed hard as he could trying to reach a volume goal of beautifully symphonic, gut-wrenching chords and plenty of feedback on "Loaded." With his sax, however, Barron played support on songs like something from "The Gentle Side Of John Coltrane" as he walked all around the stage area. The rhythm section was omnipresent with Grabowski awing many.

Coming from all over and materializing of their five members over the last four years, Cameron's Way has now become a popular staple on the hardcore/rock side of the local scene.

Edmund Kelleher's voice is very quiet sometimes, and as he murmurs the way he feels over the unsuspecting PA systems, he tantalizes. Without warning, his tone becomes burdensome, and he'll display one of the most victorious screams of the valley.

The rest of the band stirs things up in a vehicle that is at once mellow and story-telling and at the next minute completely razor sharp, electric and tight as a brick.

Their songs (all originals) "The River," "Speak," "Jesus" and "Slow" showed the full band at their highest potential.

Andy Laurence, lead guitarist of the band, gave a high wave of sound for the band to surf on.

On "Sinner," rhythm guitarist Todd Cuff produced a whirling, funneling sound that could make one feel very hollow inside. Bassist Ben Murphy and Drummer JJ O'Connell rounded out the lineup with a high tension rhythm section that rang through the night like a death march.

Oyster band to storm the Iron Horse

Few bands are likely to turn your Tuesday night into a revelation, much less a revolution. That's exactly why you should head straightaway for the Iron Horse in Northampton tonight, where Britain's Oyster Band will storm the stage at 7 p.m.

One of the alternative scenes rarely discussed in the music press is that of the folk roots movement throughout the British and Celtic Isles. What began as a mix of folk music with rock forms (a la Fairport Convention) has resulted in a legion of young bands combining the drive and power of traditional folk tunes with the thunder and spirit of punk. Picture, if you will, crashing rhythm sections behind musicians slashing away on fiddles, accordions or crumhorns, and you have the idea.

Both punk and folk have always been music for the people, and their marriage was an inevitable progression. In taking a traditional Irish tune such as "Star of the County Down" and ripping it to shreds, one simultaneously denies, validates and makes history anew, and one's own.

This is what is at stake in the best folk-rock and folk-punk. It is a formula that the Pogues have since ridden to success, it is a recipe the Levellers currently use for their anarchic politics, and it is a message that for Billy Bragg has built his career; yet all may have been nowhere without the Oyster Band.

The Oysters have been around for well-nigh 12 years now, originally starting in the business as an English country dance band during that music's revival in the early '80s. Over the years, lead vocalist and melodeon maestro John Jones, guitarist Alan Prosser and fiddler extraordinaire Ian Telfer found themselves seduced by rock and roll.

The song writing became more political, the choice of cover songs more unpredictable — "I fought the law" with a country dance beat? Why not. Even the Mekons explored a fusion of Brit rock with indigenous roots on their 1983 EP The English Dancing Master, but no one came close to the rogue beat the Oyster Band laid down with their version of "Hal-an-Tow" in 1986.

Alas, it is 1994 and the world music market is on the rise. Perhaps then, it is no mere coincidence that the Oyster Band has released what may well prove to be the definitive folk crossover album, the positively brilliant Holy Bandits on the Tykodisc label. Produced by Al Scott, the man behind the knobs of folk-rockers such as the Levellers and the Sawdoctors, this recording more than delivers on a decade of promise.

In various guises, most of the songs on the new disc deal with the subject of change, and with moving physically and emotionally amongst different places and life situations. There is one ballad, a beautiful rendition of "Rambling Irishman," and the rest of the disc simply tears along at an unheard of pace.

All considered, this is music you can't afford to miss at your own peril. The best pop music results in moments of myth-making and/or myth-destruction. The Oyster Band brings tradition kicking and screaming into your face and redefines that tradition so radically that there is nothing but a world to be won onstage tonight in Northampton. This will be the gig of the year, or I buy the next pint.

The Oyster band will perform at 7 p.m. Tickets are $11.50 and available by calling 584-0610.

The Oyster Band will play a jig or two at the Iron Horse tonight. Famous for their celtic/folk style, the band was an influence for musicians such as the Pogues and Billy Bragg.

more interested in button- pushing than its characters.

But it does have its small pleasures. Threesome begins with the (true) notion that college is the place to explore, and to come of age. It taps into the highs, lows and contradictions in trying to define oneself: emotionally and sexually. There's also the dead-on self-righteous superiority in the way the characters deal with it — both in their conversations (I haven't heard this much selfish soul- searching since, well, my last deep chat with my friends), and in the film's dopey narration. Telling us things we already know, Stuart recounts the trio's exploits, complete with the smug banality (and thesaurus enriched sheen) of a freshman essay.

The performances are, unfortunately, a grab bag of pop emotion and honest inquiry. While Lara Flynn Boyle has yet to find a role to suit her, er, talents (her silly turn in Wayne's World came closest), Josh Charles seems willing to make the leap, If only the script was as well. However, the breakout jugle of this bunch is Stephen Baldwin (8 Seconds). With a taut physique almost bursting with sexual abandon (and not about to apologize for it) and a page-boy 'do, he does — as one reviewer has already pointed out — look like a walking penis. Really. Together, this threesome has passable chemistry. Alone, though, only Baldwin measures up.

If only Threesome could resist not turning the complexities of college love lives into a cute n' fuzzy farce — it becomes menage a trois by way of a potato chip commercial ("I've got the fever for the flavor of my roommate," perhaps?). In the film's quest to be both bold and mainstream (always a losing battle), it ends up a lukewarm soap opera. Threesome may have guts, but it doesn't have any balls. C+ (Hampshire Six)

Pearl Jam makes transition

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

When the pressures of the music industry fall on the shoulders of new bands, the transition from alternative to mainstream often leaves a musician's creativity behind and puts making money at the forefront. Pearl Jam is trying to change that.

Pearl Jam's American tour brought the boys from Seattle into Springfield last week, playing songs from both Ten and Vs. As I stood and watched the band electrify the crowd, there were some obvious signs of the changing music scene.

Pearl Jam's music seems to speak for a '90s generation. The band is making a transition of sorts, changing the tone of the grunge scene from angry young moshers to a rocking free world.

Pearl Jam's transition is not apparent through its music, but more through its concerts. This is a live band. Much like some of the greats such as the Grateful Dead and Pink Floyd, just listening to their CDs doesn't give you the real experience.

Lead singer Eddie Vedder's performances seem to act out the pain and anger of the fans he sings for; the youth. Although Vedder doesn't ask for the position, he finds himself the spokesperson for an alternative nation.

The band began its debut tour shortly after their first release, playing on the same bill as the Red Hot Chili Peppers in Europe in late 1991. Pearl Jam's shows were high in intensity and seemed to breed violence.

Mosh pits formed at every concert. Crazed teenagers would climb on stage not to meet the band members, but to hurl themselves head first into a sea of unfriendly arms. Stage diving, a ritual which concert goers started at Nirvana shows, left fans bloody and bruised but somewhat relieved. Much like their last song on Ten, the fans' anger shown during a concert was a release.

After dealing with the pressures of stardom, the band is putting their early experiences behind them. Pearl Jam plays with unspeakable emotion. Their shows are rollercoaster rides of highs and lows.

"Our music makes you want to jump out a window, and with one leg over the edge, pulls you back in," said Jeff Ament Pearl Jam's bassist in an interview in with Musician.

The change has been made. After Ten hit the charts staying in the top 40 for over 110 weeks, selling more than 5 million copies, Pearl Jam became more mainstream than alternative. Critics and fans alike expected the affects of fame to cause the band to "sell out," but the only thing they have sold out is every date on their current tour.

Feeling the push of their record label and the music industry to do interviews, more videos and a stadium tour, Pearl Jam pushed back. After the release of the video for "Jeremy" in 1992 the band stopped MTV's influence on their music. They refused to do videos, yet performed twice on the MTV Music Awards. Interviews were forced, but Vedder had little to say. Rolling Stone released the only in- depth story about the band and was exclusive in It's look inside lead singer Eddied Vedder's head.

Pearl Jam then passed up the greater money-making stadium tour, for a smaller arena tour to keep ticket prices down. Face value on tickets was $18 for the Springfield show. The band has also began with-holding tickets. Days before the concert the band announced a lottery for extra tickets. Pearl Jam produces live CDs, singles, and allows bootlegging at the shows. They are trying to keep the band much as it began and it's music for anyone who wants to listen.

With the recent death of Nirvana's Kurt Cobain, alternative music has suffered it's greatest loss. The need for change of the music industry is clear. Nirvana couldn't survive in the mainstream where Pearl Jam now swims. The band continues to fight to play the music they love the way they want. They could be called the "Teflon band," labels don't seem to stick. Just as Vedder said when he was accepting the award for Best Rock Video, "I thought we were grunge."

"Youth Agenda," increasing student voting, and more student involvement.

"It is great to see that young women are involved everywhere, working towards the same goals," Nieves said.

Addressing reproductive freedom directly, Andrea Miller for the Center for Reproductive Law and Policy, discussed her job in the organization and described herself as sometimes being a "propaganda person."

"What we do in this room and what we take from this room will make a huge difference by raising the level of awareness," Miller said.

According to a representative from NARRAL (National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League) we must take a stand for health care concerning women, and if we don't it could prove to be "life threatening."

Valerie Gintis, a Hampshire College alumna, led the initial planning for the next Day of Activism, which was a day commemorating the death of Rosie Jimenez. Jimenez died from having an unsafe and illegal abortion because of the highly restrictive reproduction laws against abortion, at that time. The first Day of Activism was held October 4, 1993 as a result of the efforts of organizers from last year's Abortion Rights and Reproductive Freedom conference.

Breen said Sinn Fein President Jerry Adams did not want to reject the plan outright because he did not want Sinn Fein to be seen as completely antagonistic to the British.

"Adams didn't want to reject the plan outright because he didn't want Sinn Fein to be seen in a negative light," Breen said. "Instead they said, 'We don't understand the agreement, we need clarification.' And when they say they want clarification they mean, 'Give us more.' The British have refused negotiation, and therefore we have the standoff that we have today."

Downey said there was some speculation that Adams may have been in favor of the agreement, but he was forced to reject it because accepting it would have caused a too much dissension within the IRA and Sinn Fein.

Breen said hatred between Protestants and Catholics in Northern Ireland has been caused in part by polltical and social reforms that have given Catholics rights. She said these reforms have included legislation that helps Catholics get housing and employment. Breen said this has made Protestants feel alienated. Northern Ireland is about 55 percent Protestant.

"The loyalists in Northern Ireland are far from happy," she said. "Even though Catholics are still the most deprived, they still think that Catholics are getting everything and they are getting nothing."

Breen said the violence between Catholics and Protestants in Northern Ireland is as much the fault of the Ulster Defense Force, the Protestant counterpart to the IRA, as it is the IRA.

"I don't want to make the situation seem worse than it is, but people in Catholic neighborhoods get shot regularly," she said. "If there was stop in the IRA violence tomorrow the violence on the part of the UDF would increase not decrease. The UDF is opposed to unifying the nation. They would increase the violence because they know the IRA would only stop the violence if they got what they wanted.

ties. She also said the students said the vegetable selection is very poor and in most cases are overcooked.

"What we need to do is inform students more about the ingredients in the food and the brands of food they are eating. There are some top quality brand foods here that people don't know about," she said.

Seven students, mostly from the HRTA major, were also asked questions about the food services such as the Top of The Campus and the dining commons. Anayanzi Medina, a junior HRTA major, said they were asked what could be done to improve the system.

Besides observing all of the on-campus food services, the team went to eight other college campuses in the New England area to study their services. The colleges studied were ones considered to be at an equal "academic level" as the University of Massachusetts: such as Boston University, Holy Cross University, University of Vermont and Northeastern University.

"What we found is that the other schools had more branded items such as Dunkin Donuts and Burger King; more fast food outlets," Smith said.

Nusbaum said the food services at the other universities offer a lot more. He also said the colleges, specifically Massachusetts Institute of Technology, have more resources and a different environment.

"A lot has to do with the presentation of the food. A lot of these colleges has a nice set-up, which makes the food look more appetizing," Shea said.

Another request made by students is to have debit cards. These cards allow students to use their meal plan cards both in the dining commons and other food services available on campus.

Vincent G. Dethier Award

For Promoting Civility in Human Relations

The late professor Vincent Gaston Dethier was not only recognized as a scholar, but as a humanitarian, a faculty member who cared about people. In recognition of his longstanding commitment to civility issues, Samuel F. Conti, Vice Chancellor for Research, Graduate Studies and Economic Development and Chancellor David K. Scott have established the Vincent Dethier Award.

Who is eligible?: Faculty at UMass Amherst
Award: $3,000
Deadline: Nominations must be received by 4:00 pm, Friday, April 29, 1994
Criteria: Extent to which a faculty member serves as:

(1) a role model of civility in and out of class for students

(2) a catalyst for faculty engagement with civility issues

(3) an actual participant in institutional change and in public commitment to these values.

For further information and to submit nominations contact J.S. Toyama, Graduate School, 528 Goodell, 545-5284.

More trouble for Whalers

HARTFORD, Conn. — Hartford Whalers defenseman Bryan Marchment was arrested for drunken driving on his way home from a charity event.

Marchment was arrested Friday night by Farmington police while driving home from the Whalers' Wives First Casino Night in Hartford, director of player personnel Kevin Maxwell said Sunday night.

The casino night benefits the Children's Cancer Fund at the University of Connecticut.

Marchment, 24, of Canton is due in court April 18.

The incident was the third alcohol-related arrest for the Whalers in three weeks.

Whalers players Pat Verbeek, Geoff Sanderson, Mark Janssens, Chris Pronger, Todd Harkins and Marc Potvin and assistant coach Kevin McCarthy were arrested March 24 in Buffalo, N.Y., after a nightclub altercation. They pleaded guilty to a reduced charge of trespassing.

Bichette spoils Kruk's return

PHILADELPHIA — On a day the fans cheered loud and long for John Kruk, Dante Bichette silenced them with one swing.

Bichette hit his fifth homer of the season, a two-run shot in the eighth inning that sent the Colorado Rockies past Philadelphia 8-7 Monday and spoiled the Phillies' home opener.

Kruk, playing only six hours after undergoing radiation treatment for testicular cancer, got three hits in his first game this season. He got up with the tying run on second in the ninth inning with one out, but looked at strike three.

A sellout crowd of 58,627 saw the NL champions receive their rings in a pregame ceremony and reserved its loudest ovation for Kruk. He rewarded the rooters with an RBI double in his first at-bat and went 3-for-5.

Panthers, Isles battle for playoffs

MIAMI — The team that leads the NHL in ties now needs to win.

The expansion Florida Panthers can earn a berth in the Stanley Cup playoffs with victories in their final two games, both at Miami Arena.

Anything less than a pair of wins may allow tie New York Islanders to edge out Florida for the eighth and final Eastern Conference playoff berth.

who scored seven goals in the loss. Senior co-captain Rachael Splaine rounded out the scoring, adding one goal while dishing out two assists.

The St. Joe's game was a far cry from the Villanova match-up just a day earlier. UMass came out storming, rifling 37 shots and severely outplaying the Hawks.

"It was a great team effort, this was probably our best all- around game of the year," said Den Hartog.

UMass had a balanced scoring attack with five players figuring in the scoring. Walsh led the way again.

Walsh has been nothing less than amazing this year, scoring 22 goals in seven games, including 12 goals this weekend alone.

both events," said Giroux. "Coming off and injury she performed quite well."

UMass had three Minutewomen finish in the top four in the hammer. Christie Martin placed second with a throw of 143'7", Stephanie Townson placed third with a throw of 127'5" and Natalie Landry placed fourth with a throw of 117'3".

Both Martin and Townson's throws were personal records and also qualified them for New Englands.

Freshman Kimberly Downey came in first in the long jump with a jumb of 16'10 1/2", a personal record for her, and also qualified for New Englands.

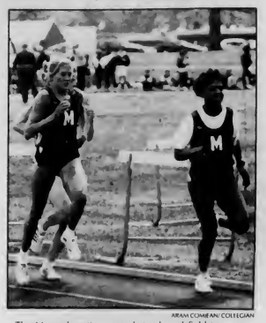
Natalie Hart won the discus with a throw of 137'4" and placed third in the shot put with a throw of 40'11".

"I was very pleased with everybody [in the field events]," said Giroux. "They did very well."

The UMass sprinters had a tough time all day with the tough wind going against them but still pulled out strong performances.

Freshman Anya Forrest won the 100m high hurdles with a time of 15.2 and qualified for New Englands. Another freshman, Angela Sorge, also qualified for New Englands in the 100m high hurdles.

In the 100m Pasha Summers came in second place with a time of 13.3, just .2 seconds slower than the first place finisher. Downey placed fourth with a time of 13.4.



"She's [Summers] been struggling so she did pretty well in that race," said Assistant Coach Nancy Cominoli.

Freshman Erica Doyle continued her winning ways with a first place finish in the 400m, running for a time of 59.2, and Cheryl Lyons placed fourth with a time of 64.1.

The Minutewomen had a tough time in the 200m with Forrest and Downey placing third and fourth respectively.

"We didn't do too well in the 200m, but, of course, it was pretty windy," said Cominoli.

In the 800m, Jen Waeger placed third with a time of 2:23.5.

And then there was Robin Hood's Brother Clark, who left England to seek his fortune in Australia and was never heard from again.

Your Horoscope

By Jessa Dove

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A transformative fear or mind will be counterproductive today. Once you have made an important decision, do not look back. Second-guessing yourself is a waste of energy.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): To make more money, you must be willing to make tough decisions. Simple techniques won't work today. Unexpected developments enable you to create a positive cash flow.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Long-range financial planning will produce excellent results. A stock market tip could lead to a very nice dividend. Set aside money for a small child's education.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): The reason you do not own a resource may be that you do not know enough about it. Market research helps expand your professional and personal horizons.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Romance looks promising. A lively, fresh approach will bring success. When the chips are down, an old friend rises to the occasion. Be appreciative.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Get serious about physical fitness. It will improve your looks as well as your health. Be certain your doctor approves of a special diet. Ask probing questions about an investment plan. Expect investing answers!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Things will go swimmingly if you exert yourself satisfactorily. The lure of financial gain should provide fins on incentive! You feel a new sense of freedom in your personal life. Be discreet about romance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): With the spotlight shining your way, you would be wise to invest yourself in positive terms. An auspicious idea may await your go-ahead. A romantic setting prompts a heart-to-heart discussion. Be gentle.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Try not to complicate things by experimenting with new methods if the ones already being used are perfectly satisfactory. Be cautious in pursuing a new romance.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Letting your imagination run out of control could lead to an unpleasant confrontation. A practical approach works best. Keep any suggestions to yourself until proof is available.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Keep an open mind. A lively exchange of ideas will give you plenty to think about ... as it should. Avoid taking romantic risks, even small ones. A so-called "bad guess" could turn out to be a winner.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Keep a low-profile today. Experiment when around people who behave oddly. Studying art, science or the past will inspire you. Write a family history to give to your children; they will love it!

six quite handily. That really puts us in good shape,"

The Minutewomen won two of the three doubles matches on the day to close out the match. Sitton and Watts had to come from behind in the first set to win, 7-6, 6-1.

Scheckner and Durant won their match by default and Edwards and Kathy Schmidt lost to Kathleen Haley and Sara Brozek.

matches. The Minutemen came away with two victories in the doubles.

"I'm pleased that we took two out of the three doubles," Dixon said. "We took that momentum right into the singles matches."

The improvement that the Minutemen have made has Dixon believing that the team can have a strong season.

"I think that this team now is going to end up with a fairly good record for the rest of the season because their tennis has improved with each match that we play," Dixon said.

The Minutemen will travel to Chestnut Hill this afternoon to take on Boston College.

Tie–breaks end run for Minutemen trio

By DAVID GLEESON
Collegian Staff

Over the weekend, three University of Massachusetts gymnasts traveled to West Point to participate in National Eastern Regional competition. While no Minuteman gymnast received a bid to the final level, the NCAA Nationals, all had top scores that put them on the bubble between qualification and the bitter trip home.

Senior co–captain Jason Braud qualified for Regionals in floor exercise and vault, Ruslan Shupak qualified for still rings and vault, and Gabe Columbus qualified for high bar.

Braud missed his vault and failed to be among the top 25 finishers in that event, but scored big on floor exercise. Braud was tied for sixth place at the meet and tied for the third and final spot to Nationals with his 9.725 on floor. Braud missed Nationals due to the rules that determine tie breaking send the gymnast with the higher season average.

"Jason Braud's not qualifying is really heart breaking," said UMass Coach Roy Johnson. "I thought his routine was one of the top three in the meet."

Shupak scored a 9.5 on the still rings, which was only good enough for 18th, but tied for the second highest score in the meet on the vault with a 9.45.

Due to the NCAA rules in dealing with ties, Shupak failed to qualify for Nationals even though he earned a tie for the second highest score.

"He had a real shot at being an All–American, now he won't get a chance," said Johnson. "You need to break ties, but it's too bad he doesn't get a chance to go and try at Nationals."

Columbus was the third gymnast to narrowly miss out on the "big meet" when he tied for the third spot on high bar, but again was bumped due to the tie rule.

Johnson said that the routine was Columbus' second best of the season and it was particularly nice because of additions to the routine that Columbus picked right up.

"We added some new parts and he hit them beautifully," said Johnson. "Gabe was very happy. I don't think we could ask for anything more."

Both freshmen, Shupak and Columbus, missed Nationals by .05 points.

Johnson said that while it was disappointing that no Minutemen qualified for Nationals, the meet was a success and an honor for the gymnasts who competed.

"We were really happy to go to a meet with this type of competition and have three great performances," said Johnson. "It was great."

Season ends for women

Gymnasts finish sixth in Regionals held at URI

By ANTHONY GUIDO
Collegian Staff

It was a tough ending to a successful transition year for the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team at the NCAA Northeast Regionals last Saturday at Rhode Island.

UMass placed sixth with a score of 186.925 in its last meet of the season. New Hampshire won the meet with a score of 191.95, ahead of defending champion Penn State at 191.475.

"In the end, we were not deep enough to pick it up after some gymnasts were sick and struggled," Assistant Coach Rene Lyst said.

Shaheda Keels led the Minutewomen with a 10th place finish in the all–around, including a seventh place showing in the floor exercise.

Keels scored a 37.875, followed by freshmen Lianne Laing (37.325) and Tara Swartz (37.05). Swartz came in fourth on the bars with a score of 9.775.

"Keels was great, she was only about half a point away from qualifying for Nationals," Lyst said.

UMass started out with good scores on the vault, led by Laing's 9.725. Swartz and Angela Jent each registered a 9.675 as the team scored a 47.975.

The Minutewomen picked up a team score of 46.700 on the uneven bars, led by Swartz at 9.775. Keels received a 9.475 and Jent was third for the Minutewomen at 9.30.

UMass hit on only three of six routines on the balance beam, ending up with a score of 46.20. Laing led with 9.550 and Stephanie Martino scored a 9.40 in what Lyst called her best performance of the year.

"After the beam, we were still in it. We were looking at the top three, but everything fell apart in the floor exercises," Lyst said.

The Minutewomen combined for a 46.05 on the floor, usually their highest scoring event. Keels topped the team with a 9.675, despite getting a point deduction for going out of bounds. Laing scored a 9.30 and Margaret Furtado picked up a 9.125.

"All year long we'd been able to overcome our troubles, but we lost all our momentum and couldn't get it back," Lyst said.

Karen Olsson and Jana Reardon of champion New Hampshire tied for the all–around title with scores of 38.80. April Polito of Penn State was third with a 38.775.

"UNH was the only school not to fall during their routines. The meet was full of gymnasts failing; Penn State, who has the most talent, had seven falls," Lyst said.

"We had a great season; this disappointment doesn't diminish all that we've accomplished."

Baseball finishes sweep of St. Joseph's

By ANTHONY GUIDO
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts baseball team got another strong pitching performance and completed a three–game sweep of St. Joseph's with a 7–4 victory at Earl Lorden Field yesterday.

Freshman righthander Chad Paronto pitched eight strong innings, giving up only two earned runs on four hits and four walks while striking out two.

Lead–off hitter Ryan Jette again set the tone for UMass (9– 11, 6–2 in Atlantic 10) by going 4–for–5 with two runs scored, two RBI and a stolen base.

"It was great to sweep them, we're in good shape in the A–10," Coach Mike Stone said.

Jette got his stolen base (nine steals in 10 attempts on the season) in the first inning after singling, and Justin Howard hit a one–out RBI double to left–center to put UMass ahead 1–0. The Minutemen scored at least a run in the first inning of all three games against the Hawks.

The Minutemen scored again in the second, as freshman center fielder Nate Murphy plated Jeff January with a single to center field.

St. Joseph's had the potential for a big inning in the fourth, but could only cut the lead in half. Dan Lauer led–off with a walk. Next, Mike Sharkey popped out to right, only to be awarded first base on catcher's interference.

Paronto fielded a ground ball back to the mound and fired to third baseman Brad Gorrie, who threw to first base to complete the double play, the first of three for UMass. Matt Collins then hit a two–out single to left field, scoring Mike Sharkey.

"Our defense has been great; we are so solid up the middle, everyone else picks it up around them," Stone said.

UMass struck again in the fifth when right fielder Bill Knight lined an two–run double down the left field line making it 4–1, scoring Jette and Howard who had singled.

The Minutemen put two more runs on the board in the sixth. Gorrie lofted a sacrifice fly to center with the bases loaded scoring January. Jette then delivered an RBI single, scoring Pelis.

Paronto gave up a unearned run to St. Joseph's in the seventh inning when pinch–hitter Eric Mullen singled home Mike Collins. Paronto struggled throughout the eighth by walking two Hawks and then yielding a two–run double to Bill Weimgaitner.

Jette provided UMass with an insurance run in the bottom of the eighth with his second RBI single after Murphy walked and stole second.

Greg Dowd once again closed out the game for the Minutemen, pitching a scoreless ninth for his third save.ass hosts local rival Amherst College this afternoon at 3 p.m. at Lorden Field.

Minutewomen keep streak alive, win two against Owls

By TED KOTTLER
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts softball team extended its winning streak to six and boosted its record above .500 for the first time in 1994. UMass, now 9–8, swept the Temple Owls, 4–3 (9 inn.), 2–1, yesterday at Totman Field.

Rachel Lawson's two–out, bases–loaded single into right field scored Sam Cardenas and broke a 3–3 tie in the bottom of the ninth in the opening contest. In the process, Lawson added to her team–leading RBI total, which is now eight.

The Owls preyed first on UMass in game one. They loaded the bases with no outs, and Daut, who had issued just 14 walks in over 74 innings, gave first baseman Stephanie Ritter a run–scoring free pass that made it 1–0. With the bases still loaded, Teri Galazin singled to left, scoring Trexler for a 2–0 margin.

Two outs later, Marietta Atkinson plated Ritter with a single to centerfield, and Galazin was thrown out at home to end the inning.

In the home half of the second, Tracy DuEst's center field sacrifice fly scored Michele Shaw, trimming the lead to 3–1. Daut settled down, not allowing any further scoring, and she actually appeared to gain strength. She allowed only two hits in the final five frames and recorded her first 1–2–3 inning in the sixth.

In the fifth, Chris Martens singled to center to drive in Cardenas and tie the game. Martens then stole third, placing the go–ahead run in scoring position with two outs, but Lawson and Shaw both popped up to Beighley.

Temple had a great chance in the top of the seventh, putting runners on first and second with two outs, but DuEst added a defensive gem to her two RBI. Crabb poked a hard grounder toward first, which normally would have been Lawson's, if not for her limited range due to a herniated disc that still ails her). Knowing this, DuEst chased it down quickly and flipped it to Lawson to send it to extra innings.

UMass loaded the bases for Martens in the ninth with one out, but Beighley came home with her ground ball, leaving it up to Lawson, 0–4 on the day to that point. The senior co– captain launched a long single to right and Daut improved to 6–4.

Now that UMass had at last evened its won–loss record, it was up to Dani Ortega to keep the ledger positive.

Ortega allowed only one hit through six innings, but the seventh gave her a scare. Crabb, Trexler and Ritter singled consecutively to lead off the frame, and Byard ended Ortega's scoreless inning streak at 17 and two–thirds with a sacrifice fly that made it 2–1.

Women's lax beats St. Joe's

By MIKE PINDER
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team came away with one out of two this weekend in Philadelphia, defeating St. Joseph's, 12–7, while falling to a tough Villanova squad, 12–8.

UMass, coming off consecutive victories against Springfield and Holy Cross, came up just a bit short against the Wildcats on Saturday.

The Minutewomen were held scoreless in the first half by Villanova's smothering defense and relentless offensive rushes, but came out gunning, scoring all eight of their goals in the second half, outscoring Villanova 8–5.

"This was the flattest first half of the year for us, but it was also the strongest second half of the year for us," said Coach Francesca Den Hartog. "We just got outplayed in the first half and couldn't get back into it.

"We didn't follow our game plan. Our passing and right denial 'D' was lacking for much of the game."

Track team unbeaten

The University of Massachusetts women's track team overcame an extremely tough wind to handily defeat Boston College, Rhode Island and Boston University on Saturday at the Llewelyn Derby Track.

UMass finished with 70 points while BC had 40, URI had 39 and BU had 31. With the win, UMass remains undefeated at 3–0.

Coach Julie LaFreniere was ecstatic and surprised about the amount of points the Minutewomen won by.

"I didn't expect to beat BC by that much. I didn't expect to run away with it," said LaFreniere. "It was a great way to start the season."

UMass dominated the field events, which, according to Assistant Coach Jim Giroux, was big.

"We got a lot of points in field events and that definitely makes a difference. BC and URI really struggled in that area," said Giroux.

Freshman Heather Brown easily placed first in the javelin with a throw of 137'11", which was over 20 feet more than the nearest competitor.

"The conditions weren't too good but she competed really well," said Giroux.

Junior Janey Meeks picked up two first place finishes with wins in the high jump and triple jump. Meeks jumped 5'2" in the high jump and 38'7" in the triple jump.

"We were quite pleased with Janey winning

Minutewomen ace Lady Stags

Last Thursday's postponement of the University of Massachusetts women's tennis match was just a delay in what was inevitable for Fairfield University.

A loss.

The Minutewomen won eight of the nine matches yesterday to run their record to 4–1 for the season.

Coach Judy Dixon had expected a much stronger Fairfield team.

Liesl Sitton continued to dominate her opposition. Sitton combined strong play on both the baseline and at the net to dispose of Melissa Gassler, 6–1, 6–0.

Elizabeth Durant, playing in the No. 2 singles spot, used consistent baseline play to defeat Amy Hanson. Durant won, 6–3, 6–2.

The No. 3 singles match, between UMass' Sonnybelle Martinez and Fairfield's Sheila McCarthy, proved to be the best of the day.

Martinez battled through a first set tie–breaker, 7–6(7–5) and played well on serve in the second set. Up 4–3 in the second, Martinez dominated her next two service games for the win. McCarthy sailed a forehand into the net to give Martinez the victory, 6–4.

The presence of Martinez in the No. 3 spot has allowed Stacey Scheckner to drop into the four spot. The move has paid dividends.

Scheckner won yesterday, 6–2, 6–2, and is undefeated this season.

Lesley Watts had an easy time with Julie Callahan defeating her, 6–1, 6–0. Mary Edwards blanked Sara Brozek, 6–0 in the first set but struggled in the second set winning, 7–6(7–3).

"We always hope that we'll win at one, five and six," Dixon said. "We're able to pick up four, five, and

The first win of the season for the University of Massachusetts men's tennis team came at the expense of Holy Cross. Yesterday afternoon, the Minutemen's second victory of the season was registered against Holy Cross.

The win moves UMass' record to 2–4. The Minutemen dominated the match, winning 7–0.

"Everybody played much better tennis," Coach Judy Dixon said. "The fact that we didn't lose a set really means how much better we're getting with every match."

Last Thursday, Ankur Baishya lost his No. 1 singles match but rebounded with a win yesterday. Baishya defeated Chris Green, 6–4, 6–2.

"Ankur really exhibited the difference in intensity of the team all the way around," Dixon said. "What Ankur did is really what the team did. That is coming out with much more mental preparation."

"Our team really knows how to rise to the challenge. This is a big hearted team," Dixon said. "The fact that Holy Cross said that they were going to come back and beat us, got a lot of us prepared and it showed today."

Keith Murray won his match, 6–2, 6–3 over Matt Smith and Kevin Hicks sailed to a 6–3, 6–2 victory. In the No. 4 singles spot, Joe Twer won his match, 6–2, 6–3, Greg Hsaio won, 6–3, 7–5 and Darren Tow won, 6–1, 6–1.

"It was a real good win for the team," Joe Twer said. "it's a nice way to keep rolling into the season."

Rebels advance in Rwanda capital

KIGALI, Rwanda (AP) — Amid the crash of mortar fire, French and Belgian paratroopers evacuated the last large group of foreign refugees Tuesday as a major rebel force moved into the capital from the north.

The rebels, mostly members of the minority Tutsi tribe, appeared to be winning control of the capital, United Nations officials said.

The U.N. commander in Rwanda, Gen. Romeo Dallaire, said rebels advancing from the north had linked up with rebels already in Kigali. There was no sign that the rebels were being significantly hampered by government forces, he said.

There was still fighting in the city as night fell, the British Broadcasting Corp. reported.

A rebel spokesman in New York said the rebels hope to "neutralize" government forces and take full control of Kigali by Wednesday.

Serbs condemn NATO air strikes

SARAJEVO, Bosnia–Herzegovina (AP) — Bosnian Serb gunners held back from launching attacks on Gorazde and challenging NATO again Tuesday, but dueled with government troops in the hills outside the Muslim–held town.

Serb leaders lashed out at NATO for staging air strikes Sunday and Monday on Serb forces surrounding the eastern enclave, and the Serbs' military commander ordered his troops to shoot down any NATO planes they see.

"Let him try. They shoot back," said Michael McCurry, a U.S. State Department spokesman in Washington. "The NATO aircraft are well equipped to handle anti–aircraft fire."

Government and Serb troops were reported fighting over some high ground southeast of Gorazde. But U.N. officials said Serb artillery had not shelled the town since Monday evening after two NATO jets struck Serb positions for the second time in two days.

The air raids dramatically heightened Western involvement in the 2–year–old war over Bosnia's secession from Serb–dominated Yugoslavia.

Clinton's pick declines Court offer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton's Supreme Court search was scrambled Tuesday as Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell abruptly withdrew from consideration. Mitchell said he was worried taking the job might hurt the chances of health care reform passing this year.

Clinton called Mitchell "my leading candidate" and said he had told the senator Monday night: "I'd like to appoint you to the Supreme Court if you think we can do our work here this year."

But the president said Mitchell, after saying he would relish a chance to serve on the court, lamented that "the timing is not good" and concluded, "I believe I should stay in the Senate." in bowing out, Mitchell told reporters he had concluded he might not be able to undergo the demanding confirmation process and keep his promise to shepherd health care reform through the Senate this year.

Mitchell served briefly as a federal judge in his native Maine, and his political skills were viewed as an important asset on a court narrowly divided on many controversial issues.

Republican Club's pres. denies fraud

By TRACY MONAHAN
Collegian Staff

Greg Zenon, president of the recently–suspended University of Massachusetts Republican Club, has denied charges of embezzlement of club funds made by a rival for leadership of the organization.

The future of the club is still unclear, because a premature ending to last week's Student Government Association meeting has stalled motions involving the club.

Greg Zenon, president of the suspended club, claims that his involvement in the incident was misrepresented in the Collegian's April 5 article on the issue.

Dan Flynn, editor–in–chief of The Minuteman, accused Zenon of embezzling funds and mismanagement of the club. He also admitted to threatening Zenon with physical violence.

In a statement given to the Collegian, Zenon said he is "innocent of the malicious, false, slanderous allegations made against me by Dan Flynn."

He said the Republican Club and the Silent Majority are two separate registered student organizations which share office space and sometimes work together. The Silent Majority publishes the Minuteman.

Over the last two and a half years, while editor–in–chief, Zenon said he was paid $160 which covered the costs of computer disks and paper; photocopying, computer fees and laser printing; long distance calls to advertisers and a Washington sponsor, the Madison center; gas costs; and mailing costs.

According to Zenon, the money ran out and he put himself on payroll to cover expenses, a practice he said many editors in the past had used. Flynn said this practice is illegal because the contract from the Madison Center specifically states that an editor cannot take a paycheck.

Last semester when Zenon became president of the club, Flynn took over as editor–in–chief. Zenon said this is when the "SODOMY=DEATH" issue came out.

He said he told Flynn the article would cause the paper to lose its funding and when it did, Flynn came to him to use Republican Club funds to support the paper. Zenon refused.

Flynn said this is untrue and Zenon actually produced the issue in the office of the Index, the University yearbook for which Zenon works. When the funding was lost, Flynn said Zenon offered to give the publication $500, but later rescinded the offer.

Flynn said the Minuteman has raised over $4,000 this semester and has produced more issues than in past years.

Zenon said the only proof his opponents claim to have of embezzlement is the Minuteman Student Activity Office monthly statements, which he says are not examined closely enough to prove anything. He said he feels the Collegian article didn't show the two sides of the story and negated the efforts of more than 60 pro–Weld supporters who work within the club.

Zenon said he believes he is being harassed because he is "not anti–gay enough, too pro–choice, and too pro–Weld."

Warring factions within the club came to a head on March 28, when a private meeting was held between Zenon, Flynn, SGA Attorney General Matt Malone and Matthew Pavesi, the acting registrar of the SGA.

At this meeting, Pavesi handed down the decision to suspend the club.

Tonight's SGA meeting will decide the future of the suspended club.

Panel examines Cuba

Country finds alternatives to save the revolution

By JUAN JOSE CHACON QUIROS
Collegian Staff

The Cuban revolution has undertaken, since the disintegration of the Soviet Union, a process of change to guarantee its own survival, "Cuba: Socialism Under Duress," a panel discussion that took place last night at Hampshire College, analyzed this transition period in Cuba.

Andrew Zimbalist, a professor from Smith College, examined the imbalance brought about by this changes. "This is the end of Cuban socialism; it's been over for a period of time," said Zimbalist.

He described how Cuba had reacted to the collapse of 85 percent of its trade after the U.S. embargo, and 90 percent after the end of the Soviet Union. This last event translated into a contraction of about 40 percent of the economy in 1994 from the level of 1990, after an average growth of 4.5 percent between 1959 and 1989.

According to Zimbalist the response has been to undertake structural changes: "the rules of the game under international capitalism are different than the ones from international socialism." However, Zimbalist stressed that even under this terrific economic imbalance the system still "believes in full employment and stable wage levels."

Carol Bengelsdorf, a Hampshire College professor, analyzed the choices for the Cuban Revolution. She explained how the population is "treated like children" although they are politically mature. According to Bengelsdorf the political and economic reforms have been centered around not changing politically.

Although she believes Castro's opening is aimed at "dissagregating discontent," Bengelsdorf qualified as "low intensity democracy" the U.S. plans for post–Castro Cuba. She pointed out how individual solutions have been given to the question of survival whereas before they used to be treated collectively.

Carmen Diana Deere, a UMass economist, described a different situation in the countryside, "a view from below." She explained how, in World Bank jargon, the privatization of state farms and its conversion to cooperatives represents a "decentralization of authority," the creation of new incentives, "individual entrepreneurship," and "autonomy from the state."

The process has been democratized; workers vote for leadership positions and coworkers and decide on investment. Deere also argued that these changes can be defended in a revolutionary view, as a "redefinition of more participatory forms for workers. . . a new path." She called these reforms as "a brilliant move by Fidel," since almost a million workers will now become "the political backbone of resistance," in case of an "invasion from Miami."

The last speaker, Flavio Risech–Ozeguera, a Cuban from Hampshire College, analyzed the path for closer ties between La Havana and Miami. A conference will take place later this month to "legitimize the Cuban–American opposition to the embargo," attract Miami dollars and "stimulate joint ventures."

He described the opposition to this conference both in Cuba and Miami. Risech–Ozeguera criticized the Cuban National foundation for a letter, Alpha 66, the paramilitary branch, sent to the participants to "declare [them] a military objective." To this threat he replied "I'm more eager to go now."

Man memorizes entire text to Homer's 'Iliad'

By JEFF DONN
Associated Press

AMHERST, Mass. — Retirement brought Stephen Powelson lots of spare time — maybe too much: he decided to memorize Homer's "Iliad" in the ancient Greek.

All 600 pages, two volumes, 15,693 lines, more than 200,000 syllables, by the retired auditor's count.

Now, 16 years into the project, he knows 14,800 lines of verse by heart. He has spent about an hour a day — 5,840 hours in all — intoning the classic poem.

How did he do it?

"Will, discipline and a touch of madness," he said.

On Monday, Powelson regaled a dozen classics professors and students with about 650 lines in an hour of reciting at the University of Massachusetts. One long section was assigned to him the night before to prove he wasn't cheating by simply memorizing a few selections to recite.

Powelson, 76, who lives in Paris, was in the midst of a national tour to show off his homeric memory and promote the classics in a society more familiar with Homer Simpson, Jimmy the Greek and Classic Coke.

"Every person has a secret desire to achieve immortality. My way is to absorb into myself something that is immortal," said he.

His campus host, classics professor Edward Phinney, said Powelson's near–completed epic feat lends credence to the theory that the "Iliad" was the work of a single poet who crafted and conveyed the entire unwritten poem by memory. Some scholars believe the poem was actually fashioned by a group of artists in the same school.

"It means that the entire poem can be grasped by one mind. Students think it's endless," Phinney said.

Powelson, an auditing executive and Harvard graduate, was forced into retirement at 60 when his employer closed its Paris office, where he was based. As a pastime and mental stimulant, he opened Homer's grand tale of the Trojan War and the terrible consequences of Achilles' wrath.

Powelson had not read it since his prep school days at Phillips Academy in Andover.

He set about memorizing the entire poem, which was created around 800 B.C. and sung in oral form alone, accompanied by the plucking of lyres.

Women's march fights for gender equality

By VANESSA AMIN
Collegian Staff

When the sun slowly descends and nightfall begins tomorrow, students will be joining together to march in Take Back the Night, a time to become aware and fight against violence against women in society.

The march and rallies will begin at 6:30 p.m. on the steps of the University of Massachusetts Student Union Building. The participants will then march through Amherst, with a second rally planned on the Amherst Town Common, following a candle light march.

According to Patricia Quedes, volunteer/counselor coordinator for the Everywoman's Center, this event is to educate the UMass community about violence against women.

"This march is a powerful moment for survivors to share their experiences and also to empower other survivors," Quedes said.

Melanie DeSilva, a social thought and political economy/communications major, said she has volunteered her time for the organization of Take Back the Night and knew she needed to help make this event happen. Women need to get involved in activities like Take Back the Night to inform other students that violence against women is a reality and that most women are brutalized every day by the hands of men, she said.

"An event like this is crucial to expose the victimization of women and to come together collectively to resist the power structures that keep us down," DeSilva said.

According to DeSilva, she did not agree with parts of the speech delivered by Deputy Chancellor Marcellette Williams, standing in for Chancellor David K. Scott at the Tara Hartnett Memorial. Williams said how it is important not to use passive language when speaking about domestic violence. She spoke about how society should be blamed for domestic violence but,

Prof: U.S. should trade with the Islamic banks

By EVELYN A. DE JESUS
Collegian Staff

Culture and tradition influence Islamic banks' approach to business, according to a Council for the National Interest consultant from Washington, D.C.

Jerry W. Wright, a Washington College international business professor, discussed the worldwide role of Islamic banks at Smith College last night.

The United States should encourage trading with Islamic Banks, according to Wright.

"The Federal Reserve should promote branches of Arab banks for the Arabs in America," he said.

Arab banks do not charge interests on their loans, according to the professor; they instead buy shares from small businesses which at the same time are family–owned, thereby creating loyalty from the customers.

These businesses tend to be service oriented, such as retail and grocery stores.

The Council advocates a solution to the Arab–Israeli conflict by achieving a U.S. policy based on "American moral principles and a strict adherence to international law."

It opposes the "continued Israeli occupation of Arab territory and the denial of basic right and freedoms to the Palestinians under the Israeli military rule."

A council brochure states that no peace initiative in the Israeli–Arab conflict will succeed, while the United States keeps silent in the face of "Israel's continuing occupation, obediently providing military, political and financial support."

It considers the "confiscation" of Arab land and "the expulsion of Palestinians" a violation of international law and moral standards.

"Israel still refuses to abandon its colonial subjugation of Palestinians and continues to be intransigent in peace negotiations," the brochure said.

The organization supports American intervention in the Arab–Israeli negotiations and the right of Syria, Lebanon and Palestinians to return to the land Israel took in its wars of 1967 and 1982.

The lecture was sponsored by the Department of Economics of Smith College.

DeSilva said, using the word society completely negates the fact that men are primarily responsible for this violence and need to be held accountable for it. Society, patriarchy and political institutions screen the fact that men are the ones who are raping, murdering and molesting women and children, she said.

This event, DeSilva said, is about women coming together to break the "silence and isolation" that surrounds violence against women. It is a chance for women to speak out and to become empowered to make change. It is crucial, she said, that we also confront our own prejudices and recognize differences in culture, race, religion, ethnicity and sexual orientation.

The name Take Back the Night, DeSilva said, symbolically and literally reveals the reality of oppression that women face, during the day and at night.

"How can we talk about freedom in a society where a women's seemingly basic right of freedom of movement is completely restricted and is depended upon the presence of a man?" DeSilva said.

According to DeSilva, it is important that men show their support by attending political actions such as this, but it should be recognized that this is a "women's event, for women, and by women."

"I accept the committee's decision to permit men to march," DeSilva said. "However, I think it could possibly threaten the very meaning of the march and discourage some women from attending."

According to Ben Zeman, the founder of the organization WIMPS, Wild Intrepid Men Protesting Sexism, feels that it should be required for all men to attend this event to hear the "fantastic women" speakers and become aware that violence against women happens every 12 seconds.

"Since violence against women is perpetrated by men, it should be the men who stop it," Zeman said.

NAACP leaders at odds

New director wants change, but board still resists

By SONYA ROSS
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — NAACP executive director Benjamin Chavis is struggling with his board of directors over whether the civil rights group will rejuvenate itself with cutting-edge issues, or stick to the tried and true.

Chavis is headed for the cutting edge, seeking unity among black activists and pulling in those on the political fringes to make it happen.

The NAACP's board of directors is steeped in the tried and true, hoping to pace the group's rebirth and stave off forays into things militant or radical.

Days after taking over as executive director, for example, Chavis pledged NAACP support for efforts to strike a nationwide truce among street gangs, to the dismay of NAACP traditionalists who hadn't expected the move.

The board of directors would prefer that Chavis give equal time to issues such as employment or black political empowerment, which are politically safer.

A power struggle that began shortly after Chavis became executive director in April 1993 flared last week after he met privately in Detroit with about 40 nationalist, progressive and pan-African activists without the board's knowledge.

Chavis said Tuesday the Detroit meeting was typical of meetings he has held with black interests since he became executive director a year ago.

"This is not out of the ordinary," Chavis said. "From my very first day in office, I have been attempting to reach out and bring into the NAACP the diversity of the African-American community. I cannot see why there are some persons who would want to make controversy out of our efforts."

Chavis said the board supports his efforts to broaden the NAACP's base. But a few on the 64-member board openly questioned why the panel didn't know about the Detroit meeting.

"Some of them have been working in the NAACP. So, I don't see why it had to be secret," said board member Hazel Dukes. "It would look as if there were an undercurrent of unhappiness with the existing structure of the NAACP."

"The NAACP is not a radical organization," said board member Joseph E. Madison. "This smells of trying to re-create the NAACP in the image of Ben Chavis."

Chavis, former head of the United Church of Christ's Commission for Racial Justice, gained prominence in the 1970s as one of the "Wilmington 10" prisoners convicted in the firebombing of a white-owned grocery in Wilmington, N.C., during a civil rights protest. He spent more than four years in prison before the conviction was overturned.

He has made no secret of wanting to restore the pan-Africanist flavor of W.E.B. DuBois, who founded the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People but left in the 1940s because he felt the group was too timid in its approach to civil rights. "Du Bois was an intellectual, but at the same time he was an activist," Chavis said. "Du Bois identified with the poor and the outcast, and the downtrodden. I consider myself to be in the Du Bois tradition.

Jews celebrate independence

By JACOB W. MICHAELS
Collegian Staff

Many people thought it was a modern–day miracle 46 years ago when the United Nations declared the British mandate in the Middle East be divided into two states: Palestine and Israel. On May 15, 1948, David Ben– Gurion read Israel's Declaration of Independence.

The University of Massachusetts at Amherst Hillel will be celebrating Israel's independence day, Yom Ha–Atzma'ut, today at 6 p.m. at Hillel House.

The celebration will occur on April 13 for two reasons. The first is that the date, while different on a Christian calendar, is the same on a Jewish one. On a Jewish calendar, Yom Ha–Atzma'ut falls on Iyar fifth. However, today is only the third of Iyar. The reason for this discrepancy is because the fifth falls on a Saturday, the Jewish shabbat.

The celebration will kick off with a barbecue in the Hillel courtyard. At 7 p.m. singer Julie Silver will take over the festivities, leading songs.

A Jewish folk artist, Silver recently released her second album, a collection of original Jewish songs. "Julie Silver passes her original music through her loving Jewish soul and what comes out is nothing less than a festival of the spirit for young and old alike," said Rabbi Cary Yales of Temple Israel in Lexington, Mass.

"I'm not sure what captures the audience first — her energy, creativity, or her enormous charm, but what lingers long after the performance is the feeling that you've been touched by someone very special."

UM may study state economy

BOSTON (AP) — The University of Massachusetts president told a legislative committee Monday he supports plans to create a research center at his school to study the state economy.

The proposal is contained in an economic development package sponsored by Sen. Lois Pines, D-Newton, co-chairman of the Legislature's Commerce and Labor Committee.

The bill would allocate $800,000 to establish a UMass center to study the state economy and serve as a central clearinghouse for key economic development data.

UMass President Michael Hooker said the center would "fill a serious void in the state's ability to conduct research and analysis on the state's economy."

Hooker said the goal would be to give public officials the information they need when debating economic policies.

The bill, which was the focus of a Commerce and Labor Committee hearing Monday, also included some of the following:

• a $28 million bond authorization to improve regional technology facilities and infrastructure in Amherst, Boston, Dartmouth, Lowell and New Bedford.

• $3 million for five regional manufacturing extension services, in which the higher education sector teams up with the private sector to help modernize small- and medium-sized manufacturers.

• $35 million targeted to the Massachusetts Minority Enterprise Investment Corporation, the Urban Initiative Fund and other organizations that will improve lending in communities that are not served adequately.

Tax laws unfair to strippers?

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — A stripper allowed by a tax judge to depreciate surgical implants that greatly enlarged her breasts said Tuesday the ruling corrects rules that were unfair to entertainers in her field.

"It is simply a stage prop we are carrying around to make money," Cynthia Hess said of the implants.

"I am happy for me and a lot of other girls in show business," she said before performing at the Bamboo Room in Green Bay as Friday's deadline for filing tax returns approached. "The tax laws seem to be against us everywhere we turn."

Hess, known professionally as "Chesty Love," and her husband, Reginald R. Hess, claimed a $2,088 deduction in 1988 for depreciation on the surgical implants to enlarge her bust size to 56FF.

The IRS rejected the deduction, citing many court rulings that said spending money to improve a taxpayer's health or appearance, though useful for business, are too inherently personal to be deducted as a business expense.

But Hess, of Fort Wayne, Ind., won agreement from Special Trial Judge Joan Seitz Pate, who last month ruled that the implants increased Hess' income and the breasts at 10 pounds each were so big and bulky that she couldn't derive personal benefit from them. Hess, who lists her age as in her 20s, said Tuesday she has spent more than $50,000 in recent years on implants, progressively enlarging her breasts in an effort to make herself unique among exotic dancers.

Hess, who says she wears a size 5 dress, is uncertain of her bust size now but said it is much bigger than 56FF.

Countdown to State House Day

Mark April 25 on your calendar.

The Save Our School Coalition, composed of students working with University of Massachusetts staff and union officials, is urging students to go to the State House on April 25 and tell legislators the importance of maintaining access and quality at the University.

April 25 is worth $107 to students. That's the amount of the mandatory fee increase approved by the Board of Trustees. The chancellor has pledged that if we are successful in getting the state to approve an $11 million increase in the state appropriation, then there will be no rise in fees or tuition.

Students will be joined at State House Day by alumni, staff and faculty who will also tell legislators of the importance of the University to individuals and the Commonwealth, and ask the legislators to increase funding to the University.

Students, though, are the best spokespeople for UMass. Students work hard to obtain the benefits of a good education, and know the frustrations and heartache of the effects of the budget reductions of the past five years. Students experience first-hand the excellence of UMass' faculty, yet also experience the delays to get into classes, the setback in services and the results of deferred maintenance.

Worst of all, students know best the cost of reduced state appropriations. Students feel that in astronomical increases in tuition and fees.

Come join us at the State House on April 25. The administration is suppiying the buses. SOS members will help you meet with your legislator. Call 545-4200 to make a reservation.

What can you tell legislators? How about:

- What a good education means to you.
- Why you appreciate UMass.
- How hard it is for you to continue to afford UMass.
- How reduced state funds for the campus has affected your educational and campus experience.
- How student costs have escalated by 167 percent since Fiscal Year 1988.
- That UMass–Amherst is now the second costliest flagship public university in the nation.
- That the state has been backing away from its responsibility for public higher education too long. The state's share of our campus' operating budget in 1973-74 was 72 percent; by 1993-94, it had plummeted to 39 percent.
- Students, faculty, staff, administrators, unions, parents and alumni are urging the state to increase funding by almost $22 million for the entire UMass five-campus system. That would mean an increase of about $11 million to the Amherst campus.
- This increase in state funding for the system will allow this campus to hold the line on tuition and fees.

Most of the students at UMass are from Massachusetts, and most of our graduates will remain in the state and be productive members and leaders of our communities and businesses.

We have a lot to be proud of: two Pulitzer prize winners in Madeleine Biais of journalism and James Tate of English; a former professor and a former graduate student who just won Nobel prizes this year in physics for work they did while at UMass, Joseph Taylor and Russell Hulce; the Massachusetts Professor of the Year for 1993 from the Council for the Advancement and Support of Education was Albey Reiner of microbiology, a faculty member who has taught more than 15,000 students since 1977 in his course on cancer and AIDS.

Our alumni include the heads of General Electric, General Motors, Milton Bradley and Dairy Mart; Jack Welch, Jack Smith, George Ditomassi and Charles Nirenberg. The new editor of the Boston Herald, Andrew Castile Jr., is a UMass alum. And alum Cad Calamine is an astronaut.

The SOS Coalition has been holding telephone banks and letter-writing campaigns to let legislators know how important UMass is to us and to the state. It is even more important to bring that message to the legislators in person. Starting today, the Collegian will be running a "Countdown to State House Day" featuring UMass facts and reminding students — faculty and staff are welcome too! — to sign up for buses to go the State House on April 25.

Please join us. Please let our elected officials know that we are thoughtful, caring individuals who want a good education at an exemplary public university.

Remember, it's your education, your future. Your voice will make a difference. Even if you can't go, write to your legislator and we'll take your letter to the State House. Again, call 545-4200 for more information.

Otherwise, see you in Boston on April 25.

Abortion has many victims

Abortion rights? Many feminists and pro–abortion advocates have upheld abortion as a woman's right to choose. Abortion, it is argued, is closely connected to the advancement of women, particularly lower class women.

Studies dealing with the dangers of abortion over child birth; the likelihood of lower–class women, when given the option, to choose not to terminate an unplanned pregnancy; the great number of planned children that are battered and abused each year; and the traumatic after–effects of abortion argue the contrary.

Despite many such findings and available literature abortion continues to be linked with women's rights. Should a woman be given this right to harm herself — while being kept conveniently uninformed by the abortion industry? Considering the number of women that make equally uninformed choices when dealing with legal drugs or inducing eating disorders, this argument may not be valid.

Then the question is, should a person be given the right to harm another person in the name of convenience? Often, the response will claim that abortion includes only the woman. The abortion industry would then have us believe that the pre–born child is simply a mass of tissue and not an issue.

There is a major flaw with this line of reasoning: the tissue is alive. Our friendly, money–making abortion industry has managed to convince followers that the procedure deals only with tissue mass and not a life. Any person discovered arguing the contrary is said to be grasping at straws. Is this really the case?

Dr. M. Denes's commentary, Performing Abortions, reveals, "You have to become a bit schizophrenic. In one room you encourage the patient that the slight irregularity of the fetal heart is not important — that she is going to have a fine healthy baby. Then in the next room you assure another woman, on whom you just did a saline abortion, that it's good that the heart is already irregular. . . she has nothing to worry about, she is not going to have a live baby."

There is also the fact that a woman can be certain she is pregnant 42 days after conception when brain waves are already present. The Supreme Court has said a person is legally considered living if brain waves are present.

What of the aborted fetuses that are born living? An excerpt from the Handbook on Abortion reads, "Before it became publicly known, private abortion clinics in England sold live aborted babies for research. . . Dr. P. Stanley, a spokesman for the clinic selling the fetuses, said that they were 'aged between 18 and 22 weeks' — that's four to five months! Mr. Stanley continued, 'A fetus has to be 28 weeks to be legally viable. Earlier than that it is so much garbage.'"

The abortion industry would have us believe that the pre-born child is simply a mass of tissue and not an issue. There is a major flaw with this line of reasoning; the tissue is alive.

Diana D'Avanzo

The whole life or tissue debate is nothing more than a strong attempt to rationalize what is clearly, and logically, a human life into a lifeless substance. Unfortunately, the stories of post–abortion women reveal another side of the issue. The trauma and pain that a woman experiences after abortion is often centered around having allowed her child to be killed. Before the abortion, this same woman would have been made to believe that this was not the case. After the abortion, reality is brought to light.

For every abortion, there are two victims: the woman and the child. The child because it is dead, and the woman because she is left hurt and, often, has no one to turn to. This is the side of abortion that is swept under the rug, the side the abortion movement chooses to ignore or trivialize.

Fortunately, there are a few places that offer help to post– abortion victims as well as counsel and real help to women faced with an unplanned pregnancy. Among them is Women Exploited By Abortion and Alternatives (in Northampton). Thank God somebody cares.

Surviving against the odds

I survived. The concussion didn't stop me. The bruises didn't stop me. The pain in my shoulders and my ripped clothing didn't stop me. The fear didn't stop me. The cuts on my face and on my arms didn't stop me. The flashbacks don't stop me. The jumpiness in my behavior doesn't stop me. And neither does my dissociation from conversations when people say that word. The words. The many words that can stop my thought pattern like a screeching freight train. As I look at the ceiling and they look at me as if I am hearing voices.

"Who the ——— you kickin'?" said the kid. As if a man on the ground being beaten by five others from above had no right to try to defend himself. And then nothing but the thud of a foot hitting my skull and voices saying things like, "Get the hell out of here, you've been beaten! Get lost!" And I was telling them to look at what they had done, but it frightened them too much. They had to be masculine.

Mike Einhorn

But it didn't stop me, didn't even come close, as I went right to the police with their license plate number. I had successfully survived an unprovoked attack by five drunken hoodlums and am now pursuing legal action. To make sure justice is served. Justice, not vengeance.

Justice involves a regulatory agency that intervenes and rights what is wrong. Vengeance is simply retaliation which builds and builds without ever being curbed. Justice is what I want out of this — and justice i'll have. Because I come from a long line of survivors, of people with endurance and inner strength.

My father is a survivor. Both his parents were killed in the Holocaust. He had to stay in an orphanage — afraid to say anything since he was a Jew and could be murdered if that information left the orphanage. He grew up with some of the worst fears a person could have. Fear that was shadowed by being taken from his parents and knowing that they might be dead.

My mother's mother lost her husband and raised my mom on her own. She was a survivor, living through very hard times just to keep my mother safe and taken care of. But she was also verbally abusive and very distant because of the loss of her husband. So my mother is a survivor as well.

Many people know how hard it is to live with verbal abuse and the daily anguish of not being respected, trusted or admired by your parents. My mother had no father in a world where it was unheard of not to have two parents. She was all alone, but she survived. My parents both have my wholehearted and undying respect.

Now it's my turn.

I've already been through many painful family crises, from death to mental illness, and we have endured. I am a survivor — I have relinquished God, given up on religion and still I live. I have felt the pain of knowing the one person I loved most was sexually assaulted. I have seen the cold side of justice. I almost drowned just under a year ago. I have dealt with unrequited love. I have loved and lost. I even lost Bo, my favorite pet.

I lost a leader and good friend I looked up to in high school to the hate and violence of anti-Semitism. I have been in motor vehicle accidents. I have been harassed for doing my job well, several times. I have seen a thought disorder take someone I love from me, and change her into someone else. Then the police took her, but I still love her. I have accidentally struck an innocent animal with my car, and have been thrown from my bike by another. I have survived. I have moved on.

And now I deal with this physical assault. It seems trivial compared to what I have been through. It seems meaningless. But I will survive this and be ready to face another challenge. After all, there will be more. I am sure.

Letters to the Editor

TV column proves men really are pigs

To the editor:

I noticed something very interesting about the April 11 edition of "On the Tube" by Caleb Cochran. In reviewing five commercials, three were panned and two were praised. The fact that the three bad ones starred women and the two good ones starred men could be ignored if one assumed it was a coincidence. One could even ignore the mockery of the idea that some people might respect Candace Bergen.

But then one reads about this wonderful commercial starring Michael Jordan. "If there were no sports, would I still be your hero?" My, how clever! But when the exact same commercial stars Jackie Joyner–Kersee, the response is, "I don't even know who you are."

Now, ignorance is not always bigotry. But even when informed, Mr. Cochran remained unimpressed. He concedes that someone who has competed in five Olympic games at an event far more complicated, and involving a far greater and more diverse athletic skill, than basketball might be somebody's hero. "But to run her in a series of nearly identical ads opposite Michael Jordan is ridiculous. I would think she would realize this."

Why is it ridiculous? She is this country's greatest female athlete, with the possible exception of Bonnie Blair. Why shouldn't she think herself worthy to run opposite Michael Jordan? Indeed, what makes Jordan think he can run opposite Jackie Joyner–Kersee?

Mr. Cochran, your implication struck me as being that women have no place in athletics or, if they do, they certainly can't be anybody's hero. You can like whatever commercials you want and continue disliking the ones with women. But advertising it to the entire Five College community only validates what my female friends say so often: "Men are scum."

Do they know we care?

[The following story appeared on the front page of the Collegian on Thursday, October 19, 1989 under the headline "Thousands rally in Hub to protest budget cuts."]

BOSTON — Holding placards and led by the strains of the University of Massachusetts Marching Band, some 15,000 people converged on the Boston Common yesterday to protest budget cuts to public higher education.

Students, faculty and staff from 29 colleges and universities statewide as well as concerned parents and community members were on hand for the 11 a.m. rally, which began with a march from the State House and lasted for more than three hours.

Forty–two buses overflowing with some 3,000 cheering students embarked from Haigis Mall at 8:15 a.m., fueled by the threat of what may be the fifth wave of budget cuts to public higher education since March of 1988.

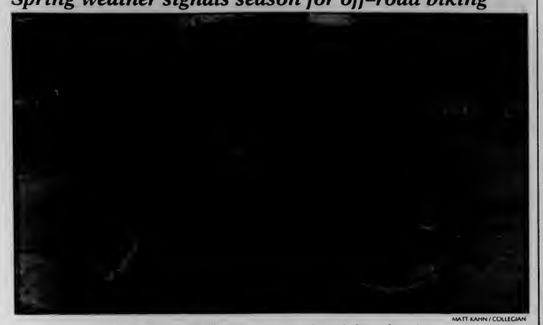
The buses left behind about 1,000 people who formed impromptu carpools or scrambled to find alternate means of transportation.

At the Common, the crowd was met by a handful of University of Lowell students with guitars and drums, who maintained the crowd's excitement by playing rock and roll songs.

The upbeat music and the voices of the roaring crowd were abruptly halted, however, as protesters held a moment of silence to remember fellow students who did not get into state colleges and universities this fall.

Speaker Binky Feldman, a UMass student, said the problem of under funding must be addressed on both the state and national levels.

"Education is a right, not a privilege," she said.



The rally culminated with a march to the State House where chanting protesters were met by security and police, and eventually by Paul Tsongas, chairman of the Board of Trustees.

"Up until now," he said, "we didn't know you cared."

Spring weather signals season for off–road biking

MATT KAHN / COLLEGIAN

Spring season means biking season — get ready to ride the tough terrain.

By HENRY BRIER
Collegian Staff

Spring has sprung fairly recently, which means it is prime time to take advantage of the numerous recreational activities previously hindered by what seemed to be "the never–ending winter."

An activity this writer enjoys is mountain biking, and there are numerous trails in the area. What has to be taken into consideration is that it is still early in the season, meaning that a lot of the trails are wet and subject to damage. Avoiding the softer spots will limit the erosion unto the trail, insuring they can be used continuously. If not, there is the threat of trail closing.

The trails are used by people other than bikers. It's important to respect hikers and, as Stephen Gingeras, manager of Bicycle World Too, said, "Don't blow past 'em." Cyclists aren't the only ones who can enjoy the crisp air and the sound of chirping birds.

There's also a safety precaution to observe, and riders can do so by protecting their heads. Children under 12 years old are required by law to wear helmets.

"Eighty percent of child head injuries in hospitals are due to not wearing helmets," Gingeras said.

Just because children are required by law doesn't mean that adults can ignore head protection. Gingeras strongly recommends all cyclists wear helmets, due to a past traumatic experience.

He was mountain biking with his uncle and a few of his friends. None had their heads protected at the time. They were going down a large hill when his uncle hit a bump, lost control of his bike and flew head–first into a tree. His uncle died, which temporarily hindered Gingeras' interest in cycling. However, this incident has since motivated him to push helmets as a necessity.

Bicycle Too is fully stocked with bicycle helmets. "We can fit helmets for any head," he said. "You can't take them for granted."

Another safety precaution Gingeras brought up is the need to secure bikes with locks. Bicycle World Too, located in downtown Amherst, is stocked with a wide selection of locks, including Kryptonite, which offers an insurance policy.

"Theft on college campuses is rampant," he said. "If you take your bike to one, you have to protect it.

"The biggest reason for bicycling, besides commuting, is to blow off the stress of everyday life, which bicycles work very well for," said Gingeras.

He sells all sorts of bikes, from three–speeds to off–road, so people can enjoy the sport of cycling. Spring is the busiest season for his business, as there are always people coming in to purchase new bicycles.

New Lewis gallery aims to put a little art into drab dorm life

By GEORGIA PAPADOPOULOU
Collegian Correspondent

Lewis Residence Hall's House Council is looking for art students to design and paint murals so they can create a small gallery, the "Lewis Beautification," for their dorm.

"We want you to put some art into our lives," said the president of the dorm, Nicholas Patsis.

Patsis, who has been president for a year, explained that since very few activities had happened in the past, they decided to create the gallery. A room has been completely devoted for this project.

Initially they tried to get people from the dorm to come up with ideas and perhaps draw something, relying totally on their own funds. After this did not work out, they decided to turn to the outside for some help, mostly financial.

Northeast/Sylvan Area Director Andrea Seidler welcomed their idea and guaranteed financial support from the Cultural Enrichment Fund. The maintenance department also gave them full support. They will provide them with all the boards (4x4 feet, 4x8 feet) and paints. After the artists are finished they will frame all the murals and cover them with plexiglass as a precaution against vandalized.

The theme of the murals is still open to many suggestions. They first need a proposal from the artists and a sketch in advance, for approval purposes from the Residential Education.

"We want the art students to show some interest and we promise we will give them as much support as they need. Please come and display your work while having fun," Patsis said.

If they can't complete their work before the end of the semester, artists can continue to work until summer or even next semester. Materials for the work in progress will be stored in the dormitory.

"Our main idea is for art students to create murals for our dorm, something that will stay here permanently and change the way we view and feel inside it," said Patsis.

For more information, call Nicholas Patsis at 546–0276, Michael Lysobey at 546–2440, or Rachel Barber at 546–0151.

Weddings strong at box office

By JOHN HORN
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — D2 The Mighty Ducks was No. 1 at the box office for the second week in a row, while the romantic comedy Four Weddings and a Funeral broke out with help from rave reviews and good word of mouth.

D2 The Mighty Ducks made $5.5 million over the weekend, Exhibitor Relations Co. reported Monday.

In its fifth week of release, Four Weddings, starring Hugh Grant and Andie MacDowell, was No. 6 with $3.9 million. It is appearing in 552 locations, compared with 2,223 for D2. It was No. 9 the week before.

Among new movies, the twentysomething comedy Threesome made $4 million for fifth place.

Here are the weekend's top 20 films according to Exhibitor Relations, with the Friday-through-Sunday gross, number of North American theater locations, average gross per location, total gross and number of weeks in release.

Figures are based on actual receipts and projections where actual figures were unavailable.

1. D2 The Mighty Ducks, Disney, $5.5 million, 2,223 locations, $2,482 per location, $30.2 million, three weeks.
2. Major League II, Warner Bros., $5.1 million, 2,167 locations, $2,359 per location, $17.7 million, two weeks.

Poetry slams gaining in popularity

By ROBERT SAIZ HOLGUIN
Associated Press

SEATTLE — Tearing through the first two stanzas of his poem, Hamish Todd realizes he has paced the prose perfectly. He rips off the pages from his stapled poem as he goes along. Evoking imagery and passion, he stokes the bewitched audience. In vain, he sweeps his disheveled hair off his forehead and draws on a cigarette as he delivers his dramatic conclusion.

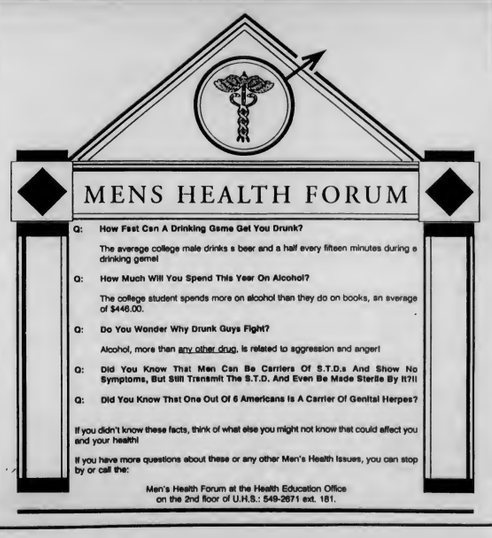
The crowd reacts with the outburst one expects to find at a monster truck rally: They chant his name, high-fives are exchanged and fists are pounded on tabletops.

It's not exactly what Robert Frost had in mind, perhaps, but this is poetry, folks, 1990s style.

"I liked how that one worked tonight," Todd says after leaving the microphone at the Emerald Diner's weekly poetry slam. "Last time I was in this room, I was a complete bomb."

But for Todd, 28, a veteran of Seattle's poetry-slam scene, bombing is a rarity. On this particular night, Todd is a featured reader at the popular poetry venue in Seattle's lower Queen Anne Hill.

He was not competing for the $25 prize; he was simply one of the dozens of spectators packed into the dimly lit room to witness some new poets brave enough to put their talent and prose on the line in front of the raucous lot.



The slams — essentially a competitive poetry reading sprinkled with the enthusiasm of professional wrestling — occur in at least 25 other states, continually gaining in popularity since their inception at Chicago's Green Mill Tavern in 1984.

These literary game shows set in taverns and nightclubs are the predecessors of a burgeoning underground literary scene in Seattle, where fresh new poets and writers are hoping to erode the guitar-wielding, flannel clad "grunge" stereotype and vie for their own shot at the national spotlight.

In New York, the Nuyorican Poets Cafe has developed into a legendary venue for post-modern poets, featuring readings and workshops by some of the most influential contemporary poets. But most locals say Seattle and its extremely literate and tightly knit artistic community offers opportunities that other cities can't. The influx of artists — from writers and poets to painters and Thespians — continues in Seattle, stemming largely from the notoriety surrounding the prodigal music scene. The new talent has injected new life into fringe theater, performance poetry, art galleries and even new directions in music.

"It's an exciting and vibrant place to be," says David Meinert, 27, a local promoter. "The surge in talent coming to Seattle in all the arts has been incredible."

"The living standard for a poet is so high here," says Paul Grajnert, 28, a teacher and writer who emcees at the Emerald City Diner. "I live in a house, I own a car, I go hiking on weekends. Holy Kamole, if I lived in New York I'd be lucky to have a basement."

Which brings it all back to what Todd has believed in all along: that Seattle's slams are only the first step in a literary evolution that's ripe on the counterculture vine. Already, he says poets are starting bands, reciting their stanzas over the crunch of a guitar and bang of a drum, taking Rap music full circle. "One of the beautiful things about the slams is that they create better writers," says Todd, who helped organize a recent performance poetry taping of local talent for MTV.

"Active writing tends to be an isolationist activity so, outside the walls of a university, writers don't often have a chance to meet and to gather. This is an open forum where we can share in each others work and criticize each other, even if it's from sitting in the audience shouting, 'That blows!'"

Todd, a self-described literary activist, helped create one of Seattle's first poetry slams more than a year ago, as the grunge movement reached critical mass. He doesn't compete anymore, but continues to support other slams by performing or promoting. "It's all about reaching out to people," he says. "The slams encourage dialogue as a forum for political ideas, social commentary, religion, any end of the spectrum. And they get people's blood moving."

Several poets recently competed in the "Grand-Slam," where Lauri Conner, a 24-year-old writer, won $750 and a slot on the team headed for the national slam championship this summer in Asheville, N.C. Seattle's two other representatives will be selected at a series of weekly slams over the next two months.

"Poetry is a folk art that's been incorporated by academia but slams bring it back to the blue-collar people," says Meinert. "We have truck drivers in there reading poetry, construction workers and schoolteachers, as opposed to a bunch of beatnik, coffee-sipping stiffs."

The contestants, who sign up an hour before the slams begin, are judged on a scale of 1-10. The poetry itself ranges from a mixture of brooding, angst-ridden introspection to diatribes against societal injustices or race relations. And it's almost all written in free form — no iambic pentameter here.

The slams can be found on just about any we . night in a variety of venues, usually nightclubs, on stages normally occupied by live music. The emcees are the glue that hold together the slams, keeping watch on the crucial line between a rowdy good time and a humiliating pounding for the first-timer.

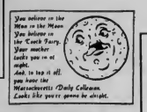
Senior Campaign started

Seniors pitch in to improve the campus services

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts seniors are currently pledging money to benefit the Mather Career Center because of the efforts of the UMass 1994 Senior Campaign, a group that seeks to improve various campus services each year.

Senior Campaign Chair Malaika Higginson said each year seniors donate money that will be used to help specific departments on campus. She said in the past, the money raised by seniors has benefited the campus Escort Services, the Tower Library and the Everywoman's Center.



Higginson said this year the Mather Career Center was selected to receive the funds because they saw finding a job as the biggest problem facing this year's graduating class. She also said seniors have for the most part been supportive of the campaign.

"The seniors have been responding really well," she said. "Getting a job is an issue that is salient to students now. They know they can use the Mather Career Center after they graduate, and they know that everyone has something to benefit from supporting the Mather Career Center."

Higginson said their goal this year is to raise $30,000. The money that gets raised each year goes into an endowment fund, and the interest that is made from the endowment is given to the department that is selected each year.

"There is about $60,000 in the fund right now, and we hope to have $1,000,000 in the endowment by the year 2000," Higginson said. "Because it is the interest that goes to the department the gift gets larger every year."

Higginson said the Senior Campaign will also be sponsoring a picnic for graduating seniors on May 20. The picnic will include a free barbecue, games, prizes and karaoke. A radio station will also be broadcasting from the picnic.

NATHAN MARTIN/ COLLEGIAN

The University of Massachusetts and Amherst College baseball teams continued their rivalry yesterday, with the Minutemen winning 12-4.

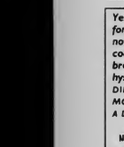
The Battle of Amherst isn't really a battle as much of a contest between Amherst's pride versus UMass' skill.

"It's a big game because it's a big game for them. It makes their season if they beat us, so we always have to be up for it," said UMass Coach Mike Stone.

"We've beat them, well now it's seven of the last 11, but you have to understand this is our third game in three weeks up north," said Bill Thurston, Amherst's coach.

There was a time when top athletes who were also all- scholastic would pick a place like Amherst over a place like UMass, despite the Division III status. That time, for the most part, is gone.

"It's more so in the past. It's a lot tougher now that they have all that scholarship money to offer in Division I. In the past kids would choose Division III because of the academics," Stone said.



Amherst has held its own on the baseball field, although it looked on Tuesday that few of the Lord Jeffs would be serious candidates for a UMass scholarship. Amherst had little experience and it showed. This was not the best day for the Lord Jeffs, but it wasn't too long ago that UMass fell to its smaller rival. Two years ago, to be exact.

The Lord Jeffs surprised the Minutemen 6–1 in 1992, but UMass has won the last two and four of the last five. The rivalry, despite the teams' strengths, remains strong.

Both schools have sent major league baseball a few keepers. Jeff Reardon. John Cerruti. Mike Flanagan. Dan Duquette. Gary DiSarcina. They both are proud and they built tradition their own way. Folks will never confuse the two with Stanford and UCLA, but they have something to be proud of in their baseball programs. Win or lose.

The Far Side By Gary Larson

Your Horoscope
By Joan Bren

ARIES (March 21–April 19): Broaden your search for a better-paying job. Creating a new demand for certain goods and services will boost profits. Start out early for a party so that you do not miss anything.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): Errors of judgment are possible; give yourself time to weigh every factor. Investigate a proposed financial program very carefully before investing any money.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): If a crisis arises, you will be able to handle it adroitly. Do not allow domestic tensions to build. You can succeed in a more adventuresome career if you decide to go all-out.

CANCER (June 21–July 22): Do not let stress get the better of you. Deal with obstacles as they come up but refuse to be intimidated by them. Keeping your nose to the grindstone will pay off handsomely.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): Your private world may feel as if it is falling apart. Hang in there! Help comes when least expected. Be willing to compromise for the sake of peace. A special group needs your organizational talents.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): Although someone call your approach "square," the results will be spectacular. Chan your own course in business. Pay attention to detail and your intuition.

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): A number of problems could end up in your lap, presenting you with an opportunity to move up. Deal with them one at a time. A member of the opposite sex could set a trap.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): A new alliance could bring good luck, setting the stage for future career moves. Meeting deadlines is essential. Better organization will put you in a position to improve your finances.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): Developing a plan to improve profit centers could make you eligible for a hefty bonus. A near-miss gives you awareness that could make you more careful in the future.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): A self-assured manner is the strongest guarantee of getting things done to your liking. Friends could also be a great help. Devote more time to your social life, but sidestep anyone who is grouchy.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18): Emotional confrontations are counter-productive. Get yourself under control and the other facets of your life will fall into place.

PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20): Handling small repair jobs now will prevent more extensive damage. You may not believe your ears at a family reunion! A long-guarded secret could be revealed.

Camden Yards is everything that it's cracked up to be and I'm sure the new ballparks in Cleveland and Arlington are too; you just can't replace Fenway Park.

Camden Yards is more modern than Fenway Park but it lacks history. Think of the great players in baseball history who have played since 1912 and I bet you'll find only a small number who never played in Fenway Park. I'll take history over sushi bars any day.

Last Friday marked the 20th anniversary of one of baseball's greatest moments, Hank Aaron's 715th home run. It was supposed to be Aaron's crowning achievement but sadly it was anything but. In the time leading up to the dramatic home run, Aaron received hate mail and death threats.

Aaron has never received the credit he deserves for breaking Babe Ruth's record. It's time people remember who the man with the most home runs in major league baseball history is: Hank Aaron.

the inning–ending double play.

It was one of three defensive gems by the other Massachusetts co–captain, who made a great diving stab in shallow left field on the first batter in the very next inning.

Junior designated hitter Bill Knight's fourth home run of the season put the Minutemen ahead 8–0 in the fourth inning and the game way out of reach.

The Massachusetts offense tortured the Jeffs' pitching staff all afternoon long, pounding out 14 hits, which included three home runs.

In the ninth, the Jeffs mounted a minute comeback, knocking Sullivan out with four consecutive singles sandwiched by two walks, which yielded Amherst College's four runs.

Massachusetts takes to the field today at the University of Rhode Island against the Rams in an Atlantic 10 doubleheader.

Sullivan stops AC Lord Jeffs

NATHAN MARTIN / COLLEGIAN

Amherst native Chad Sullivan picked up his first career victory against Amherst College yesterday, 12–4.

By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR.
Collegian Staff

Amherst native Chad Sullivan notched his first career victory for his hometown school against its hometown rival yesterday as the University of Massachusetts baseball team outclassed the Lord Jeffs of Amherst College, 12–4, at Earl Lorden Field.

The freshman righthander pitched eight and two–thirds innings of shutout ball versus the Division III Jeffs, who only managed five hits off Sullivan through the first eight frames, striking out five and walking only two (four total).

"I was hitting the corners all day, keeping the batters off balance," Sullivan said. "I felt solid heading into the ninth but ran out of gas."

"It was nice to see him pitch well. He threw well like that in the fall," Massachusetts Coach Mike Stone said. "If he goes like that, it makes us that much stronger."

The Minutemen (10–11) extended their winning streak to five games, led by Sullivan's performance as well as big hits provided by several other locals, namely Northampton's Justin Kelly and another Amherst product, freshman Nate Murphy, who homered to finish out UMass' scoring.

Kelly, a sophomore, started at first base for Massachusetts in place of senior Jeff January and made an immediate impact in the first inning. With two runs already in and senior co–captain Justin Howard on second, Kelly blasted a two–run home run over the 370–foot sign in left centerfield, giving the Minutemen a 4–0 lead they would not relinquish.

Massachusetts tacked on another run the very next inning when Howard doubled down the third base line, plating second baseman Brad Gorrie, who had advanced to third on a wild pitch.

Sullivan ran into a jam in the top of the third inning when he gave up the Jeffs' first hit of the day, a single by centerfielder Chris Miller. After Matt Sawyer struck out, second baseman Chris Torino executed a perfect bunt, beating it out for an infield hit and advancing Miller to third.

The Amherst College rally would be short–lived, however, as the next batter, Jim Gibbons, hit a sharp grounder up the middle that was snagged by Massachusetts shortstop Greg LaRocca, who turned

Two teams resume old rivalry

If the history of baseball was measured on a giant radar screen, the contributions of the town of Amherst would register nary a blip.

Amherst College and the University of Massachusetts have had tradition, there's no doubt about that. They just haven't had the kind of superstars that draw the townsfolk in on an April day, especially when the two clash against each other like they did Tuesday.

This year's 12–4 UMass win reeked of hometown flavor. Chad Sullivan, an Amherst resident, started on the mound for UMass and had a shutout going into the ninth.

SPOTLIGHT
Michael Morrissey takes a closer look at UMass Sports

The Minuteman center fielder, Nate Murphy, was another hero, at bat and in the field. Murphy hit a homer and made an inning–ending diving catch, both in the eighth inning.

"I feel right at home here," said Sullivan. "I pitched here in Babe Ruth and I have a few teammates that I came here with."

The two schools are as different as night and day. They exist in different worlds. Although they scrimmage four or five times a year and the Lord Jeffs share their batting cages with the Minutemen, there isn't the fraternization you might see with the proximity of the campuses.

"We used to be closer I think with the Amherst teams four or five years ago," said Assistant Coach John Carelli, who played for UMass. "I was never really close with any of those guys, to tell you the truth."

The problem is that the campuses have their own crosses to bear. UMass has to fight the safety school reputation (Note: pitcher Jason Bere could not get into UMass, so he went to Middlesex Community College instead and now starts for the Chicago White Sox) while Amherst has to maintain its status as the upper crust school of the region.

The two philosophies often clash. A few years ago, an assistant in the sports information department educated me that although UMass had a string of two or three wins, "Amherst is traditionally a top 20 school in Division III, but we don't play postseason because it conflicts with the school's philosophy."

Similarly, UMass followers have always been proud of their home nine. A Collegian scribe a few years ago wrote, "The Lord Jeffs resembled a bad little league team dressed in fancy purple uniforms. . . The Lord Jeffs made each Minuteman player look like Rickey Henderson. . . Playing the type of ball that Amherst played yesterday will certainly not get them many wins against Division I teams like UMass."

Just like the old snowball fights in the Amherst commons, teams are bragging rights for the town, whether or not the players realize it.

Gorillas host UNH Wildcats in a NE tussle

By MATT VAUTOUR
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team will try to extend its winning streak to three games against the Wildcats of New Hampshire today at 3 p.m. at Richard F. Garber Field.

The game will have some personal significance to UMass' Coach Ted Garber, who coached at UNH for 12 seasons.

More importantly, the game could play a role in determining the New England champion at the end of the season.

The Wildcats (2–4) have struggled so far this season. Their goaltending and defense has been shaky at best, averaging 11 goals against.

Their weak defense could mean another outstanding day for the Gorilla offense. Wes Depp enters the game with at least a goal or assist in every regular season game, dating back to last season's opening game. He needs only 16 points to get 100 for his career. Freshman Brendan Glass has a goal in each of his first six collegiate games.

"Brendan played one of the best defenders in the country," said Garber of last week's seven–goal performance. "The guys have been getting him the ball."

New Hampshire did not fare well in their only battle against a Top 20 team. On March 19, the Wildcats suffered a 14–4 beating at the hands of Notre Dame. Despite the record, Garber warns against overlooking UNH.

"We can't look ahead," Garber said. "They beat St. John's this past weekend. We just need to play good fundamental lacrosse."

If the Wildcats are going to have any chance at all, the offense will have to be at its best. Coach Jim Urquhart will count on the attack trio of Bill Golden, Jim Palmer and Matt Baker, who have carried the offensive load so far to have big games, to keep the game competitive.

"Jim Palmer could have played for us," said Garber of the former UMass recruit. "He's a great player. He's got a good stick and great field sense. Matt Baker is a great crease man."

Jeremy Murphy returned to practice Monday for the first time since suffering a knee injury against Syracuse on April 2 and could play in today's game.

Boston's start lacks defense

March 8 was a day of sobering reality for John Kruk of the Phillies and everyone else who often forgets that athletes are human just like the rest of us.

That day, doctors removed a cancerous testicle and suddenly baseball didn't seem to matter anymore. Monday night, six hours after undergoing radiation treatment, Kruk made a courageous return, going 3–for–5 with an RBI and two runs scored.

The Boston Red Sox got off to that 4–0 start but have faltered recently. Nobody ever said the defense was great but there are some Little League teams that can field better than the Sox. Forget Swiss cheese, the defense has more holes in it than Whitewater.

Bill Balfour's BEANBALLS

Defense is not a question of catching or throwing the ball but whether or not your players can get to the ball to make the play. As it stands, none of the Red Sox infielders have any range.

Mike Greenwell wonders why the fans at Fenway Park boo him. It may have something to do with the stellar defense he exhibited in Chicago. For every big hit Greenwell has there usually seems to be a big error that soon follows.

Don't look now but the Atlanta Braves are at it again. The Braves currently sit atop the NL Eastern Division with a perfect 7–0 record.

Their starting rotation is the best in the game and now they can throw Kent Mercker at you. Mercker only threw the season's first no–hitter Friday night in Los Angeles. Not too bad for a guy who gave up 14 earned runs in only 26 innings during spring training.

The rookies for Atlanta have also been contributing. Ryan Klesko homered on opening day and hasn't cooled down yet and when Bobby Cox summoned Tony Tarasco to sub for an injured David Justice last weekend, he responded with a home run.

Has anyone been following the Toronto Blue Jays? Joe Carter, who was supposed to miss a few weeks with a thumb injury, has already hit four home runs and has 12 RBI. Rookie Carlos Delgado hit his fifth home run on Monday night and is batting .292. Oh, yeah, Paul Molitor and John Olerud are both batting over .400.

I'm going to take this time to briefly discuss the New York Mets. The Mets swept Chicago to open the season but have lost three of their last four. This maybe the last time that the Mets are above .500. Well, so much for mentioning the Mets. A week from now I probably won't want to admit that I follow the soap opera from Shea.

It is becoming clear these days that with the arrival of modern yet nostalgic ballparks, the days of Fenway Park maybe limited. Two years ago, I ventured down to Baltimore and had the pleasure of seeing a game at Camden Yards.

Say What?

"I guess bad things happen in threes, so we're done for this year."

– Hartford Whaler's defenseman Adam Burt, referring to the team's recent alcohol-related mishaps.

Men's track has slow start

By JORMA KANSANEN
Collegian Staff

When it comes to the world of professional and amateur sports, an emphasis on the fast start out of the gates concept is pounded into the brains of both athlete and spectator.

This past weekend the University of Massachusetts men's track team took a figurative step back in a dual meet with Boston College and the University of Rhode Island. The track team took one on the chin with a score of 53 points, behind URI's 74.5 and BC's 68.5. Even with this loss in its debut performance of the spring, Coach Ken O'Brien has kept an optimistic viewpoint.

"I am pleased in respect with some of our individual performances, but disappointed in the team's loss," O'Brien said. "We scored in the same number of places as BC and UBI, but they earned the majority of the five–point first place finishes."

As is in every team sport, injuries are a key factor in success or failure. From the outset, the Minutemen lost dual athlete John Johnson — the team's second leading scorer of 1992–93 — to a hamstring injury.

Weather conditions also played a part, but O'Brien shied away from laying any blame on those uncontrollable circumstances.

"Last weekend's performance was somewhat in the character of our team. That is, we are really strong depth– wise," said O'Brien. "But the upfront individual placings was not there. We need to squeeze three or four people out of the backup role."

Highlights of the meet for Massachusetts were first place finishes for junior Rick Copley in the steeplechase and freshman Ron Tauro in the 110 meter high hurdles. Copley came in a time of 9:47.6, outdistancing the nearest competition by 8.3 seconds. While Tauro finished with a time of 16.3 seconds, ahead of the second place time by a second and a half.

Junior Tom Galligani came through in the triple jump with a distance of 45'2 inches and Ted Towse took first in the 5000 meters with a time of 15:21.3.

"Rick in terms of runners had one of the top level performances. He and Ron exceeded my expectations," said O'Brien. "And with the placings of Larry Plano (long and high jump) and Rick Peltier (long jump), their scoring definitely helped us as the day went on. That was something we needed."

Historic memories from the Windy City

CHICAGO — State Street and the Wrigley Building. The Union Stockyard and the Chicago Cubbies. Bad. Bad Leroy Brown. These are some of the things that make Chicago a toddlin' town.

And although I never saw its predecessor, the new Comiskey Park is great, too. Last Saturday I had the opportunity to see the Chisox and Boston play there as Messrs. Clemens and McDowell hooked up in a battle of the past two Cy Young Award winners. Frank Thomas belted a mammoth homer and a Red Sox rally fell just short as Chicago prevailed 6–5.

What amazed me, however, was what an attraction the park itself was. Clean and intimate, it was an ideal place for a baseball game on a warm Saturday afternoon. This is what America and apple pie are all about: there was no artificial turf or rap music between innings. It was just eating hot dogs and drinking beer while two great pitchers went at it. Truly some of the best the Windy City has to offer.

Tucked among the urban plight, labrynth of streets, and neighborhood taverns where old men hoist mugs of Old Style is the place which makes Chicago my kind of town.

At 1800 West Madison St., Chicago Stadium, one of the oldest and most storied arenas, is counting down its last days as home to the Blackhawks and Bulls. Next year, a new stadium will open as history and ambience give way to luxury boxes and the Bottom Line.

The Stadium has become the place that opposing players hate to visit; simply put, it's tough to win there.

The fans are perhaps the loudest in sports. They cheer through the entire national anthem — so loudly, in fact, that anthem crooner Wayne Messmer's voice is barely audible.

This tradition began back in '85 when the Blackhawks returned from Edmonton, facing a 2–0 deficit in their playoff series with the Oilers. Though the Hawks went on to lose, The Roar became a rallying cry and it stuck.

Tucked among the urban plight, labrynth of streets, and neighborhood taverns where old men hoist mugs of Old Style is the place which makes Chicago my kind of town.

Michael R. DiLorenzo

Never was that more evident than during the '91 NHL All–Star Game. American flag–bearing fans completely drowned out Messmer as a tribute to US troops, then stationed in the Persian Gulf.

The Stadium has seen it all. Three Stanley Cups and three NBA titles. It even became the first domed stadium when it hosted the 1932 NFL Championship game. But when the Bulls and Blackhawks end their playoff runs this year, the Stadium will close and all that is left will be echoes of the Roar.

It is the prototypical old arena. The dressing rooms are downstairs, so it is probably a little awkward climbing the stairs leading up to the ice in hockey skates. The seats are uncomfortable and there are bleachers in the balcony.

It has an organ loft in plain sight, extending from the first balcony and hanging over the loge behind one of the nets. It reminds me of where the Wizard of Oz did his work; as if at any moment the organist were going to say, "Ignore the man behind the curtain!"

Regardless of how outdated it is, Chicago Stadium is a great place to see a game. It has charm and class.

It also has a sense of history. Upon entering the Stadium, one can feel the game. Having been to places like the Hartford Civic Center and Brendan Byrne Arena in New Jersey, I can see that the advantage Chicago has. It's as simple as the difference between Lakers–Celtics in June and Mariners–Indians in September.

I've also been to the Montreal Forum, Boston Garden, Nassau Coliseum and Madison Square Garden. None have anything on the Stadium.

When I walked out of the Stadium after last Friday's Blackhawks–Blues game, I couldn't help feel saddened that I would never see the venerable old Stadium again. And as Chicago tries to embrace a new arena that will eventually have its own history, I have one piece of advice.

Remember the Roar.

Magic may not return

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Magic Johnson, wondering if the constant travel of the NBA has placed too many demands on his life, is leaning against returning as coach of the Los Angeles Lakers, The Los Angeles Times reported Tuesday.

The newspaper said he will decide by the end of the week, perhaps as soon as Friday. The Lakers say they know nothing of such plans, contending Johnson had intended to discuss his situation with them after the regular season ends April 24.

The Times said Johnson, citing restrictions on his lifestyle, estimated his chances of leaving at 70-30.

Johnson told the Times he discussed the situation with his wife, Cookie, on Sunday night after returning from his high school all-star game in Michigan and expects to meet with owner Jerry Buss and general manager Jerry West in the next few days.

"I don't know if a meeting has been set up," Bob Steiner, a spokesman for Buss, told The Associated Press on Tuesday.

Buss said over the weekend he expected to meet with Johnson after the season.

"I have no knowledge of any change from that," Steiner said. Johnson told the Times he will continue to speak with his wife about the situation.

"I'll let you know at the end of the week," he told the newspaper. "Either way, I'm in it all the way or I'm out of it all the way. Like I've told her, 'We've got to think about our lives. Our life has been great. We've settled in to [illegible] being retired, we've settled in to me being around home. And now we've got to give all that up again?'

"That's what we've got to talk about because once I'm in, I'm 150 percent. That's what we've got to discuss, whether she can give that up."

Irish eyes are frowning

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — Two Notre Dame football players were reported to be living in an apartment where stolen merchandise was found.

The players are receiver Michael Miller and cornerback Tracy Graham, and the school said Tuesday the investigation is being handled as a student disciplinary matter, meaning criminal charges probably will not be filed.

"We don't do both," Notre Dame spokesman Dennis Moore said. "It's one or the other."

The South Bend Tribune reported Tuesday that Miller and Graham were living in an off-campus apartment where university police found a stolen 27-inch television and videocassette recorder Friday night. The items had been reported stolen on campus in January. A Notre Dame official, whom the newspaper did not identify, signed an affidavit listing Graham as the occupant of the apartment. Telephone and utility company records show those services in Miller's name.

On Saturday, Irish coach Lou Holtz said both players no longer were with the team. Holtz was not available for comment before practice Tuesday.

Athletic department spokesman John Heisler said no decision on the players' status with the team would be determined until the university had completed its investigation. Neither Miller nor Graham will practice until the issue is resolved.

Neither student has been expelled, although that is an option in such cases, Moore said. He would not say if other students were involved.

Although Holtz has said neither player was likely to play for the Irish again, their status remained uncertain Tuesday.

Both players are listed in student telephone directories as dormitory residents. Neither returned telephone messages left at their rooms Tuesday.

However, both told the newspaper they believed the issue could be resolved.

Islamic militants bomb bus

HADERA, Israel (AP) — Islamic militants bombed a bus jammed with soldiers and civilians Wednesday, killing six people and wounding 28. It was the second such attack in a week and raised fears of a new wave of violence.

The Palestinian militants, who oppose the Israel-PLO peace talks, vowed they would carry out at least three more suicide bombings as revenge for the killing of 30 Palestinians Feb. 25 in a Hebron mosque.

Officials tried quickly to reassure the Israeli public, whose support for the peace talks is largely based on the belief they will bring security inside Israel's pre-1967 borders.

Rebels move to capture Rwandan captial

KIGALI, Rwanda (AP) — Government troops and rebel soldiers traded artillery fire and fought street battles in downtown Kigali Wednesday as Tutsi rebels pushed to capture Rwanda's capital. A midday cease-fire was shattered in the afternoon by mortar fire and gunbattles. By nightfall, five mortar rounds were falling each minute during a battle for a building near parliament and the capital was anarchic. Mobs of marauding youths roamed in commandeered cars.

The U.N. Security Council, meanwhile, ruled out a full withdrawal of its 2,500-man peacekeeping mission from the Central African nation, where a weeklong ethnic slaughter has left an estimated 20,000 dead.

A final decision on the future role of U.N. peacekeepers in Rwanda was not expected until later this week.

False breast cancer data terrifies women

WASHINGTON (AP) — Discovery of falsified data in a key breast cancer study has left thousands of women terrified and uncertain about whether they have received proper treatment for the disease, a congressional subcommittee was told yesterday.

Witnesses said they have lost faith in the National Cancer Institute because the federal agency waited years to disclose the false data that tainted the $8 million-a-year cancer study.

Jill Lea Sigal, a 32-year-old Alexandria, Va. woman who discovered last year that she had breast cancer, said she decided to be treated with a lumpectomy and radiation, instead of the more disfiguring mastectomy, on the basis of the study.

Only two weeks ago, she said, did she learn that the study was flawed.

List of cigarette additives released

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's tobacco companies, under intense pressure from Congress, yesterday released a top-secret list of 599 chemicals they add to cigarettes.

The government, unsure whether the public unveiling released them from a federal law prohibiting discussion of the list, would not confirm whether the additives were the same as those reported to the Department of Health and Human Services.

But officials with R.J. Reynolds tobacco company, which spearheaded the release, said the list contained every ingredient the nation's six major tobacco companies are required by law to report to HHS.

The release comes two days before a congressional hearing over what companies put in cigarettes and whether they manipulate the levels of nicotine in them. The Food and Drug Administration is considering whether to regulate nicotine as a drug.

'Outspoken' professor gains support

By MIKE CARVALHO
Collegian Staff

Art history professor Walter Denny is receiving attention from parents, alumni and legislators across the state because of a letter he wishes he'd never had to write.

Prompted by what he calls "intolerable" conditions on the University of Massachusetts campus due to years of neglect, Denny has written a 36–page letter to his students' parents which chronicles the daily obstacles he must overcome in order to teach his courses.

"For years and years, people said, 'Don't complain, because if you complain, people won't believe we're any good and things will get worse,'" said Denny.

"Well, things got worse without my complaining, so I decided to say something."

KRAM GOMAN / COLLEGIAN

Art history professor Walter Denny.

The letter includes photographs of a slide projector which won't focus, a clock which doesn't tell time and filthy classrooms, including several missing seats.

"Pictures don't lie," said Denny, who has sent copies of the letter to several dozen parents and over 100 students at his own expense.

So far, Denny has received hundreds of letters and phone calls of support, mainly from fellow professors and parents. He is continuing to produce and distribute the letter in the hope that it might produce some change in a situation which he says has remained stagnant since he became a faculty member in 1970.

"I have not, in the 24 years that I have been here, ever had even barely adequate teaching facilities," said Denny, adding that, while conditions have always been less than ideal, the last five years have been the worst.

A dramatic decrease in state funding to the University since 1988 has forced the campus administration "to make tough decisions to absorb the cutbacks," according to University spokeswoman Karin Sherbin.

The administration undertook a program of deferred maintenance to make up for the shortfall, cutting the Physical Plant budget from $36 million in 1988 to $31 million in 1993. During that same time, maintenance staff had been cut from 700 to 600 employees.

As a result, the campus is literally beginning to fail apart, a problem that is affecting students and faculty alike.

NATHAN MARTIN / COLLEGIAN

Broken seats abound in Thompson Hall, another symptom of the deferred maintenance Denny wrote about in a letter to parents and students.

Exercise science sophomore Edward Johnson is quite familiar with lecture halls which are missing seats.

"You have to sit on the floor, and the floor is usually dirty," he said.

"It's pretty bad," agreed Jayna Stafford, an undeclared freshman. "We pay a lot of money to go here, but the clocks don't work and there isn't decent furniture in our classes."

Leo Richards, president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors, said that while most professors are not as outspoken as Denny, "his sentiments are very representative of an overwhelming majority of the faculty."

"Personally, I admire his concern for his students," added Richards, "and I hope this will have a positive effect on the budget process."

Little hope for BOG after Senate meeting

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

The Board of Governors is one step away from experiencing major changes within their Registered Student Organization.

Members of the BOG left the Student Senate meeting last night feeling disappointed after the Student Government Association voted not to appeal the proposal by Attorney General Matthew Malone to restructure the organization.

At a meeting on April 7, SGA voted to pass Malone's proposal to create the Campus Center/Student Union Commission. The Commission is made of a nine member board and eliminates the BOG's vice chair and treasurer.

The proposal also cuts the BOG's budget by approximately $65,000. The SGA will also no longer fund the BOG's classified staff person, Judy Harris. All changes will begin on May 1.

The chair of the BOG, George Fitzgerald, blamed SGA for poor judgment and claims the proposal will not help the University.

"In the end the irresponsibility of the current SGA leadership will undoubtedly result in a marked decrease in services provided to the students in the Campus Center and Student Union," Fitzgerald said.

"By the virtue of size, the creation of a nine member commission to replace a 28 member student, faculty and staff organization will result in fewer services," Fitzgerald said.

Malone contested that Fitzgerald was wrong and the proposal passed at the meeting will benefit the Campus Center and the students who use it.

"Categorically that's false," Malone said. "If they (BOG) had read the plan, and they admitted they had not, they would discover several things."

> "The irresponsibility of the SGA leadership will undoubtedly result in a marked decrease in services provided to the students in the Campus Center and Student Union."
> — George Fitzgerald, BOG chair

Malone stated three main points that the plan would do to improve the BOG. Essentially the plan will do everything the board does now with greater accountability and efficiency according to Malone.

"First, the proposal brings greater accountability to the board, because they are directly responsible to the two senates," Malone said.

"Second, it doesn't change the mission of the board," Malone said. "The BOG has the same mis-

Republican Club returns

Zenon, Flynn settle debate over fund mismanagement

By BEN GEMAN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Republican Club was reinstated as a Registered Student Organization by the Student Government Association's Registrar Matthew Pavesi last night after being suspended March 29.

The club had been suspended for failing to comply with SGA by–laws requiring RSOs to maintain documented lists of their membership. The club now officially has members, according to Pavesi.

"They're now following RSO guidelines so there's no need for me to suspend them anymore," Pavesi said. "They're all set."

Pavesi announced his withdrawal of the suspension just before last night's SGA meeting.

The decision to end the suspension was made after club president Greg Zenon and club member Dan Flynn, who is also editor–in–chief of the Minuteman, agreed to reconcile their differences at a meeting held between the two yesterday morning.

The meeting was moderated by ex–Minuteman Editor Ed T. Corrigan.

The Minuteman is published by the Silent Majority, an RSO which shares office space with the Republican Club.

"Neither Daniel Flynn nor myself are going to continue our disagreement with each other," Zenon said.

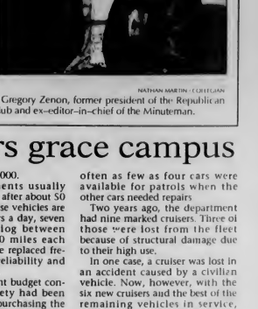
Flynn had previously accused Zenon of mismanaging club resources and paying himself with funds to be used for the publication of the Minuteman when Zenon was editor–in– chief of the paper.

Flynn became the paper's editor–in–chief last semester.

Flynn had alleged that Zenon, as editor–in–chief of the paper, inappropriately put himself on the Silent Majority's payroll with money that was granted by one of the paper's sponsors, the Madison Center.

One of the conditions of the Madison Center's grant was that the funds provided were to be used only for the publication and printing of the paper and not to pay members of the paper's staff.

The Madison Center is a Washington D.C.–based moderate conservative organization which provides funding to collegiate publications through its "Collegiate Network."



The Madison Center discontinued its funding of the Minuteman following the publication of the issue with the words "SODOMY = DEATH" on the cover this semester.

Zenon has repeatedly denied the accusations and says that he used the $160 that Flynn claimed he embezzled to cover expenses incurred while running the paper such as gas costs, the purchase of computer disks and paper, long–distance phone calls to advertisers and laser printing fees.

"I'm not going to pursue anything. I'm just going to let sleeping dogs lie," Flynn said.

"Neither Dan Flynn nor myself are going to pursue any longer any of the problems that we had

Nursing dean will stay for doctoral program

By GERI SAHN
Collegian Staff

When the doctoral program in the Nursing department was approved in March, it was still up in the air whether Melanie Dreher, dean and professor of nursing, would return to the University of Massachusetts.

In January she submitted her resignation from the University. Dreher, frustrated at the original denial of the doctoral program last April by the University Board of Trustees, protested the decision by leaving on a fellowship.

Dreher changed her mind because of the Higher Education Coordination Council's approval of the joint doctoral program with the UMass–Worcester campus.

This past semester she has been doing extensive research in Jamaica studying family life and substance abuse.

She also was elected President of the Sigma Theta Tau International in January. STTI is an honor society for nursing and works to improve public health worldwide.

Dreher came to UMass in 1988. She was hired to establish a doctoral program on campus. The program was put together to advance nursing knowledge as well as other disciplines.

The doctoral program will have students begin their studies in the fall. Applications are now being accepted.

Sleek new cop cars grace campus

By JOHN WILLIAMS
Collegian Correspondent

The sleekest new cars on campus these days aren't being driven by the rich and the spoiled. In fact, they are being piloted by our men and women in blue — the University of Massachusetts Police.

With a yellow racing stripe and the sporty, cursive UMass logo, these gray and navy cruisers have elevated safety patrol to another level of style.

The UMass Department of Public Safety has purchased six of these new–look cruisers to replace the older, high–mileage cars. Replacing the old cruisers was hardly an easy process, according to the Public Safety Department's Director John Lapeled, who said that it took two years of planning and quite a bit of saving to be able to purchase the 1994 Ford Crown Victoria cars.

Luippold said the total cost of the replacement vehicles came to approximately $137,000.

Police departments usually replace their cruisers after about 50 to 75,000 miles. These vehicles are on the road 24 hours a day, seven days a week and log between 20,000 and 25,000 miles each year. They should be replaced frequently to ensure reliability and safety," Lapeled said.

Due to ever–present budget constraints, Public Safety had been forced to postpone purchasing the new cruisers, for which the department had put in a bid last July, according to Sergeant Ray Babb, a 14–year veteran of the UMass police force.

"The old patrol cars that were in service were at or near the 100,000–mile mark, most also logging up to the equivalent of an additional 50,000 to 60,000 miles of engine wear while idling at accident sites and traffic control stops," Babb said.

Because of the overuse and normal abuse cruisers are subject to, often as few as four cars were available for patrols when the other cars needed repairs.

Two years ago, the department had nine marked cruisers. Three of those were lost from the fleet because of structural damage due to their high use.

In one case, a cruiser was lost in an accident caused by a civilian vehicle. Now, however, with the six new cruisers and the best of the remaining vehicles in service, Public Safety will have seven cars available for 24–hour patrols and emergency response situations.

The best of the remaining high–mileage cars retiring from their patrol duties will be retained for non–emergency uses such as training and the escort service. The addition of the high–tech cruisers are expected to ensure the level of police provided safety services remains at an acceptable level.

Don't judge me

There seems to be some eyebrow-raising going on around certain parts of this campus over what people think my political beliefs are. People think they know what I'm all about because of the way I look and the preconceptions and prejudices they have.

Case in point: a couple of weeks ago, Radical Student Union president Charles Lenchner came down to the Collegian office. After he apologized for bastardizing one of Matt Kahn's photographs by putting it in The Liberator without permission, he told Matt that I was a neo-Nazi skinhead. Funny, I thought, how come he never told me? I guess I'll have to stop hanging out with my Jewish friends.

Chris Ragusa

Then, after taking photos of two Holocaust survivors who came to speak last Thursday, a woman (who would not identify herself) called the photo editor to tell him that she was distressed to see me taking photos of Sam and Sidi Natansohn. I had apparently tromped in, made some noise, looked bored, then tromped out.

Funny, I thought again. I remember showing up early, and the only noise I remember making as I crouched discreetly on the side of the first row was the squeak of my camera shutter. Did I look bored wondering whether I should stay to hear Sidi Natansohn speak or get going so I could develop and print my pictures, hopefully getting enough sleep before waking at 6:30 a.m. the next morning? I guess I'll have to smile more about my workload this semester.

The thing that bothers me the most about these people is that they don't even know me, but are content to point fingers from a distance and talk behind my back. Being a person for "social change," you would think that Chuck Lenchner would not base his opinions on hear-say, or what he saw on MTV's "Hate Rock" special. I guess I expected too much to think that radicals should have to live up to the standards that they set for others.

Well, just so you don't have to come down to the photo office and confront me yourself, Chuck — and the rest of you out there who have staring at the laces in my boots for the last two years — here's an all-too-brief synopsis of skinhead culture.

The first skinheads borrowed their style of dress and music from West Indians that came to England, like Reggae great Desmond Dekker (who, by the way, is Jamaican); much akin to the filtration of rap and hip hop into the white culture today. Over the years the cult changed and factions arose. The most ridiculous example is the neo-Nazis, who took the aspects of a racially-integrated cult that they liked, discarding those that clashed with their politics.

The majority of skins hold true to the old beliefs, like myself. For the majority of skins, race has nothing to do with being a skinhead. Being a skinhead is about having a laugh, having your say and not letting people, who are just looking for something to protest and whine about, get you down. If you still don't believe me, you should probably talk to my friend Jake from Boston; he's an African-American, and a skinhead.

Notes from the Campus Center Basement

First things first, let's talk about the power of "Notes from the Campus Center Basement." Thanks in no small part to last week's author, Tracy Monahan, the Board of Governors is now allowing the Girl Scouts to sell their cookies on the concourse. Due to all that negative press they have been experiencing, the BOG has bowed to the pressure from students all over campus, and the scouts will be on the concourse Wednesday, April 20, from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. (or whenever all the cookies are gone).

For those of you who don't know, Resident Assistant interviews for this coming fall were held this past Saturday. I had one, and I would just like to thank all my instant friends at my group interview. Like me, some people are anxiously awaiting to hear from the RA selection committee, so don't ask if they got the job until April 25. They've been counting down the days until the letter saying 'yes,' 'no,' or 'maybe' arrives. By my count, there are 12 days left — good luck waiting.

Last night was room choosing. I hope you got your single, double-single, or roommate. Some people were kicked off the top floors of John Adams in Southwest to make room for new residential programs. . . when I tried to call Housing to find out what programs were going there, everyone in charge was out to lunch. Surprise, surprise.

If you're one of the oh-so-lucky ones moving off-campus, try not to get ripped off. This is a college town, you know, and there are lots of people who can tell you've never rented an apartment before.

Just one quick note on the off-campus housing thing: don't live with more people than you have fingers on your hands. Lots of people means lots of personality conflicts. Also, avoid animals (both the party and furry types) and smokers — unless you are one yourself.

A quick commentary to those followers of Chesty Love, stripper extraordinaire. Any woman who willingly puts herself in the position to carry around a pair of size 56FF breasts is setting herself up for a great deal of back pain. I hope your pleasure due to her freakishness is worth it. When are people going to realize that body type is not the key to love?

A great big thank you goes out to the people who schedule classes. They've scheduled all the classes at the same time, so if you're looking to be full-time next semester, think about taking a home economics or wood technology class. Not that that's a bad thing, but it just might be the only thing that fits into your schedule.

After all, who ever thought they might be able to get out of this place in just four years? I mean, don't you just have a spare couple of thousand dollars to take that extra year to get all your classes for your major?

The Campus Center loading dock, lovingly referred to as the Bat Cave, has a small closed-off storage area. Someone tipped me off that there's some coffee being stored there that smells pretty nasty. Coffee needs to be vacuum-sealed or frozen, otherwise it goes bad quickly, and this stuff sure doesn't smell very good. I bet it doesn't taste too great, either. If you've had any Bluewall coffee lately, you probably know what I'm talking about.

Is it too much to ask for a little fresh coffee? We're in college; coffee is one of the basic food groups, right along with Antonio's and 3 a.m. hot chocolate chip cookies (hurray for delivery!).

The UMass campus needs help

The following is an excerpt from Professor Walter Denny's letter to parents:

There are hundreds of faculty just like me at the University of Massachusetts, working under the same pall of hardship and indifference, making the same sacrifices, suffering the same demoralizing treatment (or lack of treatment), listening to Michael Hooker's lofty plans for the University's future, and wondering which will give out first — our patience or our self-respect.

You see, Michael Hooker has been here only a short time, but we have heard the song he is singing from other presidents, over and over and over again. It's like what the French say — "the more things change, the more they stay the same." In bad times we get nothing, and in good times we get administrative vanity projects, vanity hirings, and more administrators.

Why am I writing this? Maybe one reason is that I have a five year-old son who is going to have to go to college some day. Now on my salary, with my professional expenses, I can't afford to send Matthew to Harvard or Boston University or Tufts. So for me, the quality of the University of Massachusetts means a lot more than the amount of salary or self-respect it brings me at work.

Budgets come and budgets go, but twelve years from now, the structural problems are likely to be the same unless something very radical happens.

Knowing what I do, would I send my own son to my own University?

I think a lot about this question. I'd like you to think about it too. Despite everything I've written I am still crazy enough to love this place and to have some hope for its future. But without fundamental changes, there is no future.

What do you think? What's wrong with this campus, and what can we do about it? If you have concerns about the condition of the UMass campus, or have ideas as to how things can be changed, we want to hear from you.

Send your letters to the Collegian, 113 Campus Center, UMass.

Join your fellow students and American Express in support of the 10th Annual Hunger Cleanup.

On April 16th, students from your school and local residents will pitch in together, participating in a nationwide event that assists worthy causes while helping to improve community life across the nation.

The Hunger Cleanup is a three hour "work-a-thon" where you take part in a community work project such as painting a shelter, cleaning a playground, or starting a neighborhood food garden. And the funds you raise in sponsorships for your work will be distributed by the event's organizer – the National Student Campaign Against Hunger and Homelessness.

Your school is among 190 participating this year, making Hunger Cleanup the largest one-day community service event in the country. American Express salutes all the volunteers and is proud to be the sole national sponsor.

Since 1984, Hunger Cleanups have raised almost a million dollars, with the help of over 70,000 students. People like you, making all the difference in the world.

Women targeted by firearms

Gun makers have found a new market — women. In a January 1992 Washington Post article on the subject, the statistics speak for themselves: "Smith and Wesson reports that purchases of the LadySmith handguns, designed for women, doubled in sales in 1992. The company's research also shows that the number of women saying they might buy a gun grew from 7.8 million in 1983 to 15 million five years later. And the NRA [National Rifle Association] estimates its female membership has grown to about 550,000 of its 3.3 million base, compared with 330,000 of its 2.45 million total in 1991."

Joy Collins

In fact, there are now at least two companies who have targeted and capitalized on the idea. The guns have "cosmetic enhancements" such as pearl handles or pastel shades. Other companies market carrying cases that double as pocketbooks and fanny packs. Their advertisements reveal the typical "made for women" agenda: "Here's a fanny pack that's made especially for you and your gun. . . It's soft and stylish, for casual wear, jogging or sports."

Quoting rape and sexual assault statistics, gunmakers and the NRA offer "firepower" as a solution for women, a way to be proactive about crime and deal with a violent society. As part of their new-found concern about the welfare of women, the NRA now offers a "Refuse to Be a Victim" brochure, and a hotline to boot.

According to the Post article, the brochures feature actress Susan Howard, who is pictured saying, "Like you, I've felt the fear of being female in a society where violence against women has become commonplace. That's why I have refused to be a victim, and why I'm an active member in the NRA." The pamphlet promises that "a woman will answer your call" to the hot line.

Although the evidence points to a purely capitalist venture disguised as genuine concern, the NRA claims its goal is not to urge women to buy firearms, but to "make informed choices." Ironically, part of becoming informed also means learning that a gun is 43 times more likely to be used against you, your family or a friend than against an intruder (L.A. Times, June 20, 1993).

Yet there is more in store for women in the gunmaker/ NRA marketing arsenal — they have a guru. Paxton Quigley, a former anti-gun activist turned sell-out, has written a book, started a magazine and passed herself off as a feminist. Quigley's book, Armed and Female, advocates female gun use as both empowering and fun.

According to a February, 1993 Wall Street Journal article, Quigley, who now teaches courses in firearms training for women, claims her goal is to "empower women by showing them how to take responsibility for their own safety. . . ." Backed by the NRA and funded by Smith and Wesson Corp., Quigley clearly has other more fiscal goals as well.

A former student of Quigley's says that having and knowing how to use a gun is "the last frontier of feminism." This method of weaving "feminism" into controversial issues has become a common way to entrap the participation of women in their own destruction. It has been used by cigarette companies and pornographers, and it will continue to be used as long as women allow themselves to be patsies for the patriarchy, and companies are allowed to benefit from others' self-destruction.

The phrases these companies and organizations use in their defense serve as parasites, feeding off the words of the women's movement. The pro-gun people use words and catch phrases like "our choice, our right, our empowerment" to sell their product, and allude to the idea that a woman who owns and knows how to use a gun is "taking responsibility for her own protection."

She is empowered because she now equates a gun with safety. She is in control because she has a weapon. She is self-confident because she knows how to use one. She carries it always. She is unprotected without it. She is useless if it is wrested away from her, kicked out of her hands or simply not with her. She feels powerful with it — vulnerable without it.

What these gun makers' marketing tactics have created is an illusion of safety equated with guns — an entity separate from the woman herself. Thus, if the woman associates self- protection with something that is not of her, something that is outside of her, something that can be taken from her or used against her, how is she empowered? How is she taking responsibility for her own protection?

It is simple. What gun makers care about is selling guns — not helping women to empower themselves. Women's fears are real, the statistics are real, but the answer, the path to social change, does not come in the form of a gun. Don't let them use you — you and your fear, you and your need for and right to safety — to sell a product that jeopardizes lives and contributes to the destruction of society.

Teenage suicide: don't do it

Dear Kurt Cobain,

Why is it that everyone likes taking the easy way out? You feel the pressures of the walls of life collapsing down around you, so you take the quick ticket out — and I'm not talking about a trip, either. It's one-way, and you can't turn back. Well, let me tell you something: death really sucks.

I mean, you go and blow your head off with a 12-gauge in the middle of the living room, splattering blood all over your mother's favorite carpet, and that's it. All you're left with is with one big mess and a closed casket. Your family won't even get a chance to look at you one last time. Great decision.

I'm real sorry you committed suicide. I'll admit, I thought you were a decent singer and a good musician. On the other hand, your record as a husband and a father is somewhat lacking. I'm sure Courtney Love isn't the easiest person to live with, but I think you go a little too far when you pull a gun on your wife.

Why did you go and kill yourself? Blame it on the music. One minute you're screaming "rape me," and the next there's an extra hole in your head. Not cool, Kurt. "Cobain had personal problems," the obituaries said. That's an understatement.

No one was responsible for your death. But, if you're going to do it, why not make it dramatic. No, you just died. No fanfare, no lights, no fireworks. Just you, lying dead on a floor. The point is, what's left?

Maybe you should think about this, Kurt: you left thousands of fans without their leader, no matter how screwed up you might have been. Not to mention leaving your 20-month old daughter without a father. She'll never have her daddy to hold her hand when walking across the street. She'll never have her daddy to put her to bed, or bring her to her first school dance or give her away at her wedding. I wish you had read this before you forced me to write it.

This is serious. You can't come back. You can't press rewind, put a band-aid on the cut or kiss it and make it better. You dug your grave Kurt, and no matter what you can say, now you're lying in it. One of your fans has already followed your example. Do you want to be Joan of Arc or David Koresh?

"Have you written a note? How are we going to know why you did it if you don't write a note?" asked Christian Slater in the movie Heathers. Courtney says you wrote a rather lengthy suicide note so mybe we can figure out why you decided to spill your brains instead of your guts.

You know, Kurt, even I've had suicidal tendencies. I think we all do. It's when you're going home after a really bad day. You're crossing a street and you see the PVTA bus coming and you hope it doesn't slow down. But it always does and you end up getting home safely. What you did was jump in front of that bus.

Justin Doyle

People reading this column may get the wrong idea, but you and I both know the truth. Stepping off a ledge or, in your case, pulling that trigger isn't a simple thing to do, but it's a lot easier than dealing with what put you there. When that happens you have to make a choice. Life isn't a joke. It isn't a cartoon where the Wile E. Coyote falls off a cliff a dozen times only to rehash his strategies and try, try again to catch the Road Runner.

I wouldn't say this unless I didn't fully understand why one commits suicide, either. I watched my friend Ray and his family deal with the loss of a person they cared very much for. What do you say to a person after they just found out that one of their friends blew their head off? What do you think your friends and family are saying to try and explain it, Kurt? I surely don't know.

What I'm trying to say is that you had other options. You left like some of the greats. Maybe you weren't so great, but a lot of people thought so. You probably got all doped up, wrote your sob story, then stepped out of the spotlight. Sometimes that light burns a little too bright. Now all you can see is dark. Hope it didn't hurt, because the rest of us are sure feeling the pain.

A little help with pre-reg

'Tis the season to be stressed out. With the end of the semester approaching, it's that time again folks — pre- registration for classes. Last week, you started to see those grey books popping up all over campus — those pages that list every class available next semester.

These are the only two weeks that most students actually care about their future classes. Come September, some of these gems won't be too fun when you actually meet the professor.

I've got two more sessions of trying to pick classes which not only fit my schedule but also fill my graduation requirements. As of this moment, I need two courses (one Journalism and one Political Science) to fulfill my major and minor, respectively. What does that mean for the remainder of my stay in Amherst? Pure potluck, that's what.

Arthur Stapleton Jr.

I can take anything I want — all I need are 24 credits to get that piece of paper they call a diploma. I've decided to search through the pre-reg guide for what seem to be interesting classes.

• English 419H, Games Thinkers Play: This class is a four-credit honors course which meets on Wednesday nights from 6-9 p.m. Cool. I've played Yahtzee, Jenga, Checkers, Solitaire, Spit and Sorry! I wonder if chess is a pre-requisite.

Wait a minute, I can't take this class. it meets during "90210", and if it runs late, I may miss some of "Melrose Place." Damn.

• Geology 100, Dynamic Earth: This class is a three-credit course which meets MWF at 12:20 p.m. I wonder if it has anything to do with the Dynamic Duo. Seriously, a lot of people take this class thinking it is going to be easy, then fail. A friend of mine has already failed it once and is taking it again. I don't like rocks that much.

• Wood Technology 201, Introduction to Wood Sciences: This class is a three-credit lecture/lab course which meets MF 9:05, with the lab on M or T. I'll let the book do the talking — "Learn more about wood, the renewable material we each use all day, every day."

Hmm, it meets in the early morning. It's about wood. Dare I say it? Huh-huh, huh-huh. Seen that.

• Philosophy 391F, Free Will: This class is a three-credit seminar course which meets Wednesdays from 2:30-5:30 p.m. Well, I thought it was pretty good. My roommate got all choked up when the whale jumped over the kid at the end. I can't wait for the sequel. The movie only runs for two hours, though, so either we get out early or we discuss the film for an hour. An easy A.

• History 426, The Irish Experience: This class is a three-credit course which meets on Tuesday from 4-6:30 p.m. I'm Irish. My roommate is one of the biggest Irishmen I know, along with that guy who writes the comic strip 'Gleeson.' My other friend got into a bar sporting a Team Ireland soccer jersey and an Irish accent. I've enjoyed my experience with them. I like this class. I might take it.

• Math 131, Calculus I: I will not tell you when this class meets. Almost every person I know has failed this course. More than once. Are there professors who know how to teach math? Well, I'll do the math for you — if you can't do it, change your major. Oh, by the way, what is the function of x to the 87th power times y to the 187th power?

• Music 190A, American Popular Music: This class is a three-credit course which meets MWF at 9:05 a.m. Pearl Jam. Smashing Pumpkins. The Lemonheads. Ace of Base. The Cranberries. Indigo Girls. Naughty by Nature. Dr. Dre and Snoop Doggy Dogg. Black 47 (maybe I'll get to hear some 'Funky Ceili' in that Irish Experience class). Billy Joel. Elton John. Travis Tritt. Journey.

Basically, what I'm trying to say is everything's popular in America depending on whom you talk to. However, I'd take the class if Casey Kasem taught it.

Otherwise, I'll be in my room listening to Eddie Vedder.

• Physical Education G53, Pocket Billiards: This class is a one-credit course which meets MWF at 9:05 a.m. or TuTh at 9:30-10:45 a.m. I like to play pool at the bars, but that would be at night, not in the morning. That'd be great, though, because a homework assignment could mean coming into class drunk and playing eight-ball.

You fail, of course, if you sink it.

• Biology 550, Animal Behavior: This class is a three- credit course which meets TuTh 11:15 a.m.-12:30 p.m. I could just imagine the weekend assignment — go to Brandywine, watch people drink and get drunk, and observe the dunce who always starts the fights. Finally, I can get credit for hanging out on the weekends.

• Art History 522, Modern Art 1880-Present: This class is a three-credit course which meets for a lecture on MW at 12:20 p.m. and a discussion on Friday. I was born in 1973, so you don't have to worry about 1880 until then. I now live in Rochelle Park, N.J., with my two parents and younger sister. I'm the sports editor for the Collegian and...

Lost boot classified isn't going to work

To the editor:

This letter is meant for one person and one person only.

I'm curious and annoyed, and I have to know the truth. Would the person who lost the L.L. Bean boot last semester please step forward and identify yourself? I'm sure I'm not the only one who wants to smack you with the heel of that very boot.

How much money do you waste on those classified ads? I'm sure you've spent enough already to buy the entire L.L. Bean Factory Outlet. Do you actually think you're going to find it? Give up. It's gone and you are not going to get it back.

No one in the Happy Valley knows where it is and, if they did, they probably wouldn't return it. And do you want to know why? Because no one cares. Please stop your petty pleas for Bean Boot Salvation. It was funny for a while — it even sparked a few amusing conversations. But now I think you've gone too far.

Reader finds fault with 'Bruno' comic

To the editor:

The view expressed in C. Baldwin's 'Bruno' comic that women's fashion is caused by "societal influences (trying to) convict (them) to [sic] a life of spiked-heeled foot deformers by illusionary reasoning [sic] of a sick sexual ideal" are deeply misguided.

Both men's and women's appearances are the result of the interaction between choice and preference, not an evil plot by an imaginary monolithic mob determined to humiliate women.

Those familiar with economic theory will recall that, in the free market economy, the forms products take are chiefly the result of consumer preference. The mechanism which provides the link between what people want and what firms make is competition. If the public only liked chocolate ice cream, that's what the companies would make. The makers who didn't wouldn't sell anything.

A similar mechanism operates on the "dating market." Both women and men find themselves in competition for prospective mates and, their natural endowments notwithstanding, those who present themselves in the manner closest to the preferences of the opposite sex will have the advantage.

The "consumers'" preferences are thus revealed simply by looking around you. We like to keep our hair neat. We try to exude an air of confidence to make the right impression. We all try to stay in shape. All else equal, those who don't present themselves as well get chosen second.

The end result is actually very nice: all around you, people are looking as attractive as they can. And it's not only a matter of actually dating. People like to feel attractive, even if they're married or celibate. It's just our nature.

People who flout those customs by putting rings through their noses and wearing tattered clothes have simply chosen not to try and compete in the same way. They have different preferences. That's fine, too. Assigning value to tastes can't be done. It can't be "wrong" to like chocolate more than vanilla, yellow better than green. There is no "sick sexual ideal." What people like in their prospective dates just is, no value can be assigned to it.

SGA reaffirms BOG restructure

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Student Government Association last night voted against a motion to repeal the decision they made last week to restructure the Board of Governors and to cut its budget.

Last week, the SGA approved a motion to cut the BOG's budget from $80,000 to $15,160. The motion also said the BOG's classified staff person would no longer be funded by the Student Activities Trust Fund, which is controlled by the student government.

Because the SGA voted on this motion without debating it first, the senate spent last night's meeting debating on whether or not to repeal last week's motion so that it could be debated on properly and voted on again.

BOG Chair George Fitzgerald said he doubted that most of the senators at last week's meeting knew that the motion they were voting on would eliminate the funds for the classified staff person.

"The board has a classified staff employee that has been with the board for 20 years, 20 years of service in this building acting on the behalf of students," Fitzgerald said. "And I am sure many of you [the SGA senators] did not know when you voted on this motion that you would be putting this woman out of a job and putting her on the street."

Fitzgerald also took issue with the method in which the motion to restructure the BOG came about. Fitzgerald said early in the semester, the Board of Governors met with the Graduate Student Senate and the associate director of the Campus Center to negotiate a plan to restructure the BOG. The plan was completed and approved by the BOG in March.

However, the SGA's own restructuring committee changed the plan that the BOG approved. Last week, the SGA voted and approved the plan that had been amended by the SGA's restructuring committee. The major change the SGA's committee made to the motion that was approved by the BOG is that the classified staff person regardless of whether or not the BOG was going to get restructured. He said the reason for cutting the staff position is because the SGA in $175,000 in debt and it would rather use its resources to fund student groups.

Hathaway also disputed Fitzgerald's claim that the classified staff person was being thrown out on the street. He said because the staff person is in a union, she is guaranteed another job in another University department.

"Because she signed a contract with the University, the University is required to give her another job and pay her the same amount of money," Hathaway said. "The worst case scenario is that she might have to bump someone else out of a job who has less experience."

NASA researchers descend Carlsbad cave

CARLSBAD, N.M. (AP) — Space researchers have descended into the nation's deepest known cave in hopes of learning whether there is life on Mars and maybe even finding a cure for cancer.

Five members of the research team began the trek Tuesday in the sulfurous, microbe-rich atmosphere of Lechuguilla Cave, which winds for more than 70 miles to a depth of 1,593 feet.

"It's kind of an inner trip to outer space," NASA engineer Larry Lemke said. "We're going in the opposite direction to get to outer space."

The scientists are laden with 50-pound backpacks and are being guided by cave experts for the five-day journey, which will take them through crawl spaces and walkways, and down vertical drops of 90 and 150 feet.

Researchers believe the sulfur-dominated milieu may be similar to that of Mars. Bacteria in the cave get their energy from sulfur and iron, believed to be two main ingredients of Mars' soil. In addition, microbes found in other pristine caves emit a certain chemical that appears effective against leukemia cells, said team leader Larry Mallory, a soil biochemist from the University of Massachusetts. Tests so far have not involved animals or humans.

"It's an area of research that, in my opinion, must be followed up," Mallory said. "Our initial results are promising enough that we are very enthusiastic about it."

In earlier explorations, cave mappers found bacteria and fungi along with the remains of a 25,000-year-old giant ground sloth and a 45,000-year-old ring-tailed cat.

"Back in my day, we used to wait in line for hours starting at 5 in the morning just to get one class during add/drop. We didn't have 'telephone add/drop!' Back in my day, we didn't even have phones..."

Concert culminates conference in style

Hendricks, Hampton and the Jazzmasters commemorate Black musicians by heating up the MAC

By JORMA KANSANEN
Collegian Staff

Photography by Christopher Ragusa / Collegian

This evening in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall, the 23rd annual Black Musicians Conference will culminate in a performance which includes some of the jazz world's greats. A highlight of this week's conferences, namely, students and confidants of the late great Dizzy Gillespie, will be joining together in this once in a lifetime opportunity.

Headlining the show will be vocalist Jon Hendricks and Company with Slide Hampton and the Jazzmasters. Also, the University of Massachusetts Chapel Jazz Ensemble, conducted by David Sporney, will be performing an introductory piece for this evening's lineup.

This conference was established to recognize the contributions that African–Americans have made to jazz and world music, and this concert is true to that fact.

"This brings together the biggest names and the experts in the field," explained Mark Scearce of the Fine Arts Center Department of Multicultural Programs. "We hope it will raise the consciousness of both jazz and world music, and it is the first time we have had big name artists performing for this occasion," said Scearce.

One of the double bill's headliners on this show is the acclaimed vocalist Jon Hendricks. Given the title of "the poet–laureate of jazz" by critic Leonard Feather, Hendricks has an impressive record of achievements in jazz music.

Known as the "father of vocalese," Hendricks is the originator of this style, best exemplified by the Manhattan Transfer album from which his name is taken. Along with his Grammy for his work on this project, his out of the accomplishments grow to include his work as a vocalist for Thelonius Monk and feature spot in Duke Ellington's premiere Sacred Concert.

Also onstage for the evening is Dizzy's extravaganza, the Jazzmasters, with Musical Director Slide Hampton, have played with in the Gillespie legacy. Most all members of this 18-piece nucleus are alumni of the legend's United Nation Orchestra, and Hampton has periodically worked with Dizzy since the 1960s.

Comprised of jazz greats such as Jimmy Heath, the Jazzmasters work with both new arrangements and originals by other composers, in an attempt to further perpetuate the world of big band jazz.

"It is a special event, not only for this great lineup," said Baszak, "but because Fred Tillis (the Director of the Fine Arts Center) composed a piece with Slide Hampton, and it will be played the evening of the show."

Entitled "Triptich," the piece is composed of three parts written by Tillis, Hampton and Heath, and will performed by an ensemble that any other concert hall would envy. Coupled with the Distinguished Achievement Awards given to jazz greats Doc Cheatam and Abdullah Ibrahim on last Tuesday, the FAC and this University will truly be a part of the world scene tonight.

Tickets are $19.50 for the general public. Five College students, $9.75; age 16 and under, $8. Call the Fine Arts Center at 545–2511 for more information.

Also, a lecture/demonstration will be given by Hampton and Gillespie's former manager, Charles Fishman, in Bezunson Recital Hall from 2:30–4:30. Admission is free, and open to the public.

The A.L. Interview: Checking in with 'Late Night' host Conan O'Brien

Conan O'Brien COURTESY NBC-TV

By EMILY MARINO
Collegian Staff

Almost a year ago, the tumultuous late night television scene jolted long–time David Letterman fans, and caused them to utter with bewilderment, the name of one, virtually unknown replacement.

As Letterman headed to CBS, Conan O'Brien packed up his memoirs from the drawing boards of "Saturday Night Live" and "The Simpsons" in pursuit of "Late Night" success, virtually redefining the word underdog.

The 30–year–old comedy writer was under the scrutiny of many; from "Late Night" fans who had not missed a single Letterman show in its 11–year existence, to network bigwigs, who initially had their replacement sights set on names like Dana Carvey, Dennis Miller and Garry Shandling.

Time magazine's Kurt Anderson recapitulated the public's doubt, and attributed it to O'Brien's lack of experience rather than lack of fame.

"What was hard was that whole period when everyone was looking at me but I hadn't done anything yet," said O'Brien. "That was weird."

With $70 million in advertising revenues at stake, and at the mercy of the laughter and whim of some three million viewers, much was riding on whether or not O'Brien's image would "sell."

During this time of transitional hype, the voiceless O'Brien was pegged by the networks and television critics as a demigod for the younger generation.

"Conan O'Brien represents the voice of a whole new generation for the late night audience, and we are very excited to have him as part of our team," said Warren Littlefield, president of NBC entertainment, at the time.

Munching on Chinese food and recalling the "crazy parties" of his days at Harvard University, O'Brien sounded more like a slightly disinterested member of Littlefield's projected audience than its ringleader.

"I don't want anybody else claiming to speak for me, so I don't claim to speak for anybody else," said O'Brien, regarding his TV label. The "Late Night" host rejects the idea of classifying his show according to the age of his audience or the social analysis of their morale. O'Brien attributes the origin of the label to the media's presentation of "Generation X."

"What is 'Generation X,'" O'Brien challenged. "I'm 30, so why do I speak for someone who is 22, and can someone who is 22 speak for someone who is 19? It's all kind of silly; I don't think of it that way," he said. "I'm just doing my show, my way, and if young people like it, then great."

O'Brien's agenda for "Late Night" is influenced strongly by his own idea of comedy and his personal entertainment preferences.

"I'm doing stuff that I think is funny. I'm putting on bands that I like and featuring comedy that I think is different, and weird, and [the] kind of stuff that hasn't really been seen before," said O'Brien.

> "What is 'Generation X,'" O'Brien challenged. "I'm 30, so why do I speak for someone who is 22. And can someone who is 22 speak for someone who is 19? It's all kind of silly; I don't think of it that way," he said. "I'm just doing my show, my way, and if young people like it, then great."

O'Brien views his role on "Late Night" as upholding the same comic standards to which he was dedicated while doing behind–the–scenes comedy writing. He does not feel that the two mediums differ significantly, in light of his physically active writing methods.

"I was always a writer who performed," O'Brien said. "I used to sit in a room with other writers and say, 'hey, what about this?' and act it out."

"You bounce around people a lot. A lot of it is walking around — you see Chris Farley," he said, referring to his experience working at "Saturday Night Live" in New York, "and you jump on top of him, and start thinking about a sketch where some people jump on top of each other," O'Brien explained.

Instinct plays a large part in the choices O'Brien makes as an entertainer, and his colleagues credit him as having a natural zeal.

"He can keep a room of seething, self–hating, resentful comedy writers laughing for minutes on end," said Matt Groening, creator and executive producer of "The Simpsons," with whom O'Brien worked recently. "He does a lot of schtick and runs around the room."

Executive "Late Night" Producer and "Saturday Night Live" Creator, Lorne Michaels, told the media that O'Brien's "good sense of comedy, vitality, wit and intelligence" convinced him to stick his neck out to help O'Brien land the job in the first place.

Furthermore, Jim Downey, a head writer at SNL praised O'Brien's "tremendous energy" and "own style of being funny" in an interview with the New York Times. Downey said, "I think Conan is one of those guys who makes you laugh more, the more you get to know him."

O'Brien's easy manner conveyed a sincere desire to find humor in even the most simple experiences, like being born in a Boston "Lying–in" hospital, to growing up in a "real repressed Irish Catholic family" in Brookline, Mass.

At Harvard, O'Brien majored in history and the literature of America, hoping to study a "wide swath" of information that would not limit future academic and career pursuits.

"The idea of saying, 'I'm going to commit to studying just philosophy for a couple of years' — that's ridiculous. You are like, 19 years old, or something, and you don't know what you are going to do."

O'Brien cited opportunities to read a variety of fiction and non–fiction, study history and popular culture, and "screw around" as some of his most memorable experiences during his college career. Likewise, the work he did at the Lampoon, one of the University's publications, was "a real waking–up experience" for O'Brien, who then began to think about devoting himself to comedy.

After graduation, O'Brien's career took various turns within

Four Weddings charm rings out

THE REEL WORLD
by Jon Lupo

The funny, glorious Four Weddings and a Funeral is sure to warm the hearts and tickle the funny–bones of weary filmgoers sick of stupendously lame comedies aimed at adolescent no–minds (Ace Ventura) as well as romantic date–movies starring Meg "I've played this role a million times and I'm still bland as wilty lettuce" Ryan. Weddings is a British film, with a mostly English cast, but its laughs and unabashed romanticism are universal.

Anchored by a strong cast, Weddings updates the screwball comedy, fusing it with '90s neuroses but keeping the breakneck pace, witty one–liners and charmingly convoluted plot. With the potency of a valentine from an old love, and the comfort of a laugh from an old friend, Weddings is undeniably wonderful — a date movie you don't need a date for.

The takes place mostly at, well, four weddings and one funeral. Hugh Grant (Sirens) is a perennially late wedding guest at the center of a circle of friends who keep meeting up at these weddings, battling their insecurities and commitment fears.

There's Grant's roommate Scarlett (Charlotte Coleman); his deaf brother David (David Bower); the flamboyant Gareth (Simon Callow); his lover Matthew (John Hannah); the rich, awkward Tom (James Fleet) and his sister, the lightly coiled Fiona (Kristin Scott Thomas).

There's also Grant himself, a confirmed bachelor who swims from relationship to relationship, leaving in his wake a boatful of ex–girlfriends (some of whom are seated at the same table with Grant at one wedding).

Each member of the group has his/her own private constant craving. Grant's object of beauty is the film's weakest link, the uninspiring Andie MacDowell (Short Cuts). She plays an American who keeps popping up at the weddings, continually flirting with Grant (even at her own nuptials), but unable to connect with him. Will he get the girl? Is MacDowell an untalented windbag, the poor–man's Madeleine Stowe?

While there is plenty of organized hilarity at the weddings, including the requisite fumbling priest, misplaced rings and scores of drunk revelry, there's an undercurrent of sadness. In the midst of this unlon of "love," there's plenty of regret and loneliness in every toast, every dance, every sip of champagne.

The film's single funeral then, becomes its fulcrum. One of their own has passed on, and it's an impassioned wake–up call to Grant and his friends. In a moving eulogy, a character remembers a lost love. It's the knowing universality of the monologue that has less to do with trying to appeal to everyone than the simple fact that the elusiveness of love is something we've all dealt with.

Anchoring Weddings is the inimitable personality of Hugh Grant, who's been eschewing comparisons to another Grant (Cary, that is). In many ways, he's a hybrid of Cary Grant and David Niven; nimble and sure, suave and lovestruck. Enjoying a near–monopoly on screens lately (he can also be seen in Remains of the Day, Sirens and Bitter Moon), Grant may be on the cusp of overnight success, but he's been working many years to get there (check out his stellar work in Merchant–Ivory's 1987 Maurice).

Andie MacDowell, on the other hand, has had the kind of stardom reserved only for ex–supermodels who've done enough movies to make people forget she used to be a model. But as the perfect girl for Grant, it doesn't matter much who it is, MacDowell is safe here.

The supporting cast is ripe with dandy performances, each carving out his/her eccentricities with equal aplomb, though two stand out. As the ribald Gareth, A Room With a View's Simon Callow overacts a bit, (his enthusiasm is infectious, though) while A Handful of Dust's Kristin Scott Thomas is a sharp scene stealer. They're characters you'll want to visit again.

There's a lot to love about Four Weddings and a Funeral — this is the most exuberant adult fairy tale since Much Ado About Nothing. Silly without being mind–numbing, Weddings manages to wrap a broad comedy around a swooning romance, creating an irresistible invitation any filmgoer would be wise to RSVP. A– (Now playing at Mt. Farms; starts Friday at Academy of Music)

Breaking out the barbecue

With a few essentials, spring means all–day parties

By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR.
Collegian Staff

Saturdays mean only one thing in the spring, here at the University — all–day parties. Hey, there is no college basketball on television, the weather is usually too nice to stay in the dorms, and everyone loves peer pressure.

Partying doesn't always have to include pushing and shoving for a turn at pumping the keg. Masses of drunk fools stumbling around the backyard of whatever apartment complex just doesn't cut it. So I'm here to give you the key to having a great time in the Spring — host a barbecue.

I haven't had the chance to be the master of ceremonies at one of these shin–digs,-- mainly because I don't think my RA, Reggie, would appreciate a barbecue in John Adams. However, last weekend I played an integral part in a successful BBQ, and was asked to give some pointers to the reading audience.

Here they are — my essentials to a great BBQ.

Thirty of your closest friends: You can't expect to have fun by yourself. . . O.K., I'll rephrase that — you can't barbecue alone.

The sun: The weather matters; not so much the warmth as the brightness. If the sun is out, people will be happy — and your cool guy friends have a reason to wear their cool guy shades.

A grill: Barbecued food out of the oven is not the same. The grease from the grate, the soot from the charcoal. . . mmm, nothing beats it. By the way, the bigger, the better.

We had two hibachis, one extremely larger than the other. On the right, we had Andre the Giant, smoking away, while Tattoo lurked to the left.

A chef: Once you get the grill, obviously you need someone to cook. Here's a hint — nominate a person who doesn't drift into outer space very often, doesn't talk too much and can stay in one place for a long period of time. Hamburgers become hockey pucks rather quickly if your Betty Crocker is easily distracted.

Food: What's a barbecue without food? Uhh, kind of like a bubble bath without bubbles. Get the same people to buy all of the food. Chicken, burg– the entertainment field. He initially worked with an improvisational theatre group called The Groundling, and moved onto writing for HBO's "Not Necessarily the News," and FOX's "The Wilton-North Report."

O'Brien is best known for his contributions to skit writing for NBC's "Saturday Night Live" and for his work at "The Simpsons" on FOX.

Today, O'Brien's following is growing to the point where audience members have to be turned away at every show. Despite mixed ratings, O'Brien continues to battle it out in the late night television war, and according to the host, has time on his side in gaining ground.

There is some controversy, though, among avid fans regarding O'Brien's hair, which, some argue, has gotten progressively "bigger" over time.

"I keep trying to knock it down," laughed O'Brien. "It's always been kind of like that; I don't have to do that much."

With much the same disregard for the media, O'Brien continues to tackle the world of late night television, all in his own stride.

Tasty eats are a must-have for any successful barbecue.

ers, hot dogs, chips, dips. . . I'll stop there. The quantity is very important because of the occasional mishap behind the grill (dropped burgers, burned burgers, hungry friends).

Never bring all of the food out at once. Keep some in the fridge for your straggling friends; there are always at least five (two of them are probably freshmen) who thought you said the cookout began at 5 p.m. instead of 1 p.m.

Wiffle ball and bat, along with a shiny chair for the catcher: The greatest sport of all–time, wiffle ball. Men and women of all ages, shapes and sizes can do one thing alike: pretend they are real baseball players by playing wiffle ball. Except for the guys and gals who don't have the right skills at the plate, no one will need the biggest crutch of them all, the Red Bat: that big, fat non–yellow number which real wiffle ball sluggers do not use.

The keg: This is not essential, yet it can greatly add to any weekend festivities. Get large cups, too. If you don't drink beer, there's always water.

I don't know why people like to guzzle beer so much. It's not like people start doing anything different. Or funny. Or stupid. But hey, we all greet spring in our own way.

Bat spins: Place one end of the wiffle ball bat on your chin, with the opposite end pointing at the sky. Make sure you are looking up at the end of the bat and begin to spin. Gradually go faster, counting out loud for 20 seconds. Then, when you are done, drop the bat, and, without pausing, leap over it.

Pucker up and get ready to kiss the ground. Your friends are guaranteed to make fools of themselves. . . and get injured to boot. Granted that only your drunk pals will try it, but, still, the laughter that erupts before, during and after makes bat spins well worth the time.

Dominos: No, not the pizza place — the game itself. The one that Doughboy and Little Chris were playing in Boyz 'n the Hood. We didn't play this past weekend but I had hoped to. . . when the alcohol started kicking in.

A camera: if the keg works like you hope, photos probably will be one of two ways the drunks can find out how stupid they really acted. It's amazing how many people jump up and down, trying to get in the spotlight. Watch out for your friends who like to hog the camera, too.

Sega: Just kidding.

No plans for later that night: Believe me, if you follow all of my suggestions at your next BBQ, you'll have no energy to do anything else but sleep — and plan your next barbecue. It's supposed to be in the 70s this Saturday: break out the grill, I'll buy the keg.

Local loyals await Phish

COURTESY OF C. BOLAN

Phish fans will flip for Saturday's sold-out show in the William D. Mullins Center.

By JONATHAN RATCLIFF
Collegian Staff

John Fishman steps down from the drum rise. Lead singer/ guitarist Trey Anastasio puts his guitar down and takes over on the skins. Fishman proceeds to do a solo on an old Hoover vacuum, or perhaps sing a Neil Diamond cover.

He is dressed in a shiny blue, skin–tight lycra superhero's suit and a pair of goggles. In warmer weather, however, Fishman prefers a baggy sun dress held together by duct tape.

The audience goes wild.

Trampolines, strobe lights, and thousands of people hushed to hear an unamplified a cappella rendition of Skynard's "Freebird." Horn sections, fiddle players, and Carlos Santana as guest musicians. These are all things you might see at a Phish show.

It is Phish's creative live shows that set them apart from most contemporary music acts. Phish is very spontaneous, and every show is different. More important than the guests and gags is the music itself.

Phish travels down improvisational avenues while they play, and many of their songs provide a mere foundation for the band to build upon, leading into the improv grooves they are famous for among their fans. Phish shows a high level of musical skill and talent that leaves little to be desired for in their label–defying, whimsical blend of musical styles.

Phish's musical stew utilizes ingredients from (or sometimes parodies of) rock, country western and bluegrass, funk, jazz and blues. You name it, Phish has probably played it.

Despite these influences, Phish has a sound that is, well, strictly Phish. The band members are able to feel each other out, and use this to play off each other in a precisely tight, yet relaxed and free way.

On their music, Bassist Mike Gordon offers this bit of philosophy on the band's musical ideology.

"I think our ideal is to have music be an experience that can transform consciousness, to spark imagination, to put people in a groove," said Gordon. "It should make people realize that life is a thing worth celebrating."

If you had told the members of Phish a few years ago that they would be selling out big arenas like the Mullins Center, Great Woods, and the

Signorile views portrayal of lesbians, gays, bisexuals

By WENDY DARLING
Collegian Correspondent

When a friend of Michelangelo Signorile wanted to do a television story about the gay community at Syracuse University for a journalism project, he and his gay friends were thrilled.

Arriving at the studio for the interview, they sat down in chairs, the lights set up to leave their faces conveniently in shadow. Signorile and his friends were pleased with the resulting effect — complete anonymity assured, the right to privacy maintained, and the subjects' safety not a question.

After all, everything was being done completely professionally, and by following the rules, Signorile's friend would soon be on the path to NBC, or another network.

Signorile has changed a lot since then. Now, when cameras approach, he expects the lights right in his face, camera lenses pressed in tight, microphones pointed, ready to catch every word, every breath, every move.

Speaking at Amherst College on Monday, April 4, in a lecture sponsored by AC LBGA, Signorile discussed some of the reasons for this change, and answered questions on the American media portrayal of lesbians, gays and bisexuals.

Basing the first half of the discussion on his best–selling book Queer In America: Sex, the Media, and the Closets of Power, Signorile concentrated on the ways the American media consciously and unconsciously keep gays, lesbians and bisexuals in the closet.

While working at a New York–based gossip feed in the early 1980s, Signorile witnessed this closeting first–hand as gossip reporters switched the names and genders of celebrities' dates, matched up known homosexuals with heterosexual partners, and avoided all mention of homosexual sex scandals.

Reporting on heterosexual dating, relationships and sex scandals was standard fare for the business — the public has a right to know, the reasoning went, but by exposing the homosexual lifestyles of certain celebrities, the media would be committing an "invasion of privacy."

Furthermore, even celebrities who were "out" — Jodie Foster, for instance — were kept closeted for fear that exposure would shock the sensibility of the American public, and possibly ruin her career.

By the mid–1980s, this conspiracy of silence became intolerable, and through a series of articles in such magazines as OutWeek and the Advocate, Signorile began to fight back.

He reasoned that if the media continued to deny the existence of gays or cover them in shadows, to "shelter" mainstream America from the truth, and to let issues like AIDS and homophobia slide, America would continue to be a dangerous, inhospitable environment for gays.

According to Signorile, due to lack of positive role models, a society–wide system of enforced heterosexuality, and a general closeting of sexual issues, gay, lesbian and bisexual youth comprise at least 30 percent of all completed suicides among teenagers.

Ignorance leads to beatings, harassment, job loss, and increased risk of HIV due to insufficient or incomplete sexual

Empty House is a waste of talent

COURTESY KEN REGAN
Banderas, in Philadelphia.

ASSOCIATED PRESS
Winona Ryder

ASSOCIATED PRESS
Meryl Streep

ASSOCIATED PRESS
Jeremy Irons

By ED HUMPHRIES
Collegian Staff

Historical epics aren't always pretty. Too often films like The Razor's Edge and Heaven and Earth find themselves dashed upon the rocks (weighted by their own lofty literary pretensions,) their collective parts "gone with the wind."

Don't think a Best Picture Oscar tucked neatly in your back pocket can protect you. Especially if you're Billie August, floating on a 1988 win for Pelle the Conquerer and you've got it in your mind that a gaggle of Anglo actors can successfully adapt Isabel Allende's novel of a Chilean family's generational ups and extreme downs, The House of the Spirits.

Suppress those laughs.

There hasn't been such a mammoth waste of talent since those wizards at Industrial Lights, and Magic got roped into a little Howard the Duck project a few years back.

Here it's Glenn Close, Jeremy Irons, Meryl Streep, Winona Ryder, Antonio Banderas and Maria Conchita Alonso who fall by the numbers, although Close and the two Latino cast members, Banderas and Alonso (here lodged in peripheral supporting roles), fare considerably better, rising above August's choking, self-indulgent and self-important passions.

The story revolves around Esteban's (Irons) return to his Chilean roots with his newlywed wife Clara (Streep) much to the consternation of the matriarchal Close. As years pass, wars, tragedy and the paranormal (in the guise of Clara's telepathy and ghostly visits) begin to invade and unravel the tightly wound family unit.

Adding to the family woes, Blanca (Ryder) begins to fall for a headstrong revolutionary thinker (Banderas), pulling her mind away from family loyalty, and drawing the ire of the local authorities.

The sweep and scope (let alone the star power) of this paean to heartache would seem to be enough to lift House's spirits, but ultimately it's August's stilted direction that pulls the house down.

August takes a stellar cast and transposes it to a high school play setting. Scene after scene, consists of some moral heartache laying waste to one family member or another, and the only salvation for the actors is to rant and rave across the stage (er, screen) shouting lines at lung- straining lengths and pouring forth crocodile tears by the bucketful (just imagine the marketing possibilities: House of the Spirits saline solution).

Although Close and Banderas stand out among the cast, keeping their characters firmly lodged in the here and now, rather than looming in that overacting heaven, they still appear slightly embarrassed by August's mishandling of the "magic realism" that tempers much South American literature.

Instead of getting at the very psychological implications of the connections between the spirit world and the firm earth, August merely attempts capture of "magic realism" through levitating a few tables and trotting out some spectral family skeletons.

Ultimately, one needn't worry. Although another fine novel arrives bastardized on the screen, August can't do any more harm than he has already done here. At next year's Oscar telecast, August should be found firmly seated, clutching his statuette, in a very dormant house devoid of spirit.

Worcester Centrum (a New Years Eve show that sold out 14,000 seats in a mere 7 hours), they may not have believed you, considering the size of their audience back then.

This is not to say that Phish hasn't put in the time to be where they are today. Few bands have worked as hard for their success as they have. Despite what many people think, Phish is not a new band; they have been around since the early 1980s. Phish has been paying their dues on the road, touring almost endlessly to work their way up from small venues into the large arenas they are playing now. A 107 show tour in '93 alone certainly is indicative of this.

Did Phish sell out? Original fans of Phish raise this concern about the arena-filling, MTV video-making success Phish is experiencing. It is certainly different from the fan- loyal gigs they have done for their die-hard northeastern devotees in the past.

All day outdoor "coolers welcome" extravaganzas in rural Vermont, a free weekend-long bash at a friend's ranch in Maine, intimate local club and theater gigs, and their annual New Years Eve costume ball — all of which attracted a small but dedicated following.

"Some people were disappointed at first when we moved from Nectars to a bigger bar in Burlington," said Trey, in response to his loyal fans. Nectars was the Vermont birthplace of Phish's live acts, they named an album after it.

"The hardcore fans can be very possessive, and they worry that they might 'lose' us," said Trey. "But I think that when they see that we're being true to ourselves and having a good time, they'll join right in."

Thousands of others have joined right in. Some even tour the country with the band, making Phish a way of life. This is creating a neo-Grateful Dead scene at their concerts; complete with drum circles and street vendors. Phish certainly doesn't mind all the attention, they are still doing what they do best: playing.

Phish is playing a sold-out show at the Mullins Center this Saturday, in support of their new album, Hoist.

education., Signorile said.

Only by forcing the American media to face up to gay issues can Americans, gay and straight, improve the lives of the millions of gays, lesbians and bisexuals living in the world today, he said. By letting celebrities "come out" or by "outing" (a term which Signorile says should be replaced by "reporting"), by giving full coverage to issues like AIDS and homophobia, and by distributing television shows and movies with lesbians, gays and bisexuals as regular characters, America can break the conspiracy of silence and set millions free.

Women's Health Issues Week
Presentations - April 20
5:30 pm to 7:30 pm, Campus Center Room 165

Defining Women's Health
A lecture by Professor Josephine Ryan, R.N., D.N.Sc., School of Nursing, on the health topics facing women today.

Violence Against Women
A lecture by Professor Christine King, R.N., Ed.D., School of Nursing, on issues of violence in relationships.

Sponsored by Student Health Advisory Board & Student Nurses Association.

On Saturday, April 16 at 11 a.m. we will honor Stephen B. Oates for his new biography — A Woman of Valor: Clara Barton and the Civil War
Please join us for an autographed copy.*

When the Civil War broke out, Clara Barton wanted more than anything to be a Union soldier, an impossible dream for a thirty-nine-year-old woman, who stood a slender five feet tall. Determined to serve, she became a veritable soldier, a nurse, and a one-woman relief agency operating in the heart of the conflict. Now, award-winning author Stephen B. Oates, drawing on archival materials not used by her previous biographers, has written the first complete account of Clara Barton's active engagement in the Civil War.

Stephen B. Oates is professor of History at the University of Massachusetts, where he won the Distinguished Teachers Award in 1981. He is the author of several acclaimed biographies of Nat Turner, John Brown, Abraham Lincoln, and Martin Luther King, Jr.

Hillel hosts festive barbecue

Holiday celebrated with food, friends and folk music

By LISA GREENFIELD
Collegian Staff

Folk singer Julie Silver, distracted an enthusiastic crowd from last night's rain at the UMass Hillel House's Yom Ha'Atzmaut, Israel Independence Day celebration.

This holiday follows Yom Ha'Zikaron, Israel's Memorial Day for fallen soldiers and commemorates the state of Israel's 46th birthday.

Native Israeli and Hillel council president-elect for next semester, Nurit Ben-Harav, remembered the holiday in Israel as a day of barbecues, singing and dancing. She said "everyone goes out into the street and celebrates."

The Stock Pot, Hillel's kosher kitchen, prepared an indoor barbecue dinner of salad, falafel, burgers and chicken. After dinner, the festivities moved to the Hillel House lounge for an intimate, informal song session.

Silver, acoustic guitar in hand, welcomed the celebrants, "I'm a good friend of yours, you be a good friend of mine."

She lead the festive crowd with familiar Hebrew songs and a few original ones. Everyone present sang along and participated in the hand clapping and laughing.

During one of the more vivacious songs, people got up and danced, which Silver encouraged.

Silver made the atmosphere relaxing by interrupting herself and making jokes. She bonded with people in the room by making eye contact and addressed everyone whom she had met at the barbecue by name.

Three women said they drove all the way from Clark University, Silver's alma mater, just to see her perform.

Silver repeatedly mentioned her summer camp days, and said many of the songs reminded her of her childhood. In a more serious song, requested by an audience member, Silver referred to her memories of camp.

She said the song was one she sang at camp, and later learned that it was a song sung by Holocaust victims on the way to the gas chambers. "I used to sing this as a girl at Camp Pembroke, when i found out this context of the song, it changed the meaning of it."

The audience seemed reluctant to let Silver finish her performance. Student Lori Rapaport said, "She was fabulous – so much energy and happiness."

Graduate student, Scott Frank, described her performance as a "moving experience, she has a truly lovely voice."

Silver has two albums, Together, and Strength to Strength, which she says address many themes. She says she wants to always be in a community where her music is appreciated.

"No one could imagine what i get out of it," Silver said of touring the country performing and educating. Silver said since her childhood she always knew she would be a performer.

She recently visited several college groups and says she enjoys college students because she can relate to them. She says students are searching for spirituality and ways to express themselves.

She explains, "People listen in a context, they are coming to get something spiritual, its about a message."

Now working on a new album, which she describes as "more liturgical" then before, she says she has ambitions in different genres of music, but her "heart lies in the Jewish community."

Love arrested on eve of Cobain's suicide

By NIKO PRICE
Associated Press

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Singer Courtney Love was arrested and examined for a suspected drug overdose the day before her husband, grunge-rock star Kurt Cobain, was found dead, police said Wednesday.

Cobain, the 27-year-old singer for the band Nirvana, killed himself with a shotgun blast to the head. His body was found Friday at the Seattle home he shared with his wife and their 20-month-old daughter, Frances Bean.

Love told Seattle television station KIRO on Wednesday that Cobain was using heroin when he killed himself. She said narcotics were found next to his body.

Love told the TV station she has had her own problems with drugs, but wanted to send a message to Nirvana fans that drugs don't solve anything.

Beverly Hills Police Sgt. Robert Smith said Love was arrested last Thursday at a hotel for drug possession and taken to Century City Hospital because of a suspected heroin overdose.

She was released from the hospital the same day and booked for investigation of possession of a controlled substance, possession of drug paraphernalia and possession of a hypodermic needle, Smith said.

She was released after posting $10,000 bail later that day, he said. Arraignment was set for May 5.

Love is a singer with the group Hole. Hole's new album, which appeared in stores this week, is titled "Live Through This."

Love was interviewed off-camera and the TV station broadcast a transcript of her quotes. She said Cobain was not an addict, but used heroin occasionally.

"Kurt was very depressed," KIRO quoted her as saying. "Some people just have thin skins. He tried things like Prozac, but opiates were what made him feel best."

The station also spoke to Nirvana bassist Krist Novoselic, who down played the importance of heroin to Cobain.

"It wasn't the dope, it was something internal," he was quoted as saying. "If it hadn't been heroin, it would have been booze or cappucino. Drugs were just a small part of Kurt."

tration understands and sympathizes with Denny's concerns.

"We agree that there is a need at all five UMass campuses for repair work," said Wright.

President Hooker has asked the state Legislature for permission to borrow $100 million to make up for years of deferred maintenance. The money, $60 million of which would come to the Amherst campus, would provide funds for repairs, with health and safety issues taking top priority, as well as some new construction.

Despite years of neglect and broken promises from administrators and legislators, Denny remains optimistic that some change might be in the works.

"At least i've learned one good thing by doing this, and that is that there are other people w'ho care," said Denny.

"The question is whether they can get empowered enough to do anything about it or not."

"Not only is she a dean, but a clinical nurse and a researcher as well. We all work together," King said.

with each other," Zenon said last night. "Dan Flynn is not going to pursue his embezzlement allegations."

"I believe that the fact that he's not going to pursue them shows how unsubstantiated and ludicrous they were," Zenon said.

It was also decided at yesterday's meeting that the club will hold new elections for the office of club president on April 20.

Zenon said last night that he will not seek reelection as club president, but instead will focus on working on the production of the UMass yearbook, The Index.

"My first love is the yearbook. Not politics. That's why i won't run for president next year and that's why I won't run the Minuteman again," said Zenon.

Flynn said the resolution of the club's problems will allow the club to become a more active RSO.

"It's been two years of inactivity. That will change next year," Flynn said.

"Because of the club's relative inactiveness over the past two years, there hasn't been a healthy debate on campus. You get a constant inundation of liberalism whether it's from your professor's, the Collegian or the freaks that gather on the steps of the Student Union," Flynn said.

sion that the Review and Restructure Committee has; student keys, space management, vending programs and general advocacy to the Campus Center admission.

The BOG will also retain the ability to make subcommittees, hire assistants, and elect chairs according to Malone.

BOG now has to go to the Graduate Student Senate to try and reappeal the proposal. BOG has had problems working with the GSS in past years.

The GSS stopped funding the BOG in 1990, causing them financial troubles. The funding stopped because BOG was not doing their job, according to Julia Johnson, treasurer of GSS.

"The reason we have been having a hard time is that our budget has been cut $20,000 a year from GSS for the last four years," said Dan Gordon, vice chair of BOG.

meet, and tied the school record with a 9.9 while doing her brand- new vault. She had a good deal of her gymnastics changed by the coaching staff in her first year. Swartz admits to needing more conditioning, something Kuzara and Assistant Coach Rene Lyst feel will be taken care of during practice in the spring, which has been instituted for the first time.

Laing has had the most difficult transition to college gymnastics. Not used to competing weekly, she also struggled with endurance. Along with Keels and Swartz, Kuzara looks to Laing for a breakout year next season.

"I absolutely did not expect these years from the freshmen. Swartz and Laing came along so quickly," Kuzara said.

Kuzara also credits the administration for increasing the squad's funding, and said he expects to reach full funding in two years. The fact that UMass was the only squad not fully funded at this year Regionals is a testament to Kuzara's coaching abilities.

"With the young talent we have, potential recruits and increased funding, this should be a top 10 program in two or three years," Kuzara said.

The system is in place, the young talent is maturing. Don't expect anyone to underestimate UMass again.

Valente found Bailey once in the first and once in the third to give Bailey his third two-goal performance of the season.

Valente connected with Depp early in the second quarter as UMass was opening up a sizeable lead, and again midway through the fourth when the game was out of reach.

Both players feel a chemistry has developed between them that can be very productive.

"It's our third year working together," said Valente. "I feel really good working with Wes."

"When you keep playing together, you start to make eye contact. You're looking for each other constantly," said Depp. "We've developed a good relationship with each other on and off the field."

Both came into the season with the All-America Candidate tag putting pressure on them to perform, but with the play of freshman Brendan Glass getting most of the spotlight, the play of Depp and Valente has gone somewhat unnoticed.

Valente admitted to feeling pressure before the season from the expectations.

"At the beginning of the season, I felt a little pressure," said Valente. "I was a little sluggish coming out of the gate. But now we're back on our home field, and feeling positive about my play."

Massachusetts Coach Ted Garber recognizes the importance of the play of Valente and Depp as the season progresses.

"The older guys have been real productive leaders for us. Mike is starting to play a full game for us. He's moving the ball well and getting to loose balls. Wes has been sticking them in for us in the crease," said Garber. "We need those guys to be productive."

Your Horoscope

By Jone Ekon

ARIES (March 21–April 19): Surprising gains come from an unexpected source. More people believe in you than you realize! Both spouses benefit when a married couple share domestic responsibilities.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): Your cheerful disposition is a valuable asset. Use it to your advantage in business. Make amends to a former friend. You may have greater influence than you think.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): People who own valuables should know better than to flaunt them. There is no need to tempt the greedy! An idea that strikes you as clever requires more thought.

CANCER (June 21–July 22): It might make you popular to go along with a crazy idea, but that is not the way you do things. Draw up a plan that is both imaginative and sensible.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): There is no need for the world to know exactly what you are working on now. Keep your own counsel. Silence is often essential for the success of a plan.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): Quick financial results are still possible. Business partners prove lucky for you. Once you learn to delegate more work, there will be less strain on your personal relationships.

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): A fast-paced day lies ahead. Fulfillment and frustration make an odd pair but you will feel both this week. An outspoken friend may be a source of comfort as well as amusement.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): Go over your financial records and see what can be done to reinforce any weak links. A key relationship can be salvaged if you show greater sensitivity.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): The planets indicate you should be vigorous in pursuit of greater career success. Make a clever financial strategy your secret weapon.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): The price you are willing to pay for easy popularity may be far too steep. Getting mixed up with the wrong people could be dangerous.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18): A new friend may help you unlock your potential. A simple approach is best if seeking money or romance. Show that you have grace as well as ambition and you will win a competition.

PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20): Recognizing what is going on around you will help prevent an embarrassing situation. Find inspiration within your own family. The inventive do the right thing; comes from a loving relationship.

Quote of the Day

"Every murderer is probably somebody's old friend."

■ rivalries

Mike: Vancouver in seven. Reminiscent of their '88 playoff battle, with the Canucks taking revenge.

Toronto vs. Chicago: A classic Norris...er Central Division battle. Big hitting and strong goaltending will be featured. Two great arenas come to the forefront as Maple Leaf Gardens become a hallowed playoff hall and Chicagoans try to "Remember the Roar."

Matt: Toronto in six. Gilmour has Andreychuk. Roenick doesn't. The Stadium's last hurrah.

Mike: Toronto in six. I picked them at the start and I'm not changing now. Mike Gartner will win the Conn Smythe. St. Louis vs. Dallas: St. Louis has a great goalie in Curtis Joseph, but beyond Hull, Janney and Shanahan, they have no depth. Beyond Modano and Gagner, neither do the Stars. Dallas will ride Darcy Wakaluk in goal.

Matt: Wakawho? I'll take Joseph and Co. in five.

Mike: Pretty evenly matched, but Lone Star Beer beats Budweiser any day. Dallas in seven.

The NHL has apparently gotten what it wanted out of its new playoff format. Nearly every first-round series is a possible war, and almost all smack of rivalry. Expect several series to go the distance and maybe even a shocking upset.

Matt Vautour and Mike DiLorenzo are the Collegian Hockey Gurus.

Gorillas heat up cold day

By ANDREW BRYCE
Collegian Staff

On a day where there was no sun apparent, the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team shined on, defeating New Hampshire 14–6.

The Gorillas (5–2) were clearly a more polished team than the visiting Wildcats (2–5). The eight–point win made the outcome look a bit closer than it really was, as the Wildcats scored four of their six goals in the final quarter.

"Massachusetts always beat us pretty good," said UNH coach Jim Urquhart. "They are just a better team talent–wise. Given the lead they had on us, a 5–0 lead with the talent they have is just too much to handle."

"They played us tougher than they had the last couple of years," said senior Wes Depp. "We just came out early this time instead of keeping it close."

Five different players scored the first six goals of the opening quarter as the Gorillas jumped out to a 6–0 lead after the first 15 minutes of play. Depp scored two of them, as junior Vin Dello–Icano, sophomore Eric Bailey and freshmen Casey Costello and Anthony Picone garnered one apiece.

The first quarter proved that the Massachusetts–UNH contest was a much different game than last season. Last year's game, the Gorillas and Wildcats were tied 6–6 after three quarters, before Massachusetts exploded for eight goals in the fourth quarter to win 14–7.

The Wildcats managed to play Massachusetts to a 2–2 tie in the second quarter. While the Gorillas jumped out to a 8– 0 lead on Depp's third goal and freshman Brendan Glass' first and only goal of the game, UNH scored the last two goals of the quarter, making it 8–2 at the half.

The second half began slow, with Massachusetts scoring the only two goals of the third quarter. Bailey scored his second goal of the game, and assisted on the second goal of the quarter by sophomore Eric Triolo, to increase the lead to eight, 10–2.

The Wildcats made the score more respectable, scoring four goals in the final quarter. The Gorillas countered with four of their own. Senior Chris Nentwich and freshman Chris Grande chipped in with a goal each, while Depp scored his fourth and Triolo banked home his second goal of the game.

Junior All–America candidate Mike Valente played arguably his best game of the season, dishing out a season– high 5 assists. Valente added to his team–leading assist total, pushing it to 11, and increased his point total to 15.

"We moved the ball around well today," said Valente. "Things just opened up for us all game, and everything worked out well."

Sophomore goalie Kevin Ratkiewicz received the nod for his first start in a Massachusetts uniform, and played a solid game. Ratkiewicz, who played at Assumption last season, needed some quality time under his belt just in case junior starter Tom Lo Presti needs a breather in the future. Massachusetts Coach Ted Garber was pleased with Ratkiewicz' performance.

"(Kevin) proved he could play when the game is on the line," said Garber. "He should now feel that he can play when the game counts, when the game is on the line."

The Gorillas dominated the face–offs, taking 19 of 23. Senior Sam Joseph led the Gorillas by winning 16 of the 19.

Massachusetts will head south to take on Delaware this Saturday, April 16 at 1 p.m.

Valente and Depp starting to click

By MATT VAUTOUR
Collegian Staff

In all the mud and the rain that soaked Garber Field yesterday, it was veterans Mike Valente and Wes Depp that led the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team to the 14–6 victory over the University of New Hampshire.

Last weekend, Depp called Glass' shots "fireballs." Yesterday afternoon, Depp showed some of his own.

The senior attacker found the net three times in the first half and once more in the second to give him 15 goals on the season. He now needs only 12 points to reach the century mark for his career.

Depp found the net for his first goal less than five minutes in, snapping it past Wildcat goalie Chris Smith. The UNH defense took notice and covered Depp close for most of the rest of the quarter. He slipped tree in the remaining seconds of the period to give the Gorilla's an 8–0 lead.

The Gorilla offense ran through Valente. Despite the wet conditions and lousy tooting, Valente's passes were crisp and accurate, leading to five assists, the most by any Gorilla in two seasons.

"I felt good," said Valente. "We moved the ball well."

Depp and Eric Bailey were the leading beneficiaries of Valente's passing.

Softball team on streak

By SEAN P. HAYDEN
Collegian Staff

Time for a new streak.

The University of Massachusetts softball team had its seven–game winning streak snapped by the University of Rhode Island Tuesday as the WRams defeated the Minutewomen 7–0 in the second of two games played in Kingston. Massachusetts took the first game 4–0. The games do not count in the Atlantic 10 standings for either team.

GORDON FENWICK / COLLEGIAN

The 10–9 University of Massachusetts softball team looks to return to its winning ways when it hosts the Regals of St. John's in a 3 p.m. contest today at Totman Field.

Junior ace Kelly Daut upped her record to 7–4 in the first game of the doubleheader as she allowed no runs, scattered four hits and struck out six in seven innings of work. Her team leading ERA now stands at 1.33.

The Minutewomen tallied all four runs in the fifth frame. Sophomore Amy Powell led off the inning with a single and eventually scored on the game–winning run on a single by freshman third baseman Sam Cardenas.

The WRams jumped out to a quick 4–0 lead after two, giving starter Sue Foggo, who only allowed two hits while fanning two, all the support she would need to register her fifth win of the season.

Freshman hurler Dani Ortega, who was named the A–10 Pitcher of the Week last week for her back–to–back shutout performances, suffered her fifth loss against three wins so far this spring.

The Regals come into the game sporting a 12–9 record, including a 7–4 record in the Big East. They are coming off a tough 2–1 loss against Connecticut, a team that has given Massachusetts fits in the past.

Around the Horn: Freshman Chris Martens continues to lead the Minutewomen in hitting, batting at a .387 clip, with team leading numbers in hits (24), runs batted in (10), triples (2), and doubles (6).

Coach Elaine Sortino has been harping about the outstanding defensive center fielder she has in freshman Stephanie Mareina, and it appears she is not blowing smoke. Through 19 games, Mareina has 31 putouts, four assists and no errors, for a fielding percentage of 1.000. A few of the grabs have been Plays of the Week worthy.

The top four offensive performers for the Minutewomen are all freshmen (Martens, Cardenas, Michelle Methot and Jodi Sorenson).

No rebuilding needed here

By ANTHONY GUIDO
Collegian Staff

The best record in school history, Atlantic 10 Gymnast of the Year, top team score in a single meet. Not bad for a team that was supposed to be on a down year with a first– year coach.

Coach David Kuzara completely restructured the women's gymnastics program at the University of Massachusetts, and instead of having a tough transition year, he had a ground– breaking one in many respects.

"People thought UMass was going to die, but we terrified everybody at meets," Kuzara said.

Kuzara switched the focus towards more of a team attitude and increased the level of each gymnast's responsibility. He wanted some of the team to improve in the gym and others on attitude and communication skills.

"This will be the toughest year we will have here, everything was new, our gymnasts accepted the changes and it worked. It was a huge season for us," Kuzara said.

The season ended last weekend for the Minutewomen with a disappointing sixth place finish at the NCAA Northeast Regionals. In the team's eyes, it doesn't overshadow a 17–6 record and a strong performance at the A–10 Championships.

"The team literally can't wait for next season, usually teams are relieved after a long season. We know that wasn't us at Regionals; the wheels fell off that day," Kuzara said.

In implementing a new system, Kuzara expected a tough adjustment for the returning gymnasts. However, he credits the team's seniors, Margaret Furtado (A–10 Gymnast of the Year) and Angela Jent, for providing ideal leadership.

"These were two perfect seniors to have this year, they didn't lead vocally, but by example. They had been here but not once did they undermine the things we were trying to do," Kuzara said.

With sophomore Shaheda Keels, freshmen Tara Swartz, and Lianne Laing in place as three of UMass' top gymnasts, the future looks bright.

Kuzara calls Keels the brightest spot of the season as well as the most talented member of the team. She's already a team leader in her second season.

"Shaheda will be the key next year, will we be better just because she is a junior. The coaching change threw her for a loop, but she emerged as a team leader," Kuzara said.

Swartz led UMass in the all–around in almost every

Men's track in a romp

By JORMA KANSANEN
Collegian Staff

What a difference a few days makes.

What could have left the University of Massachusetts men's track team reeling, instead gave them a reason to prove themselves Tuesday afternoon in a meet with the University of Vermont. Following a third–place finish last weekend, the Minutemen came up big with a dominating 104–point performance against the Catamounts.

"Vermont is a pretty good team, with a similar style as ours," said Coach Ken O'Brien. "With our depth though, we were able to turn the tables from last weekend's result."

In the last meet, UMass was just being edged out of the top two finishes. No repeat performance this time as it swept the top three spots in the 100, 200, 5,000–meter and discus competitions.

Freshman Greg Blake came out on top in the 200m with a time of 23.8, while sophomore Tim Bollard outdistanced fellow teammate Matt Behl in the 5,000m with a 15:22.6 finish.

The continued success of Larry Plano and Rick Peltier in the long and triple jumps contributed to the consistent performance of junior Tom Galligani. Galligani took first place in the triple jump with a distance of 44'3", and Plano got the five points in the long jump with a 19'7" performance.

"Some of the same people came through for us again," said O'Brien. "And it was nice to see Marc Lefebvre (discus and shot put) improve his distances over 10 feet. Also, Lyonel Benjamin (100 meter), who didn't place last Saturday, rebounded very well."

Coming up this weekend for the UMass track team is another dual meet, this time with Central Connecticut and Holy Cross. O'Brien said he is not looking past these teams, even with last Tuesday's success.

Minutewomen finish win with 13 first places

By CANDICE FLEMMING
Collegian Staff

Bad weather seems to follow the University of Massachusetts women's track team every time they have a meet. With the way it is performing however, it might want it at every meet.

The Minutewomen faced off against Vermont and Springfield College on Tuesday afternoon and completely dominated the meet. UMass scored 98 points to Vermont's 43 and Springfield's 40. With the win, UMass stays undefeated at 6–0.

"They [Vermont] were not as tough as I expected," said Coach Julie LaFreniere. "Overall it was a very strong team effort."

UMass won 13 out of the 17 events, and three Minutewomen won two events each.

Freshman sprinter Anya Forrest won the 100 meter dash with a time of 12.9 and the 100m hurdles with a time of 15.2 while fellow freshman Erica Doyle finished first in the 200m with a time of 26.8 and in the 400m with a time of 59.5.

The other Minutewoman to win two events was junior Natalie Hart. In the shot put, Hart threw 39'4 1/4" and in the discus threw 135'1".

In the javelin, Heather Brown continued her dominance with another big win, easily outdistancing herself from her opponents. Brown threw 126'1" which was more than 19 feet longer than the second place finisher.

Senior Kelly Liljeblad had a great day, winning the 1,500m with a time of 4:46.4. This win was extra special considering that Liljeblad is coming off a knee injury that forced her to be a medical redshirt during the indoor season.

Katie Greenia, who is nursing a foot injury, came in third with a time of 4:56.4.

"I was extremely happy with [Kelly] Liljeblad, coming off a knee injury, she's starting to look real good," said LaFreniere.

The freshman 4x100m relay team consisting of Tasha Summers, Kimberly Downey, Forrest and Doyle won again with a time of 49.3. In the second leg, Downey pulled away and that proved to be the difference in the race.

The 4x400m relay consisting of Kerry Aker, Jen Barry, Jen Waeger and Dianne Sykes came in second with a time of 4:17.0. Barry also placed second (62.3) in the 400.

The Minutewomen were also very strong in the 3,000m, taking the top three places. Kristin Diggs won with a time of 10:09.0 and the Liljeblad twins, Kim (10:09.9) and Kelly(10:20.4) came in third and fourth respectively.

"It's nice to see the twins out there running together again," said LaFreniere.

Junior Janey Meeks won the triple jump with a jump of 38'6" and placed second in the high jump with 4'10". Downey placed first in the long jump with 16'10 3/4".

In the 800m, Aker finished first in a close race with a time of 2:21.6, 1.4 seconds faster than second place.

UMass had two finishers in the hammer with Christie Martin placing second with a throw of 138'3", while Stephanie Townson threw for a personal record with a throw of 124'9" and finished third.

Also placing in the shot put behind Hart was Martin who placed third with a throw of 36'11 3/4" and Dhamana Shakespeare, who placed fourth with a throw of 36'7 1/2".

Say What?

"It's something that I think I could perform and if the job is offered I will consider it."

– Senate majority leader George Mitchell, referring to the position as baseball's commisioner.

The Rangers have been the league's strongest team all season, but are perennial playoff chokers. The Islanders have a recent history of big upsets. Will the Rangers take the first step toward breaking the 1940 jinx or will the isles pull off the big upset?

Matt: Isles upset in six. 1940 lives.

Mike: Rangers in five. Ranger depth sinks Isles.

Pittsburgh vs. Washington: A tall task awaits the Caps. Pittsburgh knows what it takes to get to the top and has the team to do it. Washington must neutralize the Pens' potent offense and try to solve Barrasso.

Matt: Penguins in five. Juneau knows all about losing to Pittsburgh.

Mike: Is there a more faceless player–off team than the Caps? Pens in four.

New Jersey vs. Buffalo: Series has absolutely no history, but both teams are capable of doing some playoff damage. New Jersey is solid everywhere and plays it very close to the vest. Buffalo, sans LaFontaine, has resorted to the dreaded neutral zone trap as goaltender Dominik Hasek posted the league's only sub–2.00 GAA.

BETWEEN THE PIPES
Mike DiGiovine and Matt Vautour on the NHL

Matt: New Jersey in six. Detek Plante just isn't enough offense.

Mike: Grant Fuhr provides unexpected playoff heroics as Buffalo prevails in seven.

Montreal vs. Boston: Arguably hockey's greatest rivalry. The Bruins have had next to no success against the Habs this year. The ever important goaltending favors the Canadiens. Roy can and does carry the Canadiens, while the Bruins may have to rely on Vincent Riendeau unless Casey gets hot.

Matt: Leading with my heart, not my head, and hey, I had UMass in the Final Four, Boston in seven.

Mike: Montreal in six. Bruins have edge on defense, but Habs have huge advantage in goal and behind the bench.

Western Conference

Detroit vs. San Jose: The Sharks are excited just to be playing in mid–April and not competing for the No. 1 draft pick. Sergei Fedetov has the Red Wings in position to make a legitimate run for glory. The Sharks will need a minor miracle even though the Wings are frequent chokers.

Matt: Wings in four. No contest.

Mike: Wings in seven. These series seem to have a way of going the distance. Something about Dettolt's goaltending scares me.

Calgary vs. Vancouver: Calgary surprised many by running away with the Pacific Division; Vancouver surprised a lot of experts by freefalling to the seven seed in the conference. Calgary is well–balanced while Vancouver will rely on Pavel Bure and Kirk McLean in goal.

Matt: Calgary in six. Pavel needs more help than he's got.

House chairman wants invasion of Haiti

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House committee chairman called Thursday for a U.S. invasion of Haiti to arrest and jail its military leaders.

Rep. David R Obey, Appropriations Committee chairman, said American troops should be sent in to get rid of "that useless, sick, poor excuse for a government" and to "lock up the thugs." He said "Haitians are being ground up like hamburger because the clowns who run that government don't know how to behave like adults."

Assistant Secretary of State Alexander F. Watson said he would immediately relay Obey's advice to Secretary of State Warren Christopher, who, he said, is working on another strategy for dealing with Haiti.

Zulu nationalists insist on postponement

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A team of mediators headed by former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger headed home before even starting talks Thursday after Zulu nationalists insisted the country's first all–race elections be postponed.

"We urged the parties to bridge the gaps and we met with the parties individually. However ... the terms could not be bridged," Kissinger said.

African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela and Mangosuthu Buthelezi, leader of the Zulu–dominated Inkatha Freedom Party, had agreed to mediation in an effort to resolve their dispute over inkatha's demand for autonomy and to end Inkatha's election boycott.

Tobacco execs defend cigarettes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cigarettes are not an addiction but merely a pleasurable habit, much like a morning cup of coffee or a dessert, the nation's top tobacco executives told Congress on Thursday. But in often angry exchanges, lawmakers charged cigarette makers with trivializing and suppressing information about the health impact of their products.

"You and I both know that Twinkies don't kill a single American," said Rep. Henry Waxman, D–Calif. "The difference between cigarettes and Twinkies and the other products you mentioned is death."

The chiefs of the nation's seven largest tobacco companies spent more than six hours Thursday testifying before the House Energy and Commerce health subcommittee, which Waxman chairs, about what goes into cigarettes and whether they're dangerous.

Mt. Holyoke head stepping down

SOUTH HADLEY, Mass. (AP) — President Elizabeth Topham Kennan of Mount Holyoke College, a medieval historian who championed women's schooling in an era of expanding coeducation, said Thursday she will step down next year.

"I will be the first to call for coeducation when our society grants young women equal status in coeducational settings," she said. "All the current research is showing how very much traditional coeducational classrooms do not serve women well."

Kennan, 56, who has been president of the women's college for 16 years, said she wanted to devote more time to an adult son who has cerebral palsy.

Kennan is credited with helping renovate and build new buildings while increasing the endowment fivefold, to $240 million. She also helped establish an academic computing system and a foreign language center.

She will officially resign June 30, 1995. But she hopes to continue teaching and doing external affairs work for the 157–year–old school, the oldest women's college in the country.

Crowds rally, unite to take back night

By VANESSA AMIN
Collegian Staff

Women's power, strength and inspiration filled the air last night as musicians, singers and speakers participated in Take Back the Night, a march to end violence against women.

"We are here to confront our own prejudices and hold hands as sisters to end violence against women," said Melanie DeSilva, a member of P.O.W.E.R. and an organizer for Take Back the Night.

This march was organized by women of the five colleges and consisted of a candle light march and two rallies.

According to Veronica Frenkel, a Latina bisexual feminist and survivor from partner abuse, a Take Back the Night march and rally she participated in six years ago drew her into a "personal healing." This march isn't about being victims but about rage that we endure in a sexist world, she said. Women, she said, have a long history of being oppressed, but it's because society keeps them silent.

"This march is about breaking that silence and ending isolation," Frenkel said. "Say no, get angry and get active."

Kellie Paige, a UMass alumna, said she spent the best years of her life on this campus until one of her best friends was murdered through relationship violence. She hopes that the violence her friend endured will make some difference in ending violence against women, Paige said.

"I was slapped in the face to the fact that violence against women is a reality and does exist," Paige said.

Women need to fight against this violence that is in society because no one else will, Jean Grossholtz, a professor of politics and women's studies at Mt. Holyoke College, said.

We need to learn how to take care of victims of violence and understand their experiences, so we can take it to the judicial system, she said. There is an enormous amount of brutality aimed at women all over the world like the Bosnia rape crisis. We live in a society where men go to war and become "monsters," she said.

One day, Grossholtz asked her students to imagine a world where there was no rape; she said they told her this imagined society would have no gender.

"We need to look for a society which is safe for us, our sisters and our children," Grossholtz said.

After a martial arts demonstration and a poetry reading by Janet Aalfs, a director for the Valley Martial Arts, a candle light march began.

CHRISTOPHER ANGELONI / COLLEGIAN

Approximately 200 people participated in last night's Take Back the Night rally and march.

Approximately 200 people marched to the Amherst Town Common with candles, chanting "Stop the violence, we won't be silenced," and "Whatever we wear, where ever we go, yes means yes, and no means no," as pedestrians, fraternities and sororities cheered them on.

"I will never forget this feeling of empowerment," said Oriana Noel Lewis, a german/government major at Smith College. "I feel the strength from all these women and I feel comforted."

Music was performed in the moonlight by Nice Shoes singers from Mt. Holyoke College and Linee Perroncel, a local contemporary folk singer.

According to Sage Freechild, the Coordinator for the Counselor/Advocate Program at the Everywoman's Center, survivors of violence began the women's movement in the '70s and, as part of this movement, we need to help women today reclaim that power.

"I look forward to the day when there is equal power relations and mutual respect for all women," Freechild said. "It's time to take back the night, our rights and our movement."

Man in auto fatality given jail sentence

By GERI SAHN
Collegian Staff

A year after his drunken–driving accident that killed a University of Massachusetts student, a man from Belchertown was sentenced to jail on Wednesday.

Thomas S. Barrett, 42, of 85 Jackson Street, pleaded guilty and was sentenced to 4 1/2 years in the Hampshire County House of Corrections.

He is being sentenced for driving negligently, motor vehicle homicide while driving under the influence of alcohol, and operating to endanger.

Barrett was charged in an accident which occurred on April 28, 1993.

Stephen M. Knight, of Belchertown, a senior at the University, was driving his motorcycle in Belchertown when he was hit and killed by Barrett.

According to Assistant Northwestern District Attorney Joseph Quinlan, at the time of the accident, Barrett's blood alcohol level was double the legal limit of the state.

Barrett was in another alcohol–related accident in 1984.

William O'Grady of Southampton, Barrett's attorney, requested a sentence in state prison, an extensive suspended sentence and a prolonged parole. Yet, Judge John Moriarty did not think this request was appropiate.

"The result was so tragic — a young man dead. There is no way to give the young man back his life. I don't think it is necessary to ruin this man's (Barrett's) life," Moriarty said.

Knight, 23, was a School of Management major and a lifelong resident of Belchertown.

The report in the Daily Hampshire Gazette contributed to this story.

Cultural history being destroyed by warfare

By CATHY CHANG
Collegian Staff

Ethnic cleansing in Eastern Europe not only means the eradication of a people, but also their past and future through their cultural history in architecture and artifacts, said Andras J. Riedlmayer in his presentation "Bosnia's Multicultural Heritage and its Destruction" Wednesday night.

A head of the Agha Khan Program for islamic Architecture at Harvard University and a native of Budapest, Riedlmayer spoke at Smith College about the destruction of national treasures and therefore an entire people's cultural identity in a slide presentation of before–and–after pictures of buildings and cities in war–torn Bosnia.

"In Bosnia–Herzegovina," Riedlmayer said, "rubble not only signifies nationalist extremists' work to eliminate not only human beings and cities, but also to erase all memory of the past."

Many of the hundreds of Islamic temples, or mosques, that had stood for centuries, dating back to the earliest days of the Ottoman Empire, were systematically destroyed by Serbian nationalist groups in mere seconds.

Running to benefit Special Olympics

By CRAIG O'CONNOR
Collegian Correspondent

Several students are trying to help the disabled and challenge themselves by running in this year's Boston Marathon.

Sparked by a class he took while on exchange in California, Tim Struna has recruited several other runners in order to raise money for the Amherst and Cape Cod branches of the Massachusetts Special Olympics.

After helping at a therapy clinic for a class, Struna, an exercise science major, participated on the Cape Cod Unified volleyball team in the Special Olympics, playing alongside the very people he was helping. The different teams competing in different events had to share uniforms and equipment, which seemed unfortunate to him.

Hoping to raise $4,000 through sponsors and donations, Struna said he decided to run the marathon as a publicity event. Already, he and the others have received $1,500 and will be accepting donations up, to and after the running.

Response to his requests for donations have been "pretty good," Struna said, but he said he hopes more people will give and understand that the athletes in the Special Olympics are the same as each of us, looking for a way to challenge themselves.

"Everyone deserves a chance to show what they can do," Struna said.

Providing new uniforms and equipment helps increase the prestige of the Special Olympics and make the participants more aware that they are special, gifted athletes.

On helping the disabled, Struna said "seeing their reactions is an incredible feeling. Everyone should try helping out. I feel as if it has changed my life."

The others running alongside Struna are Lisa Tramontana, Kevin Fastman, Jessica Richard and Rob Murray. They are all athletes and see the marathon as a way of challenging themselves in much the same manner that the Special Olympics challenges the disabled.

U.S. jets down Army helicopters

By SUSANNE M. SCHAFER
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON — U.S. military officials ordered pilots to take a less aggressive stance in northern Iraq after two American fighter jets shot down two U.S. Army helicopters, killing all 26 people on board.

Defense Secretary William Perry, in an interview with Associated Press Network News, said Thursday he's taken several steps to ensure the incident isn't repeated. The jet pilots mistook the choppers for Iraqi aircraft violating the no–fly zone, he said. "We're continuing the operations in northern Iraq, but we have made some adjustments to our procedures ... which take the hair trigger off to a certain extent," Perry said.

The secretary said he could not describe the exact steps taken for security reasons, but presumably guidelines under which pilots attack targets have been made more strict or the authority for firing must come from higher level officers.

Twenty–one of the dead were military officers from the United States, Britain, France, and Turkey supporting the U.N. humanitarian relief operation for the Kurdish minority in northern Iraq. Five Kurd passengers also were killed.

The two UH–60 Black Hawk helicopters were shot down by two F–15C fighters enforcing the "no–fly zone" set up to protect the Kurdish minority from attacks by Iraqi President Saddam Hussein. President Clinton expressed "terrible sorrow" and pledged a thorough investigation. He ordered U.S. flags on public buildings throughout the nation to be flown at half–staff through sunset Monday "as a mark of respect for those who died as a result of the tragic incident."

Questioned how such a tragedy could occur, Perry replied, "There were errors. There were human errors, probably, and there might be process or system errors as well."

The secretary said he has postponed a trip to Japan and South

Coping with breast cancer

Former senator speaks on fighting, curing the disease

REBECCA PETERSON / COLLEGIAN

The possibility of developing breast cancer is a frightening one for both men and women.

By MEREDITH GLASSMAN
Collegian Correspondent

As a part of Massachusetts Breast Cancer Coalition's Action Week, Smith College featured former Massachusetts state senator Nancy Achin–Sullivan in a lecture titled "Breast Cancer: A Political Perpective on a Personal Experience" at Neilson Library last night.

Achin–Sullivan has proved herself as an instrumental politician and activist on behalf of women by unrelentlessly fighting for important breast cancer legislation, research and education.

Addressing a crowd of approximately 75 people, Achin– Sullivan said, "There is nothing we cannot change if we work together." She discussed her personal struggle with breast cancer along with her political struggle within the state legislature. She was fighting for important legislation concerning breast cancer research and health care.

Achin–Sullivan drew from her own experience, emphasizing the importance of the highest quality of health care for all women as well as access for all women to health care.

"The fight to cure breast cancer is critical and I will not be satisfied until there is a cure," Achin–Sullivan said.

As a senator, she worked on the Mammography Standards Bill as well as the Off–Label Bill to ensure insurance coverage for cancer drugs. She described step by step her personal efforts with these bills and emphasized the important support she received from specifically woman legislators in the Senate.

In regards to the breast cancer legislation passed as a result of her efforts, Achin–Sullivan stated that "people pulled together because it was the right thing to do."

"We need to pull together and provide strength by voicing concerns to legislators, Beacon Hill and the Board of Health, and demand continuous attention to breast cancer until there is a cure," Achin–Sullivan said.

To drive home the personal connection to breast cancer, Achin–Sullivan asked audience members to stand that either suffer from, are survivors of, have relatives, or know colleagues suffering from breast cancer.

As a result, the majority of the people in the room were standing. She said the few people still sitting in the room were lucky because breast cancer is such a widespread problem.

"I succeeded in my personal struggle because people stood with me when I needed them and together we can do this and succeed in this fight for a cure," Achin–Sullivan said.

Translation may not change poetry

Robert Frost once said, "Poetry is what gets lost in the translation." This statement was also a point of interest yesterday afternoon in the Johnson Chapel at Amherst College as the Creative Writing Committee Reading Series sponsored a lecture with Robert Mezey, the poet–in–residence at Pomona College and well–known translator of fine works.

Among these fine works are the poems of Argentinean poet and writer, Jorge Luis Borges.

Korea to make sure two separate investigations of the incident had begun.

One, initiated immediately by Gen. John Shalikashvili, is reviewing the flight procedures in the three no-fly zones where U.S. aircraft fly - over north and south Iraq and Bosnia - "to take action which can minimize the chance of any kind of recurrence of this," Perry said.

As well, Perry said, he expects to receive a formal accident investigation report "within weeks" from U.S. military officials in Europe charged with probing exactly what happened.

Over 800 mosques have been destroyed to date, as well as many cathedrals, synegogues and other architectural treasures, he said. Most of the buildings' detailing were influenced by monumental sechulptal architecture, as well as Viennese artwork after the Austria–Hungarians took control in the late 19th century.

After mosques were destroyed, the land was quickly bulldozed and landscaped. "It was as if the mosques and the towns' inhabitants had never been there," Riedlmayer said.

In an attempt to save the contents of the National Library of Sarajevo after it was bombarded with grenades during the summer of 1992, citizens formed a human chain, passing books to each other while dodging snipers' bullets. But almost all of the 1.5 million volumes of books, national archives and academic treasures of the University of Sarajevo went up in flames, he said.

Riedlmayer said that this event, which happened in August of 1992, hardly made a ripple in U.S. news even though charred pieces of books continued to fall from the sky for five days.

He had sought the support of several art and history appreciation organizations in the United States, only to be turned down.

"Not one was willing to issue a statement on this," he said. Their excuse, he said, was that the matter was a political and not an artistic one. "It's been absolutely appalling," he said.

Riedlmayer made several connections between the cultural destruction in Bosnia and past historical events. The Mostar bridge, a symbol of the town, was destroyed after repeated shellings on the 55th anniversary of Kristalnacht, the eve during which Jewish synagogues and stores were attacked by Nazis, he said.

Scapegoats in Bosnia include Jews, gypsies, Muslims, Catholics and people of mixed racial descent, he said.

Riedlmayer said that libraries and churches were also targeted by nationalist and fascist groups because they housed birth certificates and deeds. Destroying these records would make it difficult for refugees to return and claim ownership of invaded lands.

"The silence has been deafening," he said about the U.S.'s lack of participation in aiding the non–Serbian citizens. He said that the U.N.'s resolution of partitioning land to each nation–state is merely a "fig–leaf" of improvement and a quick remedy.

Death penalty for many new crimes

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House responded to demands for tough anti-crime legislation in an election year by authorizing the death penalty Thursday for nearly 70 additional crimes.

Working on a $15 billion crime bill, the House rejected by a 314-111 vote an amendment that would have substituted life without parole for the death penalty. Among new crimes that could result in execution: drive-by shootings, a killing committed while stealing a car and activities of big-time drug dealers, even if they don't result in death.

At the White House, President Clinton focused on other parts of the bill as he addressed a ceremony honoring police officers. The bill, he told the officers, would give them "the tools you need to do you jobs."

School's diversity an advantage

By HEATHER REDFERN
Collegian Correspondent

Inside the yellow, tiled halls of Mark's Meadow Elementary School, paper–mache birds hang from the ceiling, multi–colored collages decorate the walls and distant sounds of students' cellos can be heard from afar.

The 258 students who fill this lab school's 11 classrooms represent 25 countries and 15 different languages.

Unlike most lab schools, Mark's Meadow is a neighborhood institution run by the town of Amherst and the University of Massachusetts.

Located directly behind the UMass School of Education, Mark's Meadow is known best for a rich diversity in its students' population and a heavy emphasis placed on the arts.

"We want our students to be prepared to be global citizens," said principal Leonore Carlisle.

Outside on the building's brick surface, a vibrant poster advocates an African–American read–in. Inside, a crayon colored sign bears the simple message, "Help Bosnia."

Creating a culture of literacy is one of the school's main goals, said Carlisle.

In order to broaden students' horizons and heighten cultural awareness, Mark's Meadow works with University educators and education majors to give children the opportunity to experience events outside of an everyday curriculum.

Third grade students recently participated in philosophical discussions with UMass philosophy professor Gerry Math. Fifth and sixth graders studied the constellations at UMass with astronomy Professor Judy Young.

Carlisle said a positive aspect of Mark's Meadow being a lab school is the allowance of more experimentation to take place within the school's educational structure.

"A standard curriculum is delivered in a non–standard way," said Carlisle.

Noticeable from a one–way observational tunnel which runs the entire length of the school are the unique settings in each of the classrooms.

Four of the 11 classrooms are combined grades. As a result, students share an even exchange of assistance and inspiration.

Children are not grouped by ability and there are no programs for the gifted. Instead, students of all levels are engaged in cooperative learning skills.

"It's very effective from what I have seen," said Diane Dinnell, a senior UMass intern at Mark's Meadow.

As the smallest public school in Amherst, Mark's Meadow allows for staff to know all students on a personal basis, school counselor Carol Rundberg said.

Rundberg said it was extremely important to connect not only with the students but also with their parents.

Because many of the students have parents who are continuing their education at UMass, children and their families often move on, making it hard to create a sense of neighborhood. Each year the school draws in 30 percent new students.

But whether a student's stay at Mark's Meadow is one year or six, no student leaves without learning a little bit more about the gifts of others' ways of life.

Mezey has translated many of Borges' poems, including "Simon Carbajal", "Of Which Nothing is Known", "Camden", "1892", "Paris 1856", and "A Rose and Milton".

With Frost's previous statement in mind, has Borges' poetry lost any of its qualities of piercing insight in the translation?

According to Mezey, it has not. As far as the Borges' poems are concerned, the author usually collaborated with an interpreter to help retain the poems' meaning. The basic idea is that if you have a good interpreter, the poem will remain as poignant. Ideally, most poems, along with books and films do lose out to translations.

After reading many of the poems, Mezey gave his audience a brief look into the life of Borges. According to Mezey, when Borges was an adolescent, his father secretly arranged that his mistress "introduce" his young son into manhood. The young Borges, under the impression that he was having a relationship with an older woman, was devastated when he discovered what his father had done.

As a result, he lived his life with the fear that he was merely a pawn in someone's game. Since then, he pushed people away when they became too close to him; this constant fear shows up in much of his poetry.

For example, in the poem "Of Which Nothing is Known", "The abstract game of chess as from the hand that moves them. Maybe human fate, the end to which our transient joys and long woes come, is another's instrument. We don't know who."

The event ended with Mezey reading his own poetry. His poetry covered many topics, and had many influences.

"People see the Special Olympics as inferior," says Murray, "but in reality, it's different. Athletics is a confidence builder for everyone in life. Everyone needs success."

The value Murray said he sees in participating in the effort to raise money lies not only in helping the Special Olympic athletes but in "the intrinsic challenge" of the race. He compares the quest of these five students to the efforts of those in the Special Olympics, and says that the motto of these games also apply to their running in the race: "Let me win, but if I cannot win, let me be brave in the attempt."

If everyone at UMass would give just one dollar, they say, they could raise enough money to provide plenty of uniforms and equipment to courageous individuals who they said deserve the chance to find worth in competition, a right we all take for granted.

"There's more to life than getting money," Struna said. They're all running in their first marathon and said they hope this experience will not only help others but will be a challenge to themselves in the tradition of the Special Olympics. Breaking down stereotypes

My father said to me not too long ago, "Son, I want you to go to a prestigious, big name college like MIT or Harvard, and be a doctor or a scientist. You'll make lots of money and we'll all be happy."

Well, it should be obvious that I'm not fulfilling my father's dream. I'm not going to a college like MIT or Harvard, and I'm totally avoiding the science and medical field. I guess you can say that I'm not the "typical Asian." This brings me into what I'm going to talk about: Chinese stereotypes.

David Chan

You may be wondering, "Why Chinese stereotypes?" Well, there are distinct differences within the Asian background. Japanese, Korean, Vietnamese, Filipino, Chinese and other Asian backgrounds are different from each other. I can only speak for what I am — Chinese. Here are some stereotypes and what I think...

1.) Why are there so many Chinese students in big name colleges, and why are they all medical and science majors?

Go to any Chinese family and you'll see some strict, hardcore family values. Chinese parents work extremely hard to make a living in America, and they expect the same from their children. These parents also work hard in educating their children, but because they usually lack English, they teach their children just about everything else.

But this is only half the reason why Chinese students are medical and science majors. The other half is money. Chinese parents are conservative, they believe that hard work will bring success, and success is measured in dollars.

2.) Why are Chinese people so skinny, and why are there so many of them?

If you eat what Chinese people really eat (I'm not talking about egg rolls), you'd be skinny and you'd probably live forever. I grew up on white rice, all kinds of steamed seafood and the weirdest vegetables. If you ever eat with a Chinese family, don't ask what the food is, just eat it — trust me.

And, despite China's one child per family law, there's still over a billion Chinese people in China alone. Although citizens are poor and unable to afford good medical assistance, they still live forever. It's family values (everyone takes care of each other), it's the food and it's those weird exercises that they do in the mornings (I think it's called tai chi).

3.) All those Chinese and Asian people look the same.

This is because Chinese people don't usually marry outside their race. Caucasians have a wider range of features because of intermarriage — how many Caucasians do you know that are pure Irish, German, Swedish or Italian? Most Asians are pure Korean, Japanese, Chinese, etc.

4.) Why do so many Chinese work in restaurants?

OK, you got me. My father co–owns a Chinese restaurant, and yours truly works there too. I'm usually the host and front desk person (I wonder why). The restaurant business is not a bad business to get into. Chinese people are willing to work hard, hoping to bring in big bucks (sound familiar?).

Restaurants are privately run, so employers can make their own decisions. For those who are poor in Engl sh, the restaurant business is something they can easily resort to. My father's English is pretty good so he's the bartender (don't get any ideas).

5.) Why are Chinese people inactive in politics and government? Don't they care about this country?

First of all, power is in numbers. There aren't as many Asians (let alone Chinese) in this country as there are Hispanics and African–Americans, so this could be one reason why this is so.

Another reason could be that Chinese people come from an oppressive government. Chinese citizens are taught to never question the government. Remember the Communist Revolution? The Tiananmen Square riots? Speaking of the riots, I happened to be in Hong Kong while it was going on, and it was quite interesting. Scary stuff, believe me.

Anyway, China's government makes certain that citizens never question government. This sort of "obedience" is hammered in by the government. So when Chinese immigrants come to America, not only are they relieved to be here, but they don't really understand the concept of questioning government. Remember, the riots were partly instigated by college students who studied abroad.

6.) Why do some Chinese people segregate themselves from other races?

Just to let you know, I don't do this. I hang out with anybody. If we were blind, would we judge each other by the tone of our voices? Doesn't this sound stupid? No pun intended. Some Chinese may be prejudiced and racist, but others segregate themselves because they feel uncomfortable. Some Chinese parents pressure their children to keep their culture, and some feel that the best way to do this is by hanging out with other Chinese people, so they hang out together and speak their language.

Just because I don't segregate myself doesn't mean that I'm losing my culture. I'm very knowledgable and curious, but it's hard to live out my culture all the time because I'm an American as well as Chinese.

So there you have it, some of the stereotypes. I hope that I have cleared some of the smoke. I'm positive that in the near future that things will change. Oh and by the way, check out tonight's Asian Night if you can.

Testing my athletic prowess

Spring is here and The Horseshoe is packed. The basketball courts are drawing people eager to shake their winter blues and throw down a few nasty dunks. I've gone a few times, but since I haven't picked up a basketball in years, I was relegated to the sidelines to watch.

Before going in front of the hordes of 'Shoe fans, I was determined to work on my game. I went to a middle school with my friends where the nets are only eight feet high. I figured that I would look like Shaquille playing with these rims.

A.J. Stewart

People under six feet don't get to do that too often.

I was all alone on a breakaway. No one was close to me. It was my chance to be a star. I grabbed the ball and leapt into the sky. Finally, I was going to dunk. But suddenly, something went desperately wrong.

The ball was wet and slipped out of my hands. Instead of speeding through the net, the ball was now floating serenely over the backboard. Meanwhile, I was still in the air, a modern day Icarus too close to the sun. I caught the rim with my hands, hoping to slow myself down.

Unfortunately, my hands were wet. I slipped off the rim and landed squarely on my ass. A week later, I still have trouble walking.

My bad luck didn't stop there. Although I have forsaken my basketball dream, I still hope to get in shape. I have started jogging (at night, so no one can point and laugh at me). The only trouble is that everyone I run with is faster than I am. I finish last everytime and I am starting to get a little demoralized. When I run my knees feel like rusty hinges and my lungs gasp for air. A few years ago I was running track in the state championship meet. Now I run like an Edsel.

Last week I finally learned that I am no longer the healthy, fit person I was a few years ago. This past week has provided me with more than my share of athletic disasters. I learned that my body is not like fine wine or cheese; it doesn't age well. Right now my body more closely resembles old Cheese Whiz — stiff, moldy and orange. Who knows, I may be forgotten in the back of your fridge even as we speak.

My last chance for redemption came on a rainy evening playing softball. I had never played before, and the last time I played baseball was when I was seven. So where did I play? I started in centerfield. It was going to be only a matter of time before I embarrassed myself. I envisioned myself diving for a flyball and landing face first in the mud.

Surprisingly, nothing was hit to me all night. The only thing left to do was hit.

I stepped into the batter's box. There was one out, runners on first and third. The pitcher scowled at me. He knew I was lousy. He threw a ball that bounced off the plate. Ball one. I started to calm down. The second pitch was right on the money. I closed my eyes (my first mistake) and swung as hard as I could (my second mistake). The ball flew straight into the air and got lost in the clouds. It went past the first baseman, and by some miracle of the gods it fell for a bloop single. A run scored and we went on to win the game. My Ugly Duckling hit made me feel like Joe DiMaggio.

I may not make the Olympics very soon. Hell, I'm too ashamed to play Haigis Hoopla. I do, however, make a fairly good couch potato — as well as a good stir fry — and I will continue to appreciate athletics from afar. The Fenway bleachers are a good bet.

Coming next week: a frank look at plate techtonics.

Opinion

One extraordinary person

There are a lot of people I admire in history and in this world: Lincoln, Jefferson, Reagan, my dad, my high school social studies teacher, etc. These are all people who have shown me qualities or taught me principles.

But there's a friend in my life that I admire as much as any of those other people, not for some golden rule she indoctrinated me with, but for the inspiration she's given me.

Michael Morrissey

This story starts out in the dirty, dusty Southwest United States with a family of five trying to live just above the poverty line. With an irresponsible mother, a father in the Army and three kids in need of some support, this wasn't a nuclear family.

Being the oldest of three children, responsibility fell on this girl at the age of seven to give her little sister her bottle when she cried for it at night. It seemed her folks were off drinking usually or already passed out.

When her mother did cook, the conditions were still terrible. I remember her telling a story about how she found a cockroach in her Kraft Macaroni and Cheese. I never have seen that on the commercials.

She moved from Texas to Massachusetts at an early age. The father returned from the Army and found he couldn't hold down steady employment. The children were neglected so badly, it was to the point of child abuse. By the time this girl was a teenager, it was clear to her that there was no source of structure, no person to lean on.

The parents divorced and the mother didn't want the responsibility of bringing up the three children alone, so the father got them de facto. Some father he turned out to be.

While his oldest daughter was working and trying to save money for her future, the father was freeloading and borrowing for some frivolous thing like booze or even drugs. My friend said she remembers a party in her house, seeing people doing drugs when she was still in grade school.

Eventutally, the Department of Social Services stepped in. The mother was gone and the father was a failure, so the children were shipped off to foster homes. The brother and the other sister were separated from each other and my friend, and they spent the next few years fending for themselves in foster care.

The foster home she was staying at was not the typical nurturing place you see on television. Again, being the oldest child, it was this girl's responsibility to take care of the four or five other kids who were from horrible backgrounds. The house was in disrepair, the patriarch and matriarch were difficult to deal with and the atmosphere was akin to that of a sewer system.

In addition, my friend had a dream to help others, so she was saving her way through college and trying to get good grades, despite zero encouragement from anyone in her world. She was lucky to get a card from her mom on Christmas, never mind hear her voice. Can you possibly imagine that?

Her life has turned out positive in the last few years. Thanks to loans and public education, she is graduating from the University of Massachusetts next month with a degree in psychology. A master's degree and ph.D. are in her sights, and I'm sure she'll have them before long.

She's like the rest of us graduates — looking for work, looking for a place to live — but she has been on her own, really alone, and she knows she'll survive no matter what happens.

Her younger sister now also dreams of going to college. Her brother is a father at 19. Her father is now paying some of his many debts to society and her mother has been MIA for years.

This girl is amazing because she shows me the best and worst of our country, the problems we must begin dealing with and the unlimited dreams we can all share. There are a lot of people who think a wide range of things when they see my friend Karen, but I'm probably one of the few who is sometimes just awed.

Letters to the Editor

Abortion column quite irresponsible

To the editor:

This letter is in response to Diana D'Avanzo's confused piece, "Abortion has many victims" [April 13]. It seems that Miss D'Avanzo has gotten most of her material out of books. Citing such second–hand information on such an incendiary issue is journalistically irresponsible and terribly unconvincing.

A zygote, embryo or fetus ("pre–born child?" Does that make the rest of us pre–dead corpses?) is a part of my body until it can live outside of my body; that it is a mass of tissue is patently obvious. It is not a person yet, just as a seed (even a germinated one) is not yet a plant. As every gardener knows, if you let any seedling in your garden grow, without thinning them, they will all be stunted. In the wild, they will not even germinate until conditions are right. So why should we (female) humans be forced to birth every fertilized ovum?

As you are aware, many of these same, shall we say, virtual children for which you are the self–appointed champion would be born into unfavorable circumstances — poor, abused and unwanted. Many of them, by virtue of the glass ceilings of existing social stratification, will end up in prison, some on death row (even in Massachusetts if Gov. Weld has his way). Will you cheer at every execution of the people you would force to be born?

As for the implication that there exists an "abortion industry" — shame on you. This service is generally offered by clinics on an outpatient basis. Other options are available, as well, such as menstrual extraction (see A Woman's Book of Choices) and readily available herbs (see The Wise Woman's Guide to the Childbearing Year). Your time would be better spent haranguing a real industry.

I've had two abortions, and I grieve. Not for "having allowed [my] child to be killed," but for living in a society that values women and children so little that they overwhelmingly compromise the poorest and most neglected people in the world. I grieve for having to choose between economic survival and motherhood. In a world where resources were distributed fairly, this would not even be an issue.

That this issue has been made so comically simplistic by the anti–choice faction is insulting. Of course it's a difficult decision. Of course children are precious. It's not that simple. But attempting to use rationality to counter an irrational argument is like trying to jump rope in quicksand.

If you don't like abortion, don't have one — but leave me out of your misguided sentimentality.

Help needy with Hunger Cleanup

To the editor:

As UMass students, many of us feel very comfortable living the white bread, ivory tower existence that we have generally become accustomed to. Those of us living in the dorms can look forward to at least two or more meals every day, and though we may feel that the food we eat is unsatisfactory, there are three million Americans for whom even our one meal per day is not guaranteed. These people are our nation's homeless.

As we count our many blessings and securities, we should consider those who don't have homes. On Saturday, April 16, MassPIRG is helping to sponsor the tenth annual Hunger Cleanup. Students and community members from the Amherst area will participate in cleaning up trash, painting homeless shelters, removing graffiti and just generally beautifying our community.

Participants will be sponsored on a per–hour basis by friends and neighbors. The money earned will go to the National Student Campaign Against Hunger and Homelessness, which will transfer funds nationwide and abroad to help individuals and communities in need. Take this opportunity to do a service to our community and the less fortunate individuals who inhabit our nation's streets.

To learn more, stop by the MassPIRG office in the Student Union or call 545–0199.

Take this Woody and run

COURTESY BRIAN HAVEL
Woody Allen, seen here with Juliette Lewis in Husbands and Wives.

By AMY S. BURNS
Collegian Staff

Woody Allen's classic comedy Take the Money and Run will be playing at Amherst College this weekend. It will be shown Friday, Saturday and Sunday at both 7:30 p.m. and 10 p.m. in their Campus Center Theater. This amusing creation from 1969 was Woody Allen's first film as director, writer and star.

Take the Money and Run is a sort of mock documentary about the life of an incompetent criminal, played, as you might have guessed, by Woody Allen. This is a role custom made for the goofy, freckle–faced Allen from the late '60s and early '70s.

Slides project scenes of Turkey

By HENRY BRIER
Collegian Staff

The Turkish Student Association displayed a slide show Wednesday night, April 13. Kenan Tamer, the show's host, assembled the slides, which were of historical and archaeological sites in Turkey.

Tamer, a graduate student from Istanbul, will receive a Master of Science degree in Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration this May. He used to be a professional tour guide, which was evident as he led the interested attendants through each slide.

The first slide was of the sixth largest suspension bridge in the world. It was named after Mehmed The Conqueror, who subdued Constantinople in 1453. The bridge was built and opened for use in 1989, and it measures 1,090 meters.

Palaces and their insides were shown, which had sheltered Ottoman rulers, known as Sultans, between the 15th and early 20th century. The lavish bedrooms are symmetrical, as doors and windows are directly opposite each other. Venetian blinds cover the windows, the floor is porcelain, which had been imported from Japan and China, and glass crystals hang from the ceiling.

The inside of the Dolmabahce Palace was shown, and it has a 1 1/2–ton chandelier. Dignitaries such as ex–President George Bush, Vice Chancellor Helmut Kohl of Germany, President Franz Mitterand from France, and King Juan Carlos from Spain, have all been entertained here.

Slides of the Prince Islands were displayed. Upon being empowered, Byzantine Emperors in Turkey during the 8th through 11th centuries blindfolded their brothers, and then they were exiled to these islands, which blunted any threat and secured royalty.

There were slides of Tergamon, the city where parchment was invented. During the 1st century A.D., Tergamon's library gradually increased in size. It would have eventually outdone the library in Alexandria, Egypt. However, the Egyptians took action to protect their library and stopped exporting papyrus. The Tergamese then invented parchment, which is a thin slice of wood. Tergamon is also the site of one of the first hospitals in the world.

Turkey can brag an ancient stadium, called The Grand Theater. It is in Ephesus, and it has interesting architecture. One side of a hill had been excavated, and the theater had been built into it. The base of the Tapes mix emotions and music

ARAM COMBARNOUS COLLEGIAN
Mixed tapes have been used by many to capture a range of emotions and memories.

It would seem that much of our pop–culture indulgences lately have been hell–bent on finding the hallmarks of our generation. After this column, I am banning the "g" word from any further pieces, however, for today I have stumbled across a very important musical facet of our generation's lives – that is the mixed tape.

SOUNDS FROM THE VALLEY
Compiled by Brian Babineau & Matt Audette

Now, think about it. The cassette and double tape deck were not technologically in vogue until the early eighties. We were some of the first adolescents to have constant access to these toys, and certainly we have taken advantage of them.

To be specific, the kind of mixed tape I am talking about is not one that you make for yourself. Not every yokel like me sits around collecting songs on tape for themselves. No, I am talking about the kind of tape you make to give, or are given.

I am almost certain that everyone of us has made, or has been given a ninety minute mix of some of the favorite songs residing in our music collection. Why do we sit in front of our tape decks endlessly dubbing tunes for someone else?

Sometimes we like to find great songs that our friends might not have heard. Sometimes we want to remind our friends memorable times past. Sometimes we know a song so powerful and so appropriate for a relationship that it needs to be shared. The main thing we want, however, when we make someone a tape is to be remembered.

Music can be a potent form of communication. Nothing can capture a joy, a heartbreak, or a moment quite like a song. Song that precipitated drunken sing–alongs, songs that breeze out open car windows, songs that make you say, "holy cow, that is exactly how I feel." These songs we give to people so they don't lose the events and the moments.

When we make tapes, we envision scenes like this. A decade from now, your friends, girlfriends or boyfriends from your college years have long but forgotten about you, but stumble across this little piece of beat–up plastic and tape with only their name scribbled across it. They slide it in the tape deck, push play, and the mind reaches back.

They might not remember details about you, and you may not have given them much. Your name may escape them, places and times remain elusive, but they have your song, that favorite, wonderful one that you gave them. That one that screams "remember me, remember me." This is why we make mixed tapes.

Often I am approached by friends (or enemies) and asked why I always slam their favorite groups and insist on writing about bands no one has heard of. Well, here is my response.

The reason why I tend to stray from bands that are lodged firmly in the Top 40 is because, frankly, you can hear about them anywhere. Every rock journalist at magazines such as Rip, Rolling Stone and Musician is scrambling to get the next "exclusive" interview with rock martyr Eddie Vedder, or get the next awe-inspiring quote from Bono.

Why do we need another (not that either of the aforementioned musicians are exactly banging down my door for an interview)? I would rather give focus to smaller bands who could use the attention, rather than add fuel to the fire of these larger acts.

There is so much good music out there that no one is opening their eyes to because they do not hear it on the radio, or because MTV has not decided it is "cool" yet.

Believe it or not, Nirvana existed before Nevermind, and Smashing Pumpkins were making music pre-Siamese Dream. Why wait till bands go mega-platinum, and start to develop the "rock star" ego? Go see them at a small, dingy club that smells of cheap beer, before you have to see them at a football stadium that smells like cheap beer.

The next R.E.M. or Soundgarden may just be waiting around the corner, it is just up to you to find them. So switch off MTV, turn off that Top 40 radio station and start looking.

Two Thumbs Down: To Boston's "non-stop rock" radio station WAAF for a display of true tactlessness. Last Friday, just hours after the announcement of the suicide of Nirvana leader Kurt Cobain, the station invited listeners to call in with their best Kurt Cobain joke. It is sad that the members of the station see something as tragic as someone taking their life as a joke. Truly classless.

Brian Babineau is a mixed-tape junkie and Matt Audette is an ex-WAAF listener.

as a sly cat burglar, yet the part of a bumbling bank robber suits him perfectly. This is not the same mature and thoughtful Allen as seen recently in Husbands And Wives.

Of course, Take the Money and Run is a must-see for Woody Allen fans — then again most of them have probably seen it at least once. Even for people who are not fans, I would still recommend this film. It's not the subtle intellectual humor we're used to seeing in his more recent films. In fact, most of it is visual humor and slapstick.

Take the Money and Run is the story of a man who can never do anything right. His first shot at a career is playing the cello in a marching band. Later on he turns to crime, but he doesn't even make a good criminal. This pseudo- documentary tries to figure out what drove Allen's character to crime, by interviewing friends and family members.

Allen's parents are the best. They appear in disguise, wearing Groucho Max glasses, while arguing between themselves as to why their son turned to crime. All in all, this is a nice bit of comic relief, causing little strain to the brain.

hill is where the entertainers perform, and the congregants fill the surrounding elevations, which provides for exceptional acoustics.

Sting had performed here, and he drew a big enough crowd that the theater sank one inch into the ground. Ever since the ex-lead singer of The Police had entertained, big- name musicians are no longer allowed to perform in an effort to preserve the theater.

There were also slides of Ankara, the capital of Turkey, which has a population of 4 million people. Istanbul is the largest Turkish city, and its population numbers 10 million. The population for the entire Turkish Republic totals 60 million.

The Turkish Student Association has been together for the past 2 and a half years. They are a non-political organization with open membership, although mainly for Turks.

Undergraduate and graduate students within the Pioneer Valley's five colleges are welcome. Members gather to attend social events, such as the Turkish Film Festival, which had taken place last semester.

My eyes teared as I hacked my desert dry cough at the road dust that swirled up from behind the passing semi. Yes, I was lost.. a long way from the rotting New York cul-de-sac I had called my home. Why HAD I eaten that moldy bread Why DID I let that circus bear break my heart.

Your Horoscope

By Jeane Dixon

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your creative abilities are working full-tore. Record your thoughts before they evaporate. Go ahead and expand yourself for a good trimrel, but do not get taken in by every newcomer with a sob story.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): An older tumrik member presents you with a dilemma that you will not be able to ignore. Pitch in and do whatever is necessary to make a loved one happy this weekend. Show tenderness.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your spirits get a big boost when you receive unexpected career recognition. Try to be less emotional when you disagree with other family members. Exercising with a group can be surprisingly fun. Sign up!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Maintain the forward momentum of your life. A romantic summer may run hot and cold. Higher ups will give you credit for your inventive methods later on, but not today. Attend a social gathering tonight.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Pay close attention today. New issues or gains could depend on your reading certain clues correctly. Modernize your business practices. A computer could change your life!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Work should progress smoothly this morning. Joint ventures or ventures could prove profitable. You realize that you are not as much of a loner as you thought.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Fortunately, a better business climate prevails today. Others react positively to your winning personality. A frigid master will work out more favorable terms.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): New sources of income can be developed now. Friends or relatives may try to get involved in your business. Answer important letters and return phone calls promptly.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Set up interviews with potential employers. An authority figure could have an important message or idea for you. School studies go better than expected.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Those who indulge in wishful thinking today could soon be pulled on the car pet by more practical types. Be willing to listen to constructive advice. Fine artisans work what you pay for it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The pressures of work may keep you on the go until late hume. Finding a helpful ally boosts your morale. Lonely members are planning big things for the weekend.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Refuse to believe or repeat a lie that is not supported by solid facts. There are reasons to gallow for remaining skeptical! Friends who are having difficulties may look to you for advice.

B's end regular season with a loss

By ROB GLOSTER
AP Sports Writer

BOSTON — Jocelyn Lemieux scored twice as Hartford survived a late rally to end its season with a 3-2 victory Thursday night over the Boston Bruins.

It was the first Hartford win at Boston Garden since Nov. 12, 1990, a span of 13 games. It also was the Whalers' only win this season in five games against the Bruins.

Robert Petrovicky also scored for the Whalers. Al Iafrate and Mariusz Czerkawski scored in the final nine minutes for the Bruins. The Bruins finished the regular season 42-29-13, compared to a 51-26-7 record last season. Boston was swept in the first round of the playoffs last season by Buffalo.

The Whalers closed the season 27-48-9, compared to 26-52-6 last year. The 27 wins this season were one more than Hartford had in each of the last two seasons.

Lemieux opened the scoring 3:18 into the game when he tipped in the rebound of a Pat Verbeek shot. Bruins goalie Vincent Riendeau stopped the shot with his glove, but dropped the puck right at the feet of Lemieux.

Petrovicky knocked in the rebound of his own shot with 2:10 left in the second period to give Hartford a 2-0 lead, and the Whalers took a three-goal lead when Lemieux's wrist shot went through Riendeau's legs with 9:51 left in the third period.

Iafrate scored Boston's first goal with 8:12 remaining, taking the puck at his own blue line and outskating three Hartford defenders before firing a slapshot past Burke, and Czerkawski made it 3-2 exactly two minutes later.

Czerkawski's goal came on a power play, only the second Boston goal in its last 39 power plays of the regular season.

Loss to Huskies avenged

By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR.
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts baseball team had won eight of its last nine games before its Thursday afternoon tilt with the University of Connecticut, the squad which handed the Minutemen their only loss during the stretch.

Consider the defeat avenged.

Massachusetts (12–11) jumped on the Huskies early and often, scoring runs in each of the first four innings, en route to an 11–3 victory at Earl Lorden Field yesterday. The win pushes the Minutemen's winning streak to seven games and their record over the .500 mark for the first time this season.

After Connecticut center fielder Brian Majeski gave the Huskies a 1-0 advantage with his first home run of the season in the top of the first, Massachusetts mounted its comeback. Designated hitter Nelson Ubaldo led off the game with a walk, fighting back after being down in the count 0–2.

Sophomore second baseman Mark Pileski doubled just inside the left field line, advancing Ubaldo to third with no outs and setting the stage for Massachusetts' left fielder, Justin Howard.

Howard blasted his fourth HR of the season over the left– center field fence, giving the Minutemen their first lead of the game, 3–1. Massachusetts wouldn't trail again.

"Offensively, we've been getting up early, which helps our pitchers," Howard said. "It takes the pressure off of them and allows them to throw."

The senior co–captain has been on a torrid pace lately; in his last four games, including yesterday, Howard is hitting 8–for–15, with nine RBI, eight runs scored, three doubles and two HRs.

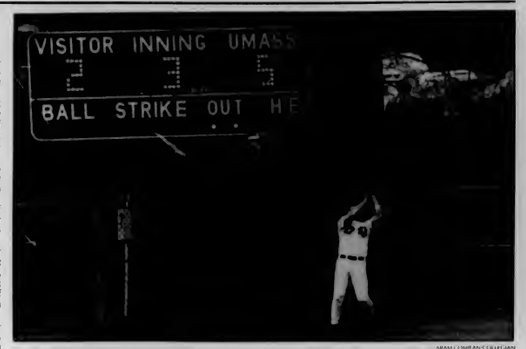
"He's a pure hitter; when he gets focused on the ball, he can really hit the hell out of it," Massachusetts Coach Mike Stone said of Howard.

"After all of the losing we did in Florida, baseball is starting to get fun again," said Howard. "At the plate, I'm relaxing more now and letting the hits come. The harder you try, the harder it gets to hit the ball."

The Minuteman offense battered Flusky starting pitcher Dennis Regan for five runs on five hits in the first two innings. After picking up a run in the top of the third to pull within three, 5–2, Connecticut Coach Andy Baylock pulled Regan in favor of freshman Erik Nord, who didn't fare any better.

With one out in the bottom of the third, Massachusetts right fielder Bill Knight lined a single to left. Knight moved to second on a Greg LaRocca groundout to first.

Two batters later, with Knight on second and Jeff January, who walked, on first, Massachusetts catcher Andy Pelis (3– for–5, 3 RBI) doubled to center, pushing the Minuteman advantage to 7–2.



What seemed to be an inevitable win for Massachusetts freshman pitcher Jason Bennett didn't materialize. Bennett, who started for the Minutemen, went three innings, allowing four hits and two runs; however, Stone said he pulled Bennett in favor of Adrian Softic because the Huskies were hitting him hard and he didn't look comfortable.

Softic (1–2) took advantage of the relief opportunity and finished the game for his first collegiate win, pitching six innings and allowing one unearned run on four hits, striking out three.

"This first one was a tough one to get. I wasn't too sharp in my other opportunities, so I'll take any type of win," said Softic.

Connecticut (10–10) came into the contest ranked third in New England, while the Minutemen were unranked. Howard and Softic said they doubted the Minutemen garnered respect in the region.

"We thought we had something to prove. The polls came out and both Providence (No. 1 in NE), who we beat 13–3, and UConn were ranked," Howard said.

ABRAM COMBAN/COLLEGIAN

The University of Massachusetts baseball team avenged a 14–5 loss earlier in the season by jumping out early and pounding Connecticut 11–3.

"We're mashing the ball right now. Hopefully now, we'll get the respectability in the North," Softic said.

Stone agreed with his players, but added the Minutemen needed to take the field every game with something to prove.

"We got some credibility [by beating Connecticut] today. Each game we've got to prove it," Stone said.

Massachusetts hits the road for Atlantic 10 Conference competition this weekend as the Minutemen travel to Philadelphia to take on the Temple Owls in a three-game series.

Junior Jay Murphy and freshman Chad Paronto will pitch for the Minutemen in the double–dip on Saturday; senior Pete Ferrari, the A-10 Pitcher of the Week, will take the mound in the series finale. Ferrari (3–1) last pitched on Wednesday against Rhode Island, allowing only two hits in five innings of work in a rain–shortened, six–inning victory.

Cardenas and UMass in a sweep

By TED KOTTLER
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts softball team ran its record at Totman Field to 8–0 yesterday with a pair of victories over St. John's, 8–0, 9–2. UMass improved its record to 12–9 and the Regals are now 12–11.

The Minutewomen pounded out 25 hits in the two contests, including five from Sam Cardenas, who went 4– for–4 in the second game. The freshman third baseman knocked two doubles and a triple.

"I guess I was a little more easy going than usual," Cardenas said. "I usually just stress myself out."

Kelly Daut worked five scoreless innings in the opener for UMass, good for her fifth straight win. She allowed only three hits and struck out six before giving way to Dana Colla in the final frame.

St. John's starting pitcher Patricia Reiners was forced to leave the game after Chris Martens' line drive caromed off her knee in the third inning. The lefthanded Reiners took the loss since she surrendered the decisive first run to UMass in the first inning.

The Minutewomen broke out in the fourth with four consecutive singles that plated three more, giving them a 4-0 cushion. The St. John's bullpen could not stop the bleeding as UMass scored three runs again in the fifth, and when Heather Dorsey trotted home in the sixth with the Minutewomen's eighth unanswered run, the "slaughter rule" was invoked and the game suspended.

UMass Coach Elaine Sortino had to make some lineup adjustments for the twin bill due to regular shortstop Jodi Sorenson's fractured rib. Tracey DuFist, normally the second baseman, filled in admirably for Sorenson while Michelle Methot made two quality starts in place of DuFist.

"[Tracey's] fine on either side of the bag," Sortino said. "She adapts very well." The senior co–captain suffered no injuries at the plate, either, tallying three RBI.

Sortino said Sorenson is able to play and likely will when UMass begins a road trip at St. Bonaventure Saturday, but added the fracture will be painful for the next week or two.

A throng of boisterous young fans assembled in the right field bleachers for the second tilt, which the Minutewomen needed no help to win. Dani Dimeo, coming off a bit of a reality check at Rhode Island where she was beaten for the first time on the East coast, went the distance for her fourth victory. She allowed six hits while striking out four and looked very much like last week's winner of Atlantic 10 Pitcher of the Week.

St. John's tied it 1–1 in the third courtesy of catcher Gwen Cistero's adventurous tour of the basepaths. Cistero reached first on an infield single that Cardenas nearly caught, took second on a wild pitch, reached third when Shaw's throw to second sailed into center field, then scored when Stephanie Mareina could not back it up.

UMass regained the lead in the fifth, rallying around Amy Powell's leadoff walk. Cardenas' doubled scored Powell, then Martens singled Cardenas home and Martens scored when Mareina, who has sparkled in center field but not in the batter's box, poked an RBI–single with the bases loaded after Michele Shaw was intentionally walked.

Not to be outdone in the triples category was Martens, who had one in each game as part of a 4–for–8 afternoon. The freshman left fielder brought her triples total to four, while UMass' opponents in 21 games have two.

"I guess I'm just getting lucky," Martens said. Perhaps, but she remains the team's leading hitter. Martens started both contests in left field, as Rachel Lawson got the call at first base. Sortino also inserted little–used freshman southpaw Liz Wagner in right field for both games, and she responded with an RBI in the first game.

UMass' defense has shone in comparison with that of nearly all its opponents, and the excellence in the field continued yesterday. "[Defense] is the one thing that can never fail you," Sortino said. "It's got to be."

Women's tennis competes in first A–10 Championships

By BILL BALFOUR
Collegian Staff

For the University of Massachusetts women's tennis team, this weekend will mark a first for the program.

Today, the Minutewomen will begin competition in their first Atlantic–10 Championship. The three day event is being held at Rutgers University.

The Minutewomen enter the Atlantic 10 Championships on a streak, having won their last three matches. Massachusetts' last three wins have been over New Hampshire, St. Joseph's College and Fairfield University. Over that span, the scorching Minutewomen have won 21 of the 22 individual matches.

This weekend's contest should prove to be more of a challenge for the recently untested Minutewomen. Of the nine teams competing at the championship, Massachusetts has faced only the University of Rhode Island.

"We have not gone head–to–head against the A–10 except for URI," Coach Judy Dixon said. "This will be our first time competing against some of these teams."

Despite not having competed against the majority of the teams, Dixon believes Massachusetts can have a strong showing.

"I'm hoping we'll finish in the middle of the pack," Dixon said.

If the Minutewomen are to have a strong weekend, Dixon said every member of the team will have to turn in a strong performance.

"We need a lot of help from the lower part of the ladder and we need the doubles to step up," Dixon said.

The Atlantic 10 Championship and the Fairfield–ITA Tournament, held later this month, are the centerpieces of the tennis season and Dixon is hoping to see if her team is ready.

"I'm looking to see how much heart this team has," Dixon said.

According to Dixon, the singles lineup for Massachusetts will be: No. 1 Liesl Sitton, No. 2 Elizabeth Durant, No. 3 Sonnybelle Martinez, No. 4 Stacey Sheckner, No. 5 Lesley Watts and at No. 6 Mary Edwards.

The doubles pairings will be Sitton and Watts, Sheckner and Durant, and Martinez and Pam Levine.

Massachusetts will return to home action this upcoming Thursday when it hosts URI at 3 p.m. at the Upper Boyden Courts.

Gorillas face Delaware on the road

By ANDREW BRYCE
Collegian Staff

When asked about how much of a challenge the Delaware Blue Hens would be, University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse coach Ted Garber looked at it from the opposition's perspective.

"This is their biggest game of the year so far," said Garber. "They'll be ready, and they'll be on their home field."

Garber refuses to take any team lightly. Whether it was a weaker team like Providence or a strong team like Syracuse, Garber and his Gorillas make a point to play "good, fundamentally–sound lacrosse."

Tomorrow afternoon at 1 p.m., No. 11 Massachusetts will take on No. 16 Delaware down in Maryland.

Leading the Delaware attack will be All–American and 1992 North Atlantic Conference Player of the Year Anthony DiMarzo. The stand-out Blue Hen led the nation in assists last year with 50, and has a team–high 22 again this year. DiMarzo is currently riding a consecutive game streak of 26 with at least one assist. DiMarzo leads the team with 32 points.

"They are very similar to Hofstra," said Garber about the Blue Hen offense. "This team beat Army convincingly (17– 8), and they beat Rutgers. They are capable of exploding."

Other standout Delaware players include attackman Brad Glowaki (23 points), midfielder Tom Stamos (20 points), Ryan Kelly (19 points), who was named NAC Player of the Week last week and goalie Brian Cooper.

Massachusetts heads down south on a three game winning streak. The last victim to fall to the Gorillas was New Hampshire 14–6 on Wednesday afternoon. All–American candidates Wes Depp and Mike Valente led the explosive offensive attack.

"Now that Wes is on a roll, at least we don't have to rely on Brendan [Glass] for all the scoring," said Garber. "Wes is playing well. Mike has really hustled. Many times during the UNH game, he beat the defensemen down the field.

"When he picks his game up like he did (against UNH), he becomes an instant scoring threat. He's a very unselfish player."

Arguably the best result coming out of the UNH win was the playing time that many of the reserves received, especially goalie Kevin Ratkiewicz. The backup to starter Tom LoPresti finished with 8 saves on 16 shots.

"Kevin did a great job," said Garber. "He needed to get the field experience. To play in a practice and to play in a game is different."

Freshman Brendan Glass, who scored a point in the Gorillas' win over UNH, still leads the team with 25 points. Depp is next in line at 21, and Valente has 15.

The players were unable to play against UNH because of injuries. Junior Jeremy Murphy went down with a knee injury a couple of weeks ago, and has not played since. Garber said he could possibly play tomorrow afternoon.

"He might have been able to play Wednesday had there not been such poor field conditions. We just thought, 'Why take the risk?'," said Garber.

Same with senior Greg Kline, who had what Garber called "a semi–sprained ankle" that forced him to the sidelines.

ABRAM COMBAN/COLLEGIAN

The University of Massachusetts travel south this weekend to take on a dangerous Delaware team. The Blue Hens are looking to end the Gorillas' three–game winning streak.

Hodges gets Lantz, Roof to fill out staff

By ANDREW BRYCE
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts football Coach Mike Hodges announced Wednesday Ted Roof has been appointed as the new defensive line coach, and Terry Lantz being named the coach of the secondary.

As reported in The Collegian on March 31, Roof assumed the coaching position that Jerry Azzinaro abandoned to become defensive coordinator.

Roof has gained experience at some top notch programs. The new appointee coached defensive ends and outside linebackers at Duke for the past four seasons under Coach Barry Wilson, and also served as a graduate assistant under Bill Curry at Alabama, going to the 1987 Hall of Fame Bowl and the 1988 Sun Bowl.

> "I'm really excited that our program has attracted a coach like Ted Roof." — Massachusetts football Coach Mike Hodges

Roof also served as the inside linebackers and strength and conditioning coordinator at West Georgia College. Add it all up, and the new DL coach for the Minutemen has coached every defensive spot but the secondary as well as a variety of special teams units.

"I'm really excited that our program has attracted a coach like Ted Roof, a guy who has been a G.A. at Alabama, a full–time coach at Duke, and a player at Georgia Tech," said Hodges.

Roof has not only proved he has the skills to coach a defensive set, but also has the background of coaching in the south to assist in the recruiting process.

"He recruited nationally for Duke, which will be a definite plus for us," said Hodges. "We've expanded our recruiting nationally, getting some players out of Florida, and we will continue to expand. His experience and leadership will assist us in doing that. He is just an outstanding addition to our staff."

Back in his college playing days, Roof was a four–year letterman and a three–year starter at inside linebacker and captain of Georgia Tech's 1985 All–American Bowl team.

He earned All–ACC honors and went on to sign a free agent contract with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, before returning to school and becoming a student assistant for the Georgia Tech staff.

Roof is ready to accept the challenge of coaching for Massachusetts.

"I've heard great things about this program and the type of people in it," said Roof. "I'm excited about getting going. (The players) have a reputation for working hard, and the coaches are the type off people that understand what it takes to get it done."

Lantz served as a student assistant coach at the University of Louisville working with the team defense and breaking down film before moving on to the University of Tennessee.

During his stay at the UT, he broke down the film in addition to assisting the recruiting process. Lantz then moved to Northeast Louisiana for the last two seasons before accepting the offer at Massachusetts.

"Terry is young, aggressive, and very knowledgable," said Hodges.

"He has worked at three fine football programs and he is a real go–getter. He's walking into a great situation with Breon Parker and Tony Williams in the secondary, and I know he is going to do a fine job."

The vacancies were caused by the departure of former coaches Art Bittel and Bill McGovern.

Chaotic authority controls Israel

KHAN YUNIS, Occupied Gaza Strip (AP) — Tired of crowding with his wife and six children into a room the size of a parking space, Ibrahim Abu Mustafa made a grab for prime real estate when the Israel army started pulling back.

"There is chaos now, so I thought it would be a good time to build," he said. "There is no authority to stop me."

But when he tried to build a house on the crest of a sand dune overlooking the Mediterranean, the Israeli army twice knocked down the foundation.

Although the building site was on the ragged edge of the Palestinian refugee camp, the dune also overlooks two Israeli army posts, so the military apparently revised its hands-off policy and stopped the construction.

South Africa receives aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Clinton administration is putting together an assistance package in the range of $160 million to $170 million for South Africa once its new government is in place, an administration official said Monday.

The Agency for international Development assistance would be the first U.S. aid to the South African government, which has been constrained from aid because of its apartheid and human rights policies.

The country's first multiracial elections set for April 26-28 will herald an end to South Africa's international pariah status that stemmed from its official discrimination against the majority black population.

Clinton discusses Bosnian aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a grim mood, the Clinton administration studied its "very limited" options Monday for dealing with the Bosnian Serb offensive and keeping it from spreading from Gorazde to other Muslim enclaves.

Among the options under discussion was support for a European call to send U.N. troops to the embattled city.

President Clinton said he favored lifting the ban on sending arms to the Muslims, but indicated the United States would not act alone. The State Department said European nations remain opposed to ending the arms embargo.

Clinton was in Wisconsin trying to muster support for his health reform proposals. His top national security advisers met to discuss the deteriorating situation in Bosnia and are to joined by Clinton on Tuesday, White House spokeswoman Dee Dee Myers said.

Adios Arsenio

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Arsenio Hall is quitting his fading television talk show, which fell victim in ratings and prestige to late-night competitors David Letterman and Jay Leno, the show's producer said Monday.

"The Arsenio Hall Show," will air its final broadcast on May 27, Paramount said in a statement.

The syndicated show, which first aired on Jan. 3, 1989, developed a trademark audience "woop-woop" to show appreciation. It leaves at least one other indelible image: then-presidential contender Bill Clinton wailing away on his saxophone during the 1992 campaign.

Hall sent a letter to Kerry McCluggage, chairman of Paramount's television group, saying he wants to end the show, according to a Paramount executive who spoke only on condition of anonymity. Hall's six-year contract was due to expire this December.

Employment hopes improve for seniors

By CATHERINE B. PULLEY
Collegian Staff

A note for all college students sweating out graduation and sending out resumes: the job market may not be what you think, a director at the University of Massachusetts Career Center.

According to Clark Edwards, the associate director for career planning and placement at the Mather Career Center, the word is out about "hot new trends" for job hunters, the type of employer recruiting new college graduates has changed drastically, and the new trend is to contract employment.

Chemical Engineers, civil engineers and computer science majors: you are in the "most sought after major" bracket, according to Edwards, and are needed because of biochemical and biotechnology firms. Salaries look good with a possibility of being offered a job "in the 40s [thousands of dollars]," according to Edwards. Graduates with degrees in the technical fields can expect offers "in the 30s."

Liberal arts graduates: it may not be as bad as you think. If you have computer skills, "you are in demand," on the Edwards scale. Your salaries look to be "somewhere in the mid 20s" for starters.

And if you have, the "applied experience" of a co–op or an internship, you might be in luck after graduation.

"I can't overstress the importance of field experience," said Edwards.

The type of employer recruiting on college campuses has changed from the Fortune 500 type to smaller businesses such as mall stores.

"Gone are the IBM's, the Raytheons, the United Technologies," said Edwards.

Firms and businesses that are recruiting are Foot Locker's or lingerie boutiques, said Edwards. In most cases, students don't sign up for interviews when smaller companies visit campuses because they are not household words.

The hot new field for college graduates: retail and service industry. The way to go for hungry job seekers would be smaller stores like K–Mart, Marshalls and the smaller mall stores, which do a lot of recruiting. Edwards said the service agencies can include financial firms and social services agencies.

"Combined with the upsurge in the service and retail fields," said Edwards, "the future is looking brighter for liberal arts graduates.

"The whole dynamic of hiring and where the jobs are has changed," said Edwards. "It is very fluid now."

One major trend is contract hiring. Edwards said that firms are hiring people for special projects or for certain periods of time.

"Gone are the AT &Ts and IBMs who hired for life," said Edwards. Also, smaller technical and manufacturing firms like biochemical and biotechnology companies doing DNA cloning and genetic research are doing recruiting.

Salaries are more fluid then they used to be. With hard work, graduates may receive raises of $1,000 to $2,000 within a few months, said Edwards.

"The whole dynamic of hiring and where the jobs are has changed," said Edwards. "It is very fluid now."

Single parents receive support

A new RSO is currently helping students with kids

By GERI SAHN
Collegian Staff

Being a single parent and attending school at the same time can be a long, hard road to travel alone. This was the incentive for several University of Massachusetts students to start the Single Parents Organization.

Two years ago, Stella Thompson, a senior anthropology major, and Emily Blattman, began organizing a support group for women on campus who have children.

Recently, 10 women have joined the group, and it has been recognized by the student activities office as a registered student organization (RSO). The group is for single parents, but is currently comprised of single mothers only.

"It was very hard to move here with kids and attend classes. When I first came here I had no idea what kind of resources were available," Thompson said.

Thompson also said she feels there is no support system on campus for single parents. She is hoping the Single Parents Organization will be a resource center where single mothers can go and "relieve their stress."

It took the group a long time to become established as a RSO because not many women knew it existed.

"It is hard to meet people who are parents. We don't go around with a tattoo saying I'm a single parent," Thompson said.

The group has met several times at the Blue Wall. They have discussed ideas that the women will work on in the future.

One idea the group is hoping to pursue is getting a room on campus where all of the members' children can watch a movie together, under the supervision of one of the mothers. Thompson said this will give the rest of the mothers a chance to run errands.

REBECCA PETERSON/COLLEGIAN

A new RSO on campus is helping bring single parents, and subsequently their children, together.

The mothers have also discussed "what has been on their minds." Kim Baxter, a junior counseling psychology major, said, "It is very difficult when you are in a situation that you have an exam to take and your child is sick."

Baxter also said the group will "create a supportive community." She also said, "we need to gather the single parents on campus so we have a voice."

"We need to represent ourselves, get out, get independent. This is what a supportive committee can do. The group will be a support network for single parents," Baxter said.

Asian night sends cultural message

A fashion show was one of the highlights of UMass' annual Asian Culture Night.

With fashion shows, martial arts demonstrations, traditional food and dances, plays criticizing stereotypes and a budget of $11,000, approximately 1,500 people from all ethnic backgrounds celebrated Asian culture last Friday.

The Asian American Students Association (AASA) Asian Night has been celebrated at the University of Massachusetts for 11 years.

"This year, we made the message stronger," said Mark Kuan, co–producer of the show. The function was dedicated to Asian women and to breaking stereotypes regarding them.

"You do not have to be Asian in order to enjoy it," Kuan said referring to the audience as well as participants.

For the last five months, more than 100 students were involved in the coordination of the production, providing security, looking for sponsors, handling costumes for the shows, and catering, according to the producers.

The efforts were well worth it, according to Kuan, a senior plant and soil sciences major.

"It brings the community together, both Asian and non–Asian," said Kara Inouye, a co–producer of the event, and a junior majoring in Japanese and psychology.

Students walked around the Campus Center Auditorium, which was divided by a T-shaped stage, surrounded by colored stage lights.

They could either enjoy a play, watch a martial arts demonstration, or try different kinds of Asian food of which between 1,000 and 1,200 people took advantage of, according to Peter Manickas, food and brevages coordinator.

It was successful, according to Manickas, who is earning his Masters degree in hotel, restaurant and travel administration.

"This is a chance for people to see something about Asia and Asian people," Manickas said.

The play "R.A.W. ('Cause I'm A Woman)" by Diana Son contained strong language. It was straight to the point, according to a student who refused to be

Events take aim at breast cancer

By JOY COLLINS
Collegian Staff

The pelting rain was not enough to deter the Pioneer Valley's first annual "Stop the Epidemic" march on Saturday. The march, that consisted of approximately 125 marchers, was part of the Massachusetts Breast Cancer Coalition's Breast Cancer Action Week.

The rally that followed the march was well attended by survivors, their friends, lovers and families, local politicians, community activists and media representatives.

The speakers raised several important issues about breast cancer, such as environmental links, importance of political pressure, lesbian breast health concerns, funding for prevention vs. treatment, and the exclusiveness of access to health insurance and methods of early detection.

Anne Perkins, the Community Education Coordinator for the Breast Health Project and a survivor of breast cancer, said the goal of the march is to raise public awareness about the breast cancer epidemic.

"In raising the public awareness, it hopefully raises the awareness of politicians who will help to direct money toward research funding," Perkins said.

The goals of that research should be to find both the causes of breast cancer as well as a cure, she said. "We don't know the real causes, we have suspicions, but the causes are essentially unknown," Perkins said.

Deb Orgera, Co–Chair for the newly formed Pioneer Valley chapter of the Massachusetts Breast Cancer Coalition (MBCC), urged people to "make some noise about this issue" and "keep the pressure on the politicians" for funding for research and services.

Orgera said research should look at environmental causes of breast cancer. "If we're being poisoned, I want to know about it," she said. "We need to know the cause and get prevention."

Much of the message of the MBCC focuses on taking the blame off of victims of breast cancer.

"If we say it's behavior that causes breast cancer, we're blaming ourselves," said Susan Weber, the co–chair of the Greater Boston chapter of MBCC. "We believe we're the victims of the environment, of food additives."

Jeanette Rodriguez, the Puerto Rican/Latina Health Educator at the Spanish American Union and Baystate Medical Center's Women's Health Connections project, spoke about the importance of access to information about breast cancer that is sensitive to the cultural and economic contexts of women.

"It is not enough to just translate brochures," she said. "Our first project is to develop materials, litera-

Mulitculturalism's future probed

We do not deal with race if we do not tell the truth, since Multiculturalism is suppose to be vulnerable and honest, according to an Oregon consultant in race relations.

There is also a call to consciously teach children not to be racist, said Joy DeGruy–Leary, in her lecture "Multiculturalism in the Future" as part of the Baha'i Club Race Unity Conference last Sunday.

DeGruy–Leary spoke of children from interracial backgrounds and pointed out that someone said once that 1/32 of Black descendance made a person Black. However, if the same rule is flipped, according to the Pacific State University doctoral candidate, Martin Luther King would be white.

"People go Black because they can't go white," said DeGruy–Leary about people who come from interracial marriages. "They are forced to choose between both races."

This means denial of one of their parents, according to DeGruy–Leary. They have to develop love for their "whiteness" and their "blackness."

"As Baha'i's, we have have to tell the truth and start a new language," DeGruy–Leary said.

"Half Black and half white makes you Black, that makes no sense."

A person is both Black and white, but for white people, De Gruy–Leary said, a person with Black descendance would not be welcome.

"Stand out for what you believe," DeGruy said.

More than 200 people attended the conference this weekend, according to one of the students who coordinated it and refused to give out his name in order to give credit to the Club.

There were participants on the conference from out of state, including New York, Virginia and even Georgia, according to the student.

The Five College Baha'i Club has been responsible for last year's Institutes for the Healing of Racism, which were organized after the Southwest riots provoked by the attack of a Haitian resident assistant by two white students.

ture that is culturally appropriate for Puerto-Rican/Latina, African- American, Amerasian/Vietnamese and Russian women."

Access to health care is a big issue in the breast cancer battle, especially because early detection increases life chances dramatically. This is especially an issue where women are economically disadvataged.

Anne Perkins spoke about how this affects lesbians. Lesbian households are typically poorer, Perkins said, because the breadwinners are both female. Thus, the expense of health care can be burdensome.

"Lack of access to health care doesn't raise the risk of breast cancer but it raises the risk of late detection and as a result raises the risk of death," Perkins said.

End of war is not in sight

Research reveals achieving peace is idealistic goal

By JUAN JOSE CHACON QUIROS
Collegian Staff

"The end of war: Democracy and Cooperative Security." Does this sound unattainable to you? Nevertheless it was the title of a lecture by Randall Forsberg, at Smith College last Thursday night.

Forsberg has worked for 25 years on Peace Research, but it wasn't until recently that she decided to publicly talk about this issue. She explained how almost everybody is sympathetic with the idea of "ending war," but because of the circumstances we "all tend to reach lesser goals."

Forsberg explained how people look to reduce the threat of war but not actually to end war. According to her the fact "that we have no framework to use, no framework to articulate public discussion," imposes a toll on this debate.

Forsberg went on to list some of the conditions for ending war. "We have to get rid of the mistaken idea that ending war will be creating a Utopia," she said. Forsberg explained how there are precedents in the perception of "socially condemned institutionalized large scale violence."

She called "the end of cannibalism, human sacrifice and the abolition of slavery," signs of fundamental changes of the inviolability of the individual. "Now there's a transition under way, but it wouldn't be surprising if it took a long time," Forsberg said. According to her, the view of institutions like Harvard, MIT and the Department of State in this subject is "back in the 17-18 century."

An element to be taken into account, in Forsberg's view, is the fact that "there's no trust." In contradiction to that statement she mentioned how "our standards are not shared by all societies."

In her speech, Forsberg stressed the egalitarian notion that "democracies [western democracies] don't go to war" has been spreading. Forsberg addressed the issue of world government by declaring that the problem is that it would most likely "abuse power."

Forsberg called for a "renuntiation of the use of force. . . and unilateral intervention." She explained how defense forces should center their strategy on defending the territorial integrity of the country and not attacking as means of defense.

For these conditions to take place, Forsberg called for a ban on arm exports to all countries under the assumption that no one is going to get them. When referring to the United Nations, she said that the conditions under which the U.N. should attack are not clear. However, she failed to address questions from the audience on the role of that organization and its links to the Security Council.

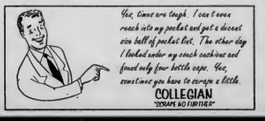
named.

According to Kuan, it was based on stereotypes of Asian women and generalizations perceived by Western society.

The monologue "For Sale," by playwriter Louise Mita, dealt with the experience of an Asian woman who grew up in a Latino community in New York, and criticized the stereotypes around them.

Mita was the winner of the inter City Cultural Center Playwrite Competition in 1992.

The auditorium resounded with the music of a martial arts demonstration performed by students in Karate Do, Tae Kwon Do, Kung Fu and Sword Kung Fu.



For Kuan it was an achievement to produce the show, since he indicated that politics almost sidelined this year's performance. The most important thing, according to Kuan, was the meaning of the event.

"We decided to take it on our own (since) the show had to go on," said Kuan proudly when asked about the results. "It was great to see how everyone got together."

Opinion

A war for the U.S. economy

In the boardrooms and war rooms of the American empire, where decisions regarding the economy, the military and the state of society have long been made, the national security complex has just answered a sizeable question.

These fine fat gentlemen, nourished by years of congressional favors and war profiteering in Vietnam, Panama, Iraq, and another dozen Reagan–era international spats besides, have determined the course of the future since the days of Harry Truman.

They choose presidents and engineer the economy as well as any Moscow politburo has ever done. This group of leaders has suckled, parasitic, on the teat of the Pentagon war machine for 50 years, and are now finding that their source of gluttony has been drained.

It makes perfect sense. The United States going to war with the United States is a fitting enterprise for the war profit machine. And it is wonderful for the economy.

Peter J. Orvetti

And so these barons of capital gathered together one last time to work out a plan in the name of tomorrow and the American Dream. First, they considered Yugoslavia as their next profit venture — it is a bloody war, destined to last a long time, and would certainly require mass production of ammunition and body bags. But this was rejected.

Other ideas came up: a repeat of the successful Iraq enterprise, continuing the profitable Somalia franchise, or an expansion of their product line into Rwanda. A congressperson even suggested an excursion to Haiti. But all of these ideas were voted down.

One suggests another war, and with his (there were no women present) suggestion, the room fell silent. Dead silent, you might say.

That day, the national security establishment decided to declare war on the United States itself.

It makes perfect sense. The United States going to war with the United States is a fitting enterprise for the war profit machine. It has an army of the same size and equal might. Such a high–tech, high–profile war makes the world quake in fear of American power. And it is wonderful for the economy.

Instead of replacing one jet after each heated air battle, American industry will replace two. Instead of employing cheap labor to dig out 10,000 graves, 20,000 holes will be needed. Instead of just the president's meager $250 billion defense budget, at least twice that is now warranted. It is a war to make the world safe for the service economy.

"And," chimed in one member of the secret meeting on that historic day, "we could solve the crime problem! We could make death row prisoners — and, after that vote in the House, there will be a lot more of them soon enough — shoot and fly planes, and send them to the front lines!"

The military–industrial group hit upon a wonderful idea. Soon, they may dispatch their army not just to fight each other, but to the cities as well. It would be the Los Angeles riots times ten. The army could shoot down criminals, or add them to their number. Maybe they could even replace the police.

And the factories are quickly filling with workers, churning out bullets and coffins from mighty machines. With each clang of the bell and each pull of the lever, another weapon of war is produced. Each weapon is another dollar into the American economy, and into the pocket of the military–industrial machine.

Unemployment will soon be eliminated, since all of us will be producing for the war effort. Those of us who cannot will be drafted. With 20,000 holes a month — or a week if we fight well enough — there will be plenty of need for more and more fresh young soldiers.

The jets are in the air, bringing each other down. The first casualties have already been seen. Soldiers wearing the same uniform will soon march in separate lines, turn in on one another and fire.

We are all becoming rich, and we will all work, now that we have declared war on the United States. Glory, and victory, will be ours.

Peter J. Orvetti is a Collegian columnist.

Whitewater isn't going away

"If I could grade the press, I wouldn't" — Bill Clinton

Our society has become one of maniacs. We've entered into the "feeding frenzy" of scandal and investigation. My breed of human lives on the smell of fear, ruin, and the right to freedom of expression. We are the hounding press. We are the evil and muck rakers of society — or at least that is how Bill Clinton would like to portray us.

Movie stereotypes depict journalists digging for a story with no respect to privacy or human feeling. We steal documents, we bother people, we ruin lives, characters and reputations.

But the movies often forget about a little loophole called libel, slander, and the right to privacy.

Oh, and then there is Bill Clinton, and that other loophole called Whitewater; but, according to Mr. Clinton, he should be exempt from pack journalism and investigative reporting.

President Clinton appeared before the American Society of Newspaper Editors' annual conference last week and expressed his outrage and frustration with Whitewater coverage.

Over the past few weeks, Clinton has accused the press of trying to destroy the character of his wife, his presidency and his administration. He claims that the Whitewater investigation has halted his plans to work on health care and crime.

The Whitewater Scandal may not be a fiasco to the president, but, through the eyes of the press, it is a classic example of a politician abusing his power. If you look into the facts, there are several unanswered questions in the little venture that Bill and Hillary undertook in Arkansas with the Whitewater land deal.

First, a savings and loan collapses and a lot of money just "disappears." Then Vince Foster, the president's lawyer, shoots himself leaving behind a mysterious death and a lot of files on the Whitewater land development deal. Two weeks later, files are shredded at the order of the first lady before federal investigators can examine them for themselves.

Federal subpoenas start flying around the president's administration, and staff members start resigning one by one. An investigation by the Resolution Trust Corporation led to criminal referrals to the Justice Department and named the President of the United States, the First Lady, and others as possible recipients of some of the missing money from the Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan.

And don't forget about the Clinton's little $14,615 "mistake" on their tax returns. Funny, if the president forgets to declare money of that magnitude, they call it a mistake. If Joe American forgot to declare 14 grand it would literally be a federal offense.

Perhaps the furor over Whitewater wouldn't have escalated to this point if the White House had cooperated and not withheld information from the press. It would have been a lot easier if the press didn't have to dig to the bottom of the barrel to get the information, or if important documents were not shredded minutes before federal investigators entered Foster's office with search warrants.

Over the past few weeks, Clinton has accused the press of trying to destroy the character of his wife, his presidency and his administration. He claims that the Whitewater investigation has halted his plans to work on health care and crime.

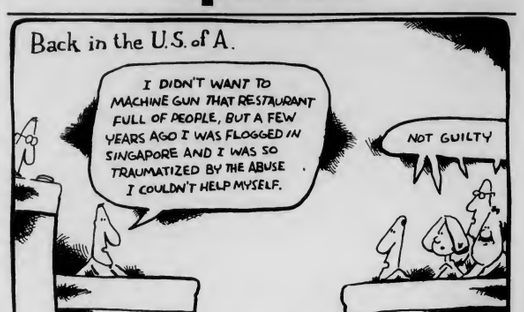
Catherine B. Pulley

The headlines are astounding. The New York Times published a 24–page story on Whitewater, and The Boston Globe has published 29 front–page stories on the president's little problem. Journalists in Washington have memories of Watergate, and I would cut off a limb to be a reporter in the District of Columbia right now with the ingredients of a classic uproar that has the potential to go down in the pages of history.

It is the responsibility of the press corps to investigate and publicize any wrong doings by the president or any public figure that is in the position to abuse power. If Clinton claims that Whitewater should be ignored, then Iran–Contra and even Watergate have no place in history as two of American journalists' greatest victories in investigative reporting.

Scandals should be investigated and reviewed regardless of whether the president is a Republican, Democrat or independent. American journalists are an extra safeguard compilmenting the system of checks and balances we have in the United States to keep politicians or public figures on their toes.

As the headlines blaze and politicians squirm in their seats in Washington, I do a little soul–searching and realize why I chose the career I did. As a journalist, I am a protector of the First Amendment. My job is to serve the readers and keep them informed of happenings around the world and in our own borders.



And if I were in Washington right now, one thing about Whitewater would be on my mind: this is the stuff that Pulitzers are made of.

Singapore justice on trial

Last week the Associated Press covered three stories that really caught my eye. I think they make a powerful statement about life in the 1990s.

In case you missed it, the newest thing to draw the ire of the American public is the justice system in Singapore.

Michael P. Fay, an 18–year–old American living in Singapore was found guilty of vandalism. Apparently Fay thought it would be fun to spray–paint random cars. Little did he know that, in addition to a fine and a jail sentence, a whipping by a rattan cane across the buttocks was also part of the mandatory punishment for vandalism in Singapore.

Now Americans from all over are whining that this is cruel and unusual. "He's American, you can't whip him."

But what that kid did was malicious, plain and simple. People who are rushing to Fay's defense should realize that it's punks like him that give Americans such a bad reputation abroad.

While we may not like the Singapore justice system or how their government deals with criminals, we have no right to expect them to treat the kid any different because he's American.

I'm not suggesting we adopt flogging as part of our punishment system, but maybe we should take note and "spank" our criminals a little bit more. There is a lot more crime in the United States than there is in Singapore. Maybe the fear of a good whipping keeps potential offenders in line. I know the thought of a good lashing with a cane would have put a damper on the stealing and transplanting of 'For Sale' signs in high school.

* * * * *

Also last week, the AP reported that a U.S. District Judge told officials in Worcester County, Maryland that one person, one vote wouldn't cut it in a local election for the county commision. The judge ordered that citizens' receive five votes each in order to give African–American candidates a better shot at getting elected.

While we may not like the Singapore justice system or how their government deals with criminals, we have no right to expect them to treat the kid any different because he's American.

Matthew Vautor

Is this really the route we want our treasured democracy to take? This judge just implemented a system that favors candidates of a specific race. That hardly sounds democratic at all.

George Washington is turning in his grave. Someone please put the brakes on this sort of misguided political correctness.

* * * * *

"I love you, you love me..." Well, apparently not in Worcester.

Last week, the AP reported that, acting on a $10 bet, a man in Worcester, Mass. beat up a woman in a Barney costume.

Deborah McRoy was dressed as the annoying purple dinosaur to celebrate the opening of a new drug store when she was attacked.

"We hate Barney," said Derrick McMahan, who attacked Barney after his roommate bet him an Alexander Hamilton that he didn't have the nerve.

The most entertaining quote came from a little kid who witnessed the event: "I'm going home to get my gun, Barney, and I'm going to shoot him."

It seems that Worcester might be a likely site for the next "guns for Barney dolls" exchange.

I hate to say it, Derrick, but you just wasted your fifteen minutes of fame.

What a screwed up decade... and its not even half over. Stay tuned.

Lenchner: don't judge me, either

To the editor:

Talk about the pot calling the kettle black. Chris Ragusa, Collegian photographer, wrote a long column on pre–judging last week ["Don't judge me," April 14]. But in his article, Ragusa commits that very same act.

The column starts off well. By mentioning that I was in the Collegian to apologize for something my own newspaper did, I come off like a responsible person who is not afraid to take responsibility, even when the mistake was made by someone else.

While I was there, I asked a staff member if Chris Ragusa was a White Pride skinhead, because I had heard that that was the case. I didn't make accusations, I asked someone who probably knew more than I do. The person told me that, as far as he knew, Ragusa was not a racist skinhead. Conclusion: the rumor I had heard was wrong. End of story.

But no — Ragusa had to take offense. Look, I know about skin history; I was a skin myself a number of years ago. I admit to not being as hardcore as you seem to be, but I am not ignorant. The reason some people think you are a fascist is because of your white laces, which in some parts of the world are used to distinguish between racist skins and others, like SHARP, Skinheads Against Racial Prejudice.

You are correct in writing a column to explain yourself and your culture. But you attacked me for checking out a rumor which turned out to be false, without finding out what I really thought. Shame on you for that, and for making generalizations about "these people," presumably including those who, like me, advocate for change in a responsible manner.

Sometimes abortion is the right choice

To the editor:

I am writing to express the outrage I felt when I read Diana D'Avanzo's column on abortion in the April 13 edition of the Collegian ["Abortion has many victims"]. Ms. D'Avanzo's column was full of half–truths and blatant errors with regard to many of the facts and feelings she purports to know.

As a woman who has made the difficult decision to have an abortion, I must tell Ms. D'Avanzo that such a decision is not made simply "in the name of convenience." Nor is such a decision made with misinformation from any "industry," as she refers to the people who make it possible for a woman to have an abortion.

With no permanent home of my own or financial stability to speak of, I decided to have an abortion because my child would not have had the life it deserved. My boyfriend felt the same way, and after much consideration we decided that an abortion was the best option. I would ask Ms. D'Avanzo not to presume that she knows the feeling of a woman who has experienced an abortion, unless she herself has had one.

I have no regrets about the decision that my boyfriend and I made five months ago. Although I cannot speak for other women, I feel it is important to point out that my body and my mind did not experience the "trauma and pain" which Ms. D'Avanzo claims happens to all post–abortion women.

I would also like to clarify a few points Ms. D'Avanzo made which are untrue.

Abortion is not as closely connected to "lower–class women" as she might think. Considering the high price of an abortion even at Planned Parenthood, many lower–class women are forced to be sterilized or never terminate the pregnancy. Abortion has never been an issue mainly for the lower–class, but for all women who feel that they have the right to do whatever they want with their bodies and minds.

Also, in most literature available through clinics where abortions are performed, the facts on the dangers of abortions as well as pregnancy and childbirth are up to date and accurate. I suggest that Ms. D'Avanzo read some of this literature to make an informed decision, rather than an inflammatory one.

The difficult lessons of Cuba

By FIDEL CASTRO
Special to the Collegian

HAVANA — I can remember the days when we had big meetings about the Debt Crisis — In 1985 — when we became aware of many of the things that were about to happen, and that are happening today. I understand that our continent lost the best time for a great battle, which would have spared us of many of today's grievances.

You have expressed here the significance of the new wave of Imperialism in our hemisphere, in Latin America and specially, in the Caribbean. You can see it everyday, every hour, in increasing unemployment, in increasing poverty, in the lack of resources for education and public health, in the lack of resources for solving social problems, in the lack of resources for solving the grave problems of this hemisphere like housing, the growth of marginality and with it of all the marginal neighborhoods in all the cities of our countries.

You can see privatization, and industries that cost years and decades of efforts to nationalize them — many of them strategic industries, strategic industries and services that constituted pride to our countries — have been sold at miserable prices; that's the truth. Big and important companies have been sold to foreign capital, or in part to big domestic capital. Many times, they've been bought with foreign debt paper for a half or a third of its value, after having them undervalued. I repeat, they've been bought with that same foreign debt we declared unpayable. Today they're making us pay two different ways: more than ever, they are becoming the owners of the fundamental sectors of our economy, and more than ever they are asking for payment for that debt.

If you talk to teachers, if you talk to medical doctors, if your talk to representatives of cultural organizations, to unions, to peasants, or to students, you find always the same problem that there are no resources. However, the percentage of the national budget that the countries of Latin America dedicate to debt–servicing is enormous. . .however there is no budget for the essential needs of the population, for solving any problem. That's what they're teaching our peoples — because you didn't learn that in any book or any school, you learned it from the knowledge of life, from the knowledge of truth — the combination of neo–liberalism and the new tendencies in the world, the combination of neo– liberalism and the unipolar hegemony in the part of the United States, with the creation of blocks of economic and political power.

You see this everyday in the streets, that although we are living an extremely difficult situation for causes you are aware of, I think not only Cuba is living a special period, Latin America is living a special period, the Third World is living a special period.

Now they want to open all the economic frontiers, globalize the economy. What role is there for us, countries of the Third World, in this globalization of the economy? Open the frontiers, bring down all the tariffs. What do we win, besides having our countries, our lands, our human resources used by the will of transnationals and imperialism? They would buy everything, thy would be the owners of key industries, they would deepen our current status as colonies. They would put our independence for sale, not only in a real and objective fashion, but in a formal way, because since the end of the socialist side the world equilibrium has been broken. All the empire is doing, is to fight against the formal independence that we still have, the little formal independence we have today.

In the cultural sector they invade us without pity. They invade us through the media, they make us watch not what we are interested in but for other reasons, to show their wealth and their consumption societies based in advertising and propaganda. They control, trough information transnationals, almost all the news, and they give only their side to all the world events. The T.V. that you see is practically all theirs, and they don't advertise Supernieghborhood but Superman.

This formal independence is being gradually sold using the United Nations Security Council as the instrument. We have to defend not only the criteria for the democratization of the United Nations but for this to happen there has to be representatives from all the regions of the world. There has to be at list two representatives from Latin America and two from Africa in the Security Council. A country like India, with 850 million people has to be admitted, in our judgment, into the Security Council, regardless of its per capita income.

What is the scheme that neoliberalism is offering? That we all become like Taiwan, South Korea or Singapur, the three famous examples. How can Haiti imitate Taiwan? How can the countries of Africa can imitate the example of Taiwan if they don't have universities, schools, no qualified personnel, no capital, no markets? Can they resolve, with the neo– liberal scheme, the development problems of Africa? Then, capitalism cannot signify any wellbeing for the world, what it can signify is suicide.

Neo–liberalism leads to genocide, not only for Latin America but for the entire world. Neoliberalism is a genocide, a genocide is liberalism, capitalism is a genocide for the world today.

In Latin America there was talk to use some of the resources from privatization to solving social problems, but it's like a match that burns when it's lighted but lasts only for a moment. Very little capital did they receive from privatization and they will end up paying a lot every year for these.

Cuba resists, Cuba defends its sovereignty, Cuba defends its independence. That's why you have to punish Cuba, blockade Cuba, try to make it die of hunger, because they cannot forgive 35 years of resistance of our heroic people. They don't even want the memory of these. They want the image of Cuba to disappear to the eyes of Latin America and Cuba.

Interview looks at Latin American issues

By SONIA PAZ
Collegian Staff

On the night of Wednesday April 27, the Pioneer Valley will enjoy the presence of one of today's most influential writers. Margaret Randall, the author of such books as "Women Brave In the Face of Danger," "Gathering Rage," "Women in Cuba, Twenty Years Later," and "Sandino's Daughters," will speak at Smith College in the Neilson Library Browsing Room. Recently, I have had the pleasure of speaking to Margaret Randall personally.

SP — When you come to visit us on the 27th, will you be reading anything out of Sandino's Daughters Revisited?

MARGARET — I will be talking about it. The book is made up of interviews with feminists in Nicaragua. I will tell a story, but I really don't believe I will read from it.

SP — Since the '60s, you have been involved with numerous movements in Latin America. With this in mind. What are your feelings towards the Chiapas uprising in Mexico?

MARGARET — It is extraordinary! I believe that it gives a real sense of hope to Mexico. What the Zapatista's are doing in their struggle against poverty and manipulation has a real democratic quality. The Zapatista's are opening this struggle to Mestizo people as well, and if you read the documents that they have drawn up, you would see that they are filled with such wisdom. This is such an inspiration to indigenous people all over the Latin America. Also — this is a little known fact — even though the uprising in Chiapas was a surprise to us all, it was being planned for over 10 years. It didn't happen as a result of NAFTA, as most people think. In fact, Indigenous people all over Latin America have been organizing. Not many people know this, because the media is very selective about what it reports on.

SP — The other day I was talking to my mother about the current state of El Salvador. She was telling me about this statue that was built. It's of a man releasing an eagle from his hand, the moving part about this is that it was constructed by melting down the guns and artillery that were used in the war. Now that the war is over, how do you feel about El Salvador?

MARGARET — I don't believe that the war is over, I believe that it is at a different stage, but definitely not over. Because of the new liberal U.S. policies sweeping Latin America, it is demanding a new response, not armed struggle.

It's easy for us to talk about the war, but for people who have suffered the war, they see the statue as something more symbolic. This is also a chance for people to regroup their energy and to go in a different direction. Now that it is safer, the people can fight on other fronts, such as legally, politically and through education. As of yet, it is premature to celebrate victory, the war will end when all the misery ends.

SP — Since you were just in Cuba, how are the people there being affected by the U.S. Embargo?

MARGARET — I think that it is atrocious and obscene. The embargo is so unreasonable. It is not hurting the government at all; It is hurting the people. Yet the U.S. is starting trade with Vietnam, a country we were at war with, and there is no trade with Cuba, a country we were not really at war with. Why the blockade? It seems more like a vendetta than a policy.

SP — Do you know of any up and coming women politicians in Latin America?

MARGARET — There are wonderful women in politics In Latin America. In Nicaragua, there is a wonderful woman named Dora Maria Tellez. When I was in Cuba, I met this woman, I can't remember her name. She was a law maker in the Cuban National Assembly. She was so smart; she really had a good grip on the political situation in Cuba. Another woman who comes to mind is a woman named Nora Storga. She died four years ago, but I had a chance to interview her for Sandino's Daughter Revisited. She was an important political figure in Nicaragua, she was their ambassador to the United Nations.

The last time I was in Chile, I was driving through the countryside with my daughter, and I saw a billboard with campaigning for the election of a Communist, Maori Baltra. This woman was part of President Salvador Allende's cabinet back in 1973, before the coup. When I saw that she was running for office again, I just broke into tears. I don't know if she won, I assume she did, she was running in a district with strong communist ties.

SP — I have heard so much about Gay and Lesbian movements in Latin America, such as the "Incuentro" in El Salvador. What is the situation for Gays and Lesbians in Latin America really like?

MARGARET — For the patriarchy, Gays and Lesbians are the final frontier. But it is different for different parts in Latin America. Lesbian movements are suffering, tremendous repression in places like Argentina and Mexico. Also, in Chile, a gay club was burned to the ground. There is also a strong lesbian movement in Nicaragua. The history of this movement is covered in my book Sandino's Daughter Revisited. Now In Cuba, there is a lot of Gay and Lesbian activity, and it is being supported by the government for the first time.

There are gay clubs popping up all over, literature is being printed all the time. There are gay couples on soap operas and the public loves them. There was a movie called Fresa and Chocolate (Strawberry and Chocolate). It was about the friendship between a gay man and a straight man. The movie criticized the frigidity of the revolution in the '70s towards homosexuality. The movie was so popular that it won first prize in the Havana Film Festival. In December, the movie had made such an impact that it was shown 24–hours a day, a total of 10,000 people a day were lining up to see the movie.

Professors call to end embargo

In a letter to President Bill Clinton, UMass professor Carmen Diana Deere and Smith College professor Andrew Zimbalist asked the Administration to end the embargo on Cuba. Here are some excerpts of the letter they sent to Clinton and the President's reply.

"Regarding educational exchange, we fully subscribe to the reasoning of Congressman Berman that in the case of Cuba and other authoritarian countries the free exchange of ideas can only enhance the democratic spirit and hasten democratic change.

Such a process has already begun within Cuba as a result of the scholarly exchanges initiated under the limited opening towards Cuba that occured under the last Democratic administration in the late 1970s.

U.S. knowledge of Cuba and intellectual exchange can be deepened by allowing U.S. undergraduate students to study in Cuba (as was permitted under the Carter administration), Cuban students to enroll in U.S. universities, and by allowing Cuban scholars to stay in the United States for longer periods.

As scholars of the Cuban economy, we personally believe that the embargo is a counterproductive and dangerous policy. It is common knowledge that this policy has been perpetuated by the disproportionate influence of the Cuban American National Foundation on U.S. foreign policy toward Cuba over the last twelve years. As scholars, we believe that the overriding question in the formulation of U.S. embargo bolsters Castro's legitimacy as a nationalist leader fending off agression from a hostile superpower, this point is also often made by leading Cuban dissidents and humand rights activists.

Second, if the Castro government were to fall, then the greatest likelihood is that a long period of instability would insue. Some two million Cubans have access to and are trained to use firearms. More than half of the Cuban is black or mulatto, a group that has benefitted materially and socially quite substancially under the revolution. Again the vast majority of Cuban scholars agree that this group. Along with a large number of white Cubans and members of the Armed Forces, would attempt to defend the the principles of the revolutionary government. The ensuing waste of human life and the physical destruction would vast and prolonged sufferingin Cuba and would do nothing for the promotion of propitious conditions for for stability or dempcracy. Rather, it would likely instigate a massive refugee problem, many times the size of that experienced in Haiti.

Third, curent U.S. policy deprives U.S. business of taking advantage of the largest and most attractive market in the Caribbean, now being exploited by European, Asian, Canadian and Latin American capital.

Cuba presents your administration with a unique opportunity to demonstrate a new, post–Cold War, farsighted approach to foreign policy. The measured and negotiated lifting of the embargo will promote the goals fo U.S. policy at the same time that it will promote the welfare of the Cuban people, the interest of U.S. business, and the concerns of the U.S academic community. It will gain greater respect for U.S. policy in the community of nations and it will develope consistency with the quest for an ever–growing community of free trade in North and Meso–America. We urge you to consider adopting a forward–looking and constructive policy direction with regard to Cuba.

Clinton replies:

Dear Carmen and Andrew:

Thank you for you letter. My Administration seeks a rapid and peaceful transition to democracy in Cuba so that all of its citizens can enjoy the same fruits of freedom that Americans do. For that reason, I support the embargo against Cuba, and I believe it should stand until there is a real movement toward freedom and democracy. Historically, international embargoes have helped bring about positive change in many countries. The people of Cuba deserve the right of self–determination through free elections and, just as important, they deserve to be free from political abuse and dictatorship.

At a time when many countries are torn by conflict, we must all work together to build a safer, more prosperous, and more democratic world. I appreciate your concern about this important issue.

Sincerely,

Bill Clinton

Take a break from TV

On the Tube
By Caleb Cochran

Today I thought of a way to write a column about TV that isn't really about TV at all. Lost? Don't despair. Just read my list of Things to Do Around the House When the TV Breaks or the Cable Goes Out.

1. The Cat Dancer. If you're like me, you have a cat. When I'm sick of watching TV, I like to break out this little toy I have called the "cat dancer." Invariably, hours of fun follow. The cat dancer is basically a long piece of wire with all these little pieces of wood on the end. When you dangle it in front of your cat, it thinks the little pieces of wood are a bird. That's what it says on the package, at least. I don't know if I buy that, but my cat goes absolutely insane when I break out this little baby.

The only exercise my cat got over the winter break was the time she spent chasing after that damn cat dancer. I can't tell if she likes the thing or if it just pisses her off, but it's so much fun to watch her run into walls chasing the thing that I don't really care.

2. Manual Restringing. Last summer, my little brother and I went through about two weeks of complete badminton madness. We put down lines for a court in the back yard and everything. The racquets that we bought at Ames, however, caused nothing but headaches. The grips kept falling off and the strings kept breaking. Rather than shell out five bucks and buy new racquets, my dad and I decided to try and restring one ourselves. So, we headed down to the basement with a spool of fishing line and went to town. About six hours later we emerged with a loosely strung racquet that wouldn't be able to withstand the impact of one of those little Nerf basketballs, let alone an actual shuttlecock. The project did keep us busy, however. Then we had to hustle to Ames before it got dark out.

3. Stop that thief! Stowed away in my bedroom closet at home are boxes and albums of old baseball cards. Every time I come home from school, I rummage through the albums to look for missing cards. You see, my brother Jeremy is a little sneak who thinks it's funny to take my 1973 Reggie Jackson card, stick it in his album and pass it off to his little buddies as his own. They're impressed. I never am. He always gives me an excuse, like, "I didn't think you cared about your cards anymore." Yeah, right. That's why they're stored away in plastic sheets in an album.

If he found them in the cat's litter box, I would have no complaints. To make a long story even longer, my advice to you is this: look through your crap to make sure your brother hasn't hoisted anything since the last time you were home. And by the way, Jer, if you're looking for your Beastie Boys t-shirt, I stole it.

4. Sega. If the TV has major damage, like a broken picture tube, you can forget this one. If the cable is out, however, you can still enjoy hours of mind-numbing fun. My old roommate and I once went through an entire Stanley Cup playoff, beginning to end, in one sitting. It took around three hours. I think my roommate won. I was a drooling mess by the end.

University dancers perform entertaining and diverse show

By ASHLEY E. VONDRASEK
Collegian Staff

An Evening of Student Choreography
Hampden Theater
April 15, 1994

Last Friday night the UMass Department of Music and Dance presented An Evening of Student Choreography at 8 p.m. in the Hampden Theater, located in Southwest.

The show consisted of 12 pieces that were not only entertaining, but illustrated the talent of the students as well.

Instrumental music was written by Tony Silva, who was also the performance's choreographer. His piece, "Believing Me," was a romantic piece performed by a man and woman. This was undoubtedly the most moving of the performances.

Although there was a trend to use such things as clapping of the hands, running, rolling on the floor, and carrying people across the dance floor in many of the pieces, one could not help but appreciate that each individual dance was performed in a unique way.

It resembled a couple ice skating because, at times the man and woman were holding on to one another. At other times, the dancers would run and push one another away, or pull one another towards them.

Another piece, named "Untitled" was performed by a group of five dancers and featured a Janet Jackson song. "Untitled" looked like a music video, not only because of the moving lights shining on the floor, but because of the costumes.

Each dancer perfected the "grunge" look, and wore sleeveless plaid shirts, black lycra shorts and black, lace-up, granny boots. This piece was the most energetic; so energetic, in fact, that the audience cheered them on with shouts and whistles.

Although there was a trend to use such things as clapping of the hands, running, rolling on the floor, and carrying people across the dance floor in many of the pieces, one could not help but appreciate that each individual dance was performed in a unique way.

The dancers, who were predominately dance majors, tried out through a club called Alive With Dance at the end of first semester. Rehearsals were held twice a week and started in late January and ran until the first show. The week before the first show dress rehearsals were held.

All choreographers had to be dance majors. Some of them choreographed a routine as part of their fulfillment of a senior project, as noted in the program.

After attending the show, it was evident that all the hard work paid off. If you missed this show and are interested in seeing it, there will be shows held on April 28, 29 and 30 at Bowker Auditorium.

Eugenius
Mary Queen of Scots
Atlantic

Today, I am performing a little record review experiment, and inviting any opinions that my younger brother Jamie might have regarding this band. He is a fairly musical kid, not to mention intelligent, so I figure, heck, let us see what the thirteen-year-old stud-boy can come up with.

Trax Da Trax Biff

First of all, a little history of Eugenius. Band leader Eugene Kelly used to be the leader of The Vaselines, a celebrated rock-pop group hailing from Glasgow.

Kelly then broke up the band in the mid-eighties and dropped out of the scene for a while before resurfacing with Eugenius on their debut album, Oomalama in 1992.

With this second album, one could easily expect some more ear candy from the Glaswegians. Let's see what James thought.

The opener, "pebble/shoe" has unique rhythm and is okay, but not catchy enough; not a favorite.

The next song, on the breeze, is more upbeat, has more oomph, which makes it a better song than "pebble/shoe." There are other noteworthy tracks. Although "let's hibernate" sounds musically similar to other tracks, the vocals and lyrics are the best on the CD, and make it stand out on the album.

"Friendly high" is a perfect example of the unique melody of the guitars, especially the bass. The lyrics of "tongue rock" were a nice change of pace, and the drummer's fills were exceptional. (Editor's note: James is a drummer.)

Overall, Mary Queen of Scots was likeable, but sometimes became boring because the lack of

There's a Ford or Mercury Just Like You... and Your Ford or Lincoln-Mercury Dealer Has a Graduation Present to Help Make it Your Own... • $400 Cash Back or • a Special Finance Rate*

Personally speaking, what you drive says a lot about who you are. So why not say you're one of the most exciting, fun-loving, even sensible people going? In other words, why not say it with a sporty new Ford or Mercury?

Now's the perfect time to make a personal statement—because the 1994 Ford & Mercury College Graduate Purchase Program gives you your choice of $400 cash back or a special finance rate when you buy a new Ford or Mercury. Or lease your vehicle and get $400 cash back!

Plus, Ford Credit can offer qualified applicants pre-approved credit up to $18,000 or the MSRP, whichever is lower, which could mean no down payment on finance purchases. You may also defer purchase payments for 120 days in most states (excluding Michigan, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Washington, DC).

So take time out to see your Ford or Lincoln-Mercury dealer today and ask about the College Graduate Purchase Program. (It's a terrific way to show the world just how smart you really are!)

*Special Finance rate alternative and Ford Credit programs not available on leases
To be eligible you must graduate with a bachelor's or graduate degree or be enrolled in graduate school, between 1/1/94 and 9/30/94. This program is in addition to all other national customer incentives, except for other Ford private offers, including the Young Buyer Program. You must purchase or lease your new vehicle between 1/1/94 and 9/30/95. Some customer and vehicle restrictions apply, so see your dealer for details.

Lechuguilla Cave, collecting bacteria that live in an environment the scientists say mimics Martian characteristics. "This is the first time where we have had them (the organisms) in an accessible deep underground environment. On Mars, if life has survived it has to be deep underground," Chris McKay, a NASA planetary scientist, said Monday in a telephone interview from Carlsbad Caverns National Park in New Mexico.

Researchers want to study how the organisms can exist in Lechuguilla, which is located in a wilderness area of the sprawling park about 180 miles northeast of El Paso. The cave has been surveyed to a length of more than 70 miles and a depth of 1,593 feet.

Lechuguilla, which is formed in calcium carbonate with gypsum deposits, is isolated and there aren't any animals or streams to bring in organic matter as there would be in other caves, McKay said.

"So there are no sources of energy coming into the cave," he said.

Researchers say the bacteria derive energy from sulfur and iron, which are believed to be two main ingredients of Martian soil. McKay said NASA researchers became interested in exploring whether there is life under the surface of Mars after learning about microorganisms like those in Lechuguilla Cave.

"People said if there's life underground on Earth, why not underground life on Mars," he said.

Kimberley Cunningham of the United States Geological Service identified the first fungi and microbes found at the cave's Sulfur Shores deep point in 1990.

More than 30 microbiology testing sites are now established in the cave, said Cunningham, a research geologist who worked with the NASA scientists.

Samples will be analyzed at the USGS laboratory in Denver, a NASA-contracted lab in Boulder, Colo., and the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

The analyses will probably take up to a month. After that the research team will plan another trip to Lechuguilla, McKay said.

SWELL! I checked in to the Rusty Nail Motel and asked the owner if he knew of any swinging sushi bar deli joints where I could hook up with a fix of Toke Maki and Knockwurst on Rye. "The eternal question," he said, "is how to get the mouse out of the bottle." I thanked the wise old man and checked into room six sixty six. I opened up my suit case cum brown paper bag and pulled out the Collegian. "We put the mouse in the bottle."

Your Horoscope

By Jeane Dixon

ARIES (March 21–April 19): Friends who are in the know share some confidential information with you. It may keep you from going astray. Look for a tangible way to show your appreciation.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): When business profits slump, overhead must be pared to the bone. Signs for a speedy recovery are not promising. Hang in there! A new clients or partner could be part of the picture. Show your reliability.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): Be more realistic when handling money, avoid making silly loans or spending foolishly. An older person offers good advice: follow it to the letter!

CANCER (June 21–July 22): Something you need could appear from out of the blue. Your family benefits when you solve a personal problem. Be tactful when expressing yourself to someone who is very sensitive.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): If an ally or friend can be persuaded to act on your behalf, you could have it made! People at the top expect a lot. Don't let your dog... it's gross.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): If you feel unsure, postpone business negotiations or an important interview until more data are available. You need solid facts and figures. Do not be a fanatic about minor details.

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): Work diligently to cultivate your imagination and enlarge your vocabulary. Completing pending projects takes precedence over launching new ones. If detail work bores you, try to delegate some of it.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): New developments will have you on pins and needles. Many view the future with apprehension. Turn your back on all who advise extreme measures.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): Conflicting ambitions could disrupt the best of relationships. Do not allow strangers to get wind of your financial maneuvers. Managing a business with flair is your strong suit.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): Adopting a more practical view of trends may lead you to change your goals. Welcome parental allies and suggestions from experts. A visitor could send your spirits soaring.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18): You an a co-worker can come up with a successful plan or project today. Begin action on it right away. Put selfish interests in the deep freeze if you want romance to heat up.

PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20): Strengthen existing ties. A stable, rewarding marriage is more important than ever. Couples who plan and work together makes the largest financial gains.

want to risk it on the muddy field," said Garber. "Hopefully Murphy is going to get his timing back."

The loss ended a three game winning streak for UMass. Ten wins is an important milestone if a team is going to make it to post-season. With three losses already, if the Gorillas want to make into the post-season, every game will be crucial.

"Every game from here takes major importance," said Garber. "There is not a lot of room to have games like we just had."

Garber believes that his team has what it takes to get there.

"I think we can do it," said Garber. "Its going to take a lot of focus, teamwork and unity to get there."

The Gorillas return to action tomorrow afternoon (3 p.m.) at home against No. 18 Harvard.

UMass bats hot in sweep

By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR.
Collegian Staff

Pitching may win championships, but the offensive barrage by the University of Massachusetts baseball team this past weekend in Philadelphia, garnered the Minutemen a three- game sweep of the Temple Owls.

Massachusetts (15–11, 10–2 in the Atlantic 10), amidst a 10-game winning streak, now sits only percentage points behind conference leader West Virginia in the race for first place and the number one seed in the A–10 Tournament; the two are scheduled to meet for a three–game series here in Amherst next weekend.

The Minutemen scored in double–digits in all three contests against the Owls, including a 19–3 shellacking in the first game of the double–dip on Sunday. Atlantic 10 Pitcher of the Week Peter Ferrari was the benefactor, limiting Temple to five hits.

Ferrari, who has been the senior anchor of the Massachusetts staff this year, raised his record to 4–1, lowered his team–leading ERA to 2.11, and improved his chances at receiving his second–straight award.

Freshman left fielder Ryan Jette led the offense with four of Massachusetts' 24 hits. Jette, who is batting .417 with three home runs and 21 RBI, knocked in five runs and hit for the cycle in the first game of the series on Saturday, a 10–6 Minuteman victory.

Senior co–captain Justin Howard returned to his designated hitter's role, after starting for Jette in left field before the weekend, and once again tortured opposing pitching. Howard had three hits, along with right fielder Bill Knight. Senior first baseman Jeff January blasted his fourth HR of the season.

In Saturday's win, freshman Chad Sullivan notched his second win of the season in relief of closer Greg Dowd (two and one third innings pitched, one hit, two runs, four walks), who replaced starter Jay Murphy (six hits, four runs, two walks, six strikeouts) in the bottom of the seventh inning.

After six innings in the series finale on Sunday, Temple held a 9–3 advantage over Massachusetts, until Minuteman shortstop Greg LaRocca started a comeback. He hit his fourth and fifth HRs in back–to–back frames, sparking a 10– run rally and making a winner out of David Dart.

Sullivan closed out the game for his first career save.

Massachusetts returns to action today at Earl Lorden Field when the Minutemen host Central Connecticut State (3 p.m.). Speaking of offense, the last time the Blue Devils came to Amherst, the Minutemen tattooed CCSU, 32–11 — the most runs scored in school history. The game ended after seven innings when both coaches agreed to end the blowout.

The University of Massachusetts baseball team, behind an explosive offense, defeated the Temple Owls three times this weekend; 19–3, 10–6 and 15–14. The Minutemen extended their winning streak to 10 games.

Softball takes SBU

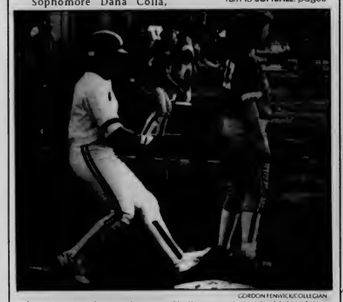
The University of Massachusetts softball team had its road trip to Olean, N.Y., cut short this weekend due to questions about the weather, but in their limited time upstate, the Minutewomen managed to run through St. Bonaventure and take two from the Bonnies before Sunday's contests with Robert Morris College were cancelled.

In Saturday's action, Massachusetts swept St. Bonaventure 11–3 and a mercy–rule invoked 14–3 to up its league record to 6–0.

Freshman Dani Ortega went the distance in the first game, giving up three runs on five hits with three strikeouts while raising her record to 5–5.

Trailing 2–1 after two, the Minutewomen went to work to salt away the game by scoring three runs in the third, five in the fourth and two more for good measure in the fifth.

Offensively, Massachusetts was led by senior co–captain Rachel Lawson who went three–for–four with a double and three runs batted in.



Sophomore Dana Colla, roughed up for three runs in the first inning, picked up her first win of the year in the nightcap, going the distance. She allowed just those three runs on five hits, and in 15 innings of work this season, Colla has allowed just two earned runs, sporting a nifty 0.93 ERA.

The Minutewomen again went to work in the middle frames, this time scoring two in the third, five in the fourth and four in the fifth, giving them a 14–3 lead after five, which led to the 10–run or "mercy rule."

All 25 Massachusetts runs came at the expense of St. Bonaventure's Missy Rust, who worked both ends of the double–dip and saw her team commit eight errors behind her, contributing to her 1–9 record. The Minutewomen, on the other hand, turned in another solid defensive performance, committing no errors in the twinbill.

Freshman Chris Martens sparkled once again at the plate, driving in five runs in the second game on a two–for–three performance, including a double.

Gorillas drop close one at Delaware

The No. 11 University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team lost a heartbreaker on the road in Newark, Del., falling 14–13 to the No. 16 Delaware Blue Hens.

The Gorillas made a run in the final quarter. Down three goals with just under a minute to play in the game, Eric Bailey scored twice, cutting Delaware's lead to one. But the Gorillas couldn't score again as their final shot was high and wide.

"We're just disappointed and frustrated right now," said Garber. "This was not our best effort. Maybe we were trying to hard to make things happen. Mentally we weren't at our best."

Despite not being at their best, the Gorillas were right in the game until the end, as Delaware never led by more than three goals.

Blue Hens' Ryan Kelly and Anthony DiMarzo gave the Gorilla defense trouble all afternoon. Kelly scored five goals and added one assist, while DiMarzo scored three goals and handed out four assists for the Blue Hens.

For the Gorillas, it was Wes Depp and Mike Valente leading the way, once again. Depp got his second straight hat trick, scoring three times and assisting on two more. Valente continued his consistency as well getting two goals and two assists in the losing battle.

Tom LoPresti who has been sharp all season, had an off day.

"Maybe he lost his focus a little bit," said Garber. "He was trying to hard to make things happen."

UMass got a boost from the returns of senior midfielder Greg Kline and Jeremy Murphy, both who had been sidelined with injuries.

"Greg could've gone against New Hampshire, but we didn't

Women's lax bows to Rutgers, Hofstra

By MIKE PINDER
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team dropped a pair of games this weekend, falling to Atlantic 10 rival Rutgers 21–11 on Saturday and losing a heartbreaker to Hofstra 15–14 on Sunday.

In Piscataway, N.J., UMass freshman attacker Sarah Goddard led the way tallying four goals, including three in the second half, in the loss. Also figuring in the scoring was Rachael Splaine (two goals in the second half), Stephanie Walsh, and Siabahn Murphy.

The Lady Knights bolted out to an early 4–0 lead before UMass fashioned a strong comeback to tie the game at four.

But Rutgers proved to be a little too much for the Minutewomen, taking control of the game at the half 8–5. Unfortunately for the Minutewomen, Rutgers would not relinquish this lead for the remainder of the contest.

UMass goaltender, Patricia Dibenedetto had a very busy day in net turning aside 24 Rutgers shots.

"They have an All–American (Heather Jones) on their team that was just phenominal," said Dibenedetto. "It was good for our defense and myself to play against her because it gave us a little more experience."

"Today we didn't play well as a team, but I think we learned alot offensively and defensively," said co–captain Splaine. "It was a good learning experience for us playing against an All–American like (Jones)."

On Sunday, a new UMass team showed up for their meeting with Hofstra.

"Hofstra was a similar team as Rutgers and from the experience we gained on Saturday, we played a better game with a much different outcome," said Splaine.

Splaine and Walsh had monstrous games against Hofstra, both scorching the nets for five goals apeice. Murphy also had a fabulous game, netting two goals.

"We played as a team and worked together today," said Dibenedetto. "The loss wasn't really a big issue, everyone was happy with our performance and I think we raised our game up to another level."

"We were down six goals and then we started playing as a team," said Splaine. "Our defense really picked it up starting with Patricia and Diana (Clemente)."

With the pair of tough losses, the Minutewomen fall to 3–7 on the year, which is a vast improvement from last year's 0– 7 campaign.

Women's track remains unbeaten

By CANDICE FLEMMING

The bad weather once again found the University of Massachusetts women's track team on Saturday afternoon, and this time it almost caused a cancellation. But after a hour–and–a–half delay, the meet got underway, with the Minutewomen continuing its winning ways by running its undefeated record to 9–0.

Massachusetts scored 90 points to UMass–Lowell's 69 and Holy Cross' 34. Hartford, competing in its first year as a varsity team, failed to score a point.

The Minutewomen were just 1 point ahead of Lowell after 12 events, but UMass then swept the shotput for 11 points to put Lowell away. Natalie Hart won the event with a throw of 39'2", Natalie Landry placed second with 36'7", Stephanie Townson came in third with 36'2 3/4" and Christie Martin completed the sweep with a throw of 35'3 1/2".

"The shot really gave us a boost," said Coach Julie LaFreniere. "We scored eleven points there so that was a biggie."

An equally strong field event for UMass was the discus, where three Minutewomen placed in the top four. Hart once again placed first with a throw of 138'10", while Martin placed second with 104'9 and Townson finished fourth with a throw of 98.3.

"Hart came through with two big wins for us," said LaFreniere.

In the hammer, three Minutewomen once again placed in the top four. And once again, Martin and Townson were among the three with Martin finishing second (138'11") and Townson finishing fourth (115'1"). Dhamana Shakespeare finished third with a throw of 127'.

Freshman Heather Brown continued her domination in the javelin, picking up another first place with a throw of 120'1" to remain undefeated in that event.

In the high jump and the triple jump, Janey Meeks was clearly a head above the rest. Meeks finished first in both events, jumping 5'3" in the high jump and 38.6' 3/4" in the triple jump. Meeks missed a try at 5'6" in the high jump, but according to LaFreniere, is "in the ballpark." Kim Downey placed second (16'3 1/2") in the long jump.

The 1500m was another event where UMass dominated. The Minutewomen swept the top three places with Kristin Diggs finishing first in 4:41.0 and the Liljeblad twins, Kim and Kelly, finishing second (4:45.4) and third (4:48.5), respectively.

"All three of those women ran great times, it was nice," said LaFreniere.

Diggs also placed second in the 800m with a time of 2:19.2 and also ran a leg in the 4x400m relay to have a "great day," according to LaFreniere.

Freshman Anya Forrest remained undefeated in the 100m hurdles with a time of 15.1 and placed second in the 200m with a season high time of 26.6. Fellow freshman Pasha Summers qualified for New Englands with her second place finish (12.7) in the 100m.

The freshman 4x100m relay team, consisting of Summers, Downey, Forrest and Erika Doyle, won again with a time of 49.2, to remain undefeated.

In the 3000m, Kim Liljeblad finished up her day with a first place finish in a time of 10:23.2, while Kristin Donaidson placed third with a time of 10:48.8.

"I thought Kim looked real good, I was very proud of her," said LaFreniere. "Donaidson looked much, much better. She almost took a minute off her time."

ChiSox beat BoSox

By ROB GLOSTER

BOSTON — As Tim Raines trotted to the dugout following his third homer of the game, Frank Thomas vowed he'd hit a homer just to make sure Raines didn't get too cocky.

"I told him I've got to hit a homer the last time up or else he would talk all day," said Thomas, who backed up his promise two batters later as the Chicago White Sox routed the Boston Red Sox 12-1 Monday.

Raines hit solo homers leading off the first and third innings and a two-run drive in the eighth. He also walked, singled and reached on an error in the ninth. Raines scored five runs and drove in four.

It was the first three-homer game of Raines' career. All three were hit to right field, helped by a 12 mph wind.

"I don't consider myself a home run hitter. But on a day like today, you just try to get one up in the air in the direction the wind is blowing," Raines said. "Out of the three I hit, I thought maybe one would have cleared the fence."

Raines has 10 of his 11 hits this season against Boston, including all five of his homers. He hit a pair of home runs against the Red Sox on April 8 at Chicago.

The power display by the White Sox, who also got a three-run tripie from Joey Cora, overshadowed Wilson Alvarez taking a no-hit bid into the sixth inning and winning his 11th consecutive decision.

Magic never used to be one to give up

• Bye Bye once again, Magic.

It took 16 games for Earvin "Magic" Johnson to head into retirement once again. It's not the first time Magic has quit the game. . .or the second. it's the third, and this go–around puzzles me. Magic cited a lack of discipline from the players, and said he wonders why his players aren't bothered by losses.

First of all, he has coached for just over a month. He's dealing with a bunch of mediocre players. He's been there for a span of 15 games. No one, not even Magic, can whip a team into top shape in a half a month, especially when it's the final month of a losing season.

Andrew Bryce

Whether Magic was successful or would have been a successful coach for the Lakers, we will never fully know. As for my own thoughts, Magic disappointed me. Magic did one thing that he did not do in his playing days nor in his battle with the HiV virus: he quit. He gave up.

"All I know is winning. That's all I want to know," Magic said after announcing he will quit effective April 24.

Well, Magic, you lost this one.

• If you get a chance, take a look at freshman Brendan Glass, an attackman for the University of Massachusetts men's lax team. He's already living up to his potential after just eight games.

• Will it be the pigskin or the roundball for Heisman Trophy winner and Florida State's Charlie Ward? It only depends on where the larger amount of green is.

• The Red Sox are a fun team.

• Congratulations to Channel 22 on yet another toolbox broadcast, that of the men's basketball banquet.

• I cannot get pumped up for a draft that has a defensive tackle (Dan Wilkinson) projected to be the first pick like this Sunday's NFL draft. Call me a cornball, but I always expect a quarterback or a running back to be the first pick.

• Buddy Ryan's a jerk.

• Ted Roof, the new defensive line coach for the Minutemen football team, has been said to be well–liked by the players after only weeks of being coach.

• Boston sports are having a pretty decent year. That annoyingly underachieving and overachieving Boston College hoop team made the Final Eight. The Bruins are in the playoffs, the Red Sox are atop the American League East, and the Patriots are getting set for the NFL Draft...oh, the Celtics are still playing?

• Speaking of the Celtics, why do I have this sick feeling that they are going to screw up in the '94 NBA Draft?

• Say what you want about Christian Laetnner, the guy was one of the best clutch players in college basketball history, and he is an excellent NBA player.

• Imagine being one of the Bruin players arriving at the Garden ready to practice, only to find Pearl Jam and its crew playing hoop on the parquet floor. The playoff–bound Bruins just packed their things, and travelled up north to get some practice time in, while

Deadlock ends

PRETORIA, South Africa — Zulu leader Mangosuthu Buthelezi broke a political deadlock Tuesday by agreeing to take part in next week's election, giving South Africa its first hope of peaceful balloting and an end to years of violence.

"This agreement is a leap forward for peace. ... A bright future awaits our land," African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela declared after a two-day summit culminated in the announcement.

Mandela, Buthelezi and President F.W. de Klerk struck a deal whereby Buthelezi's Inkatha Freedom Party will be added to the ballots for the April 26–28 elections. Buthelezi had threatened to boycott the vote unless he won guarantees of autonomy for his KwaZulu black homeland.

He also had demanded the election be delayed to give inkatha more campaign time, and a security crackdown across the Zulu stronghold of eastern Natal province be lifted.

Trading places

DAYTON, Ohio — Wracked by guilt for advising his son to plead guilty to vandalism, George Fay is willing to do the ultimate for the teen-ager now facing six strokes of the lash in Singapore: trade places with him.

"If you're going to penalize somebody, then penalize me, and I'll take his place," George Fay said this week. Wednesday is the deadline to appeal for a presidential pardon.

Fay's 18-year-old son, Michael Peter, was arrested in October and accused of 53 acts of vandalism, including spray-painting cars. In March, he pleaded guilty to reduced counts and was sentenced to six strokes of a split bamboo cane, four months in prison and a $2,230 fine.

The younger Fay said police coerced the confession from him by slapping and punching him, depriving him of sleep and threatening him. His attorney says an appeal for a pardon will be sent to President Ong Teng Cheong on Wednesday.

Former war criminal convicted

VERSAILLES, France — Paul Touvier, the first French citizen tried for crimes against humanity, was sentenced Wednesday to life in prison for ordering the execution of seven Jews during World War II.

The former militia chief of France's collaborationist Vichy government was convicted early Wednesday of complicity in crimes against humanity.

His conviction, after an emotional five-week trial, was a historic milestone for a nation that has struggled to come to terms with its wartime past.

Gender exclusion banned

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court, decrying "archaic and overbroad stereotypes" about men and women, Tuesday outlawed the practice of excluding people from juries just because of their sex. Such gender-based exclusions are as wrong as keeping people off juries based on their race, the court said in a 6-3 decision. "Gender, like race, is an unconstitutional proxy for juror competence and impartiality," Justice Harry A. Blackmun wrote for the court.

The decision further erodes lawyers' traditional use of peremptory, or automatic, challenges to remove potential jurors without having to explain why.

In a series of decisions since 1986, the court has barred lawyers from excluding black potential jurors because of their race. But lower courts had split over extending those rulings to exclusions based on gender.

Grads review candidates

By JUAN JOSE CHACON QUIROS
Collegian Staff

When it was time to speak, they did not deliver. That was the general feeling yesterday after the Graduate Student Senate held its Candidates Night at the Cape Cod Lounge.

Three candidates, Pierre la Liberte, Jim Dell and Ruth Matis, failed to attend the event. However, Ruth Matis was absent because of a death in the family.

A platform composed of Prasad Venugopal, candidate for president; Julia Johnson, candidate for vice–president; Ruth Mathis, candidate for treasurer; and Colin Cavell, candidate for executive officer, was the main force of this Candidate's night.

This coalition had the strength of running as a team with a common agenda; they called it "commonality of purpose, diversity of interests."

In their view, the main problems facing graduate students, underfunded programs and loss of teaching assistant positions, were spurred by the loss of state funding for the University. In addition they agreed that the administration has failed to address the needs of the ALANA (Asian, Latino, African and Native American) community.

The other candidate present at the event, Laura Hermer, a first year philosophy graduate, had to respond to arguments questioning her knowledge of the job. She proposed to build coalitions to enhance student services, increase advocacy and ameliorate legal services.

The speeches by the candidates were followed by questions from

BOG accused of slacking

Grad Senate claims BOG does not serve students

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: This is the first in a series of stories concerning the Board of Governor's.

The objective for Registered Student Organizations on the campus of the University of Massachusetts is to work toward improving the school. Problems with the Board of Governors have brought about accusations that the RSO is not doing their job.

The BOG has come in conflict with the Student Government Association, Graduate Student Senate, and several other RSO's in recent years.

This semester, the SGA confronted the problems and formed a committee to reconstruct the RSO. The plan was approved and finally passed last week.

The BOG will become the Student Union/ Campus Center Commission, an 18–member board which will allocate student office space, oversee vending, handle keys to student offices, and serve as an advocate for students to the administration of the Campus Center.

"The BOG has been having problems for several years," said Darrin Shaffer, a member of the GSS. "It's been consistent problems internal and external. In some ways something is finally being done."

"[BOG] occupied their time and spent student money on issues that were not central to the operation of the Campus Center," Shaffer said.

The BOG is an organization which represents student interests in matters concerning the Campus Center/ Student Union. Julia Johnson, treasurer of the GSS, contests that the BOG does not work for the students.

"The reason for having a BOG here is so that the students have some influence in the way that things are run in the building," Johnson said. "And every time a student has a problem the BOG tells us, 'tough.'"

> "The reason for having a BOG here is so that the students have some influence in the way that things are run in the building."
> – Julia Johnson GSS Treasurer

The GSS stopped funding the BOG in 1990 because of differences with the organization. According to Shaffer part of reason for the GSS stopped the funding was the BOG's elimination of two seats for the Lesbian Bisexual Gay Alliance from their board without proper reason.

"[BOG's] official line was that they were opposed to appointed seats," Shaffer said. "However at the same meeting where they eliminated the LBGA appointed seats, they created an appointed seat for the Stockbridge School."

Johnson also cited two examples of the problems which student organizations have had with the BOG.

'UMassive CPR day' should be a lifesaver

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

A senior University of Massachusetts student will teach people to save lives during "UMassive CPR Day," on Sunday, May 1 in the Campus Center Basement.

Biology major Christina Hernon is organizing an event through the UMass Fire and First Aid Unit to train 400 people to perform adult Cardiac Pulmonary Resuscitation. There will be four classes of 100 students. The classes will be held at 8 a.m., 9 a.m., 10 a.m. and 11 a.m. Each class takes four hours.

Pre–registration will be held on the Campus Center Concourse from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. all of this week and next week, ending on Friday, April 29. People are allowed to register their friends by providing their friend's name, address and social security number. The classes cost $5, as compared to the $36 cost of taking a class off–campus, Hernon said.

Hernon, the former co–president of the UMass Fire and First Aid Unit, said it is important for people to learn CPR because people who are choking or suffering from a heart attack need attention immediately in order to survive.

"When someone is choking or has a heart attack the most effective treatment is immediate," she said. "If something happens that causes someone to stop breathing you have four to six minutes to get oxygen to the brain, after that it is hard to resuscitate them."

The classes are made possible by 100 American Red Cross instructors and volunteers, Hernon said. But she also encouraged anyone certified to teach CPR to help out with the classes.

Hernon said she got the idea to teach CPR to a lot of people at once from the Houston Task Force, which trains 3,500 people in one day in the Houston Astrodome. She said that now that she is no longer in power in the UMass Fire and First Aid Unit, she now has the time to organize the same type of event but on a smaller scale.

UHS offers choices for women

By VANESSA AMIN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Health Services offers women who may be pregnant a chance to take a pregnancy test, obtain counseling, and if applicable, a referral to the nearest clinic to receive an abortion.

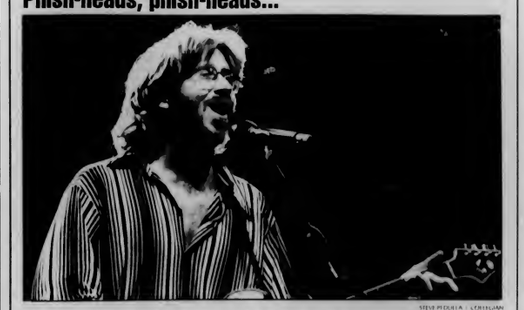
According to Dr. Daniel Clapp, the coordinator of Women's Health Care for the University Health Services, a woman who has received a positive result from a pregnancy test also has access to a gynecological exam. This woman can wait to take the exam, Clapp said, however, its very important the exam is done.

A pregnant woman, Clapp said, who either wants to keep the pregnancy or have an abortion needs to take a blood test. The test is important to make sure there is no shortage of blood and if the blood contains any antibodies to cause problems to the pregnancy, Clapp said.

At this point, the pregnant woman can obtain counseling to decide for herself if she wants to keep the pregnancy or terminate it, Clapp said. The counseling is impartial and gives women an opportunity to ask questions and to know what to expect.

"This is a time when a woman needs to think of her priorities and think of her own, individual philosophy," Clapp said.

According to Clapp, UHS does not perform abortions, however, a woman will be referred to a clinic that does. If a woman does decide to have an abortion, the procedure takes approximately three to four minutes. The woman does not go under general anesthesia because abortions are mostly done in clinics, Clapp said. Sometimes a woman can obtain an injection around the uterus to ease the pain.



According to Clapp, a "straw like tube" is entered into the uterus through the cervix and a vacuum goes through the tube to empty out the pregnancy tissue, Clapp said. The woman, at this point, will experience a cramping response which lasts only a couple of minutes.

"The pain is like having one of the worst menstrual cramps a woman would ever experience," Clapp said.

After the abortion procedure, counseling is available to the woman if she needs it, he said.

"If abortion became illegal, there would be more unsafe abortions which is hazardous and unhealthy for women," Clapp said. "I do my best to promote health and safety for all women."

Kindness' Group Honors UM grad

By GAYLE DOUGHERTY
Collegian Correspondent

Michele Cocuzzo was loved greatly by her colleagues and friends. That is why when she died of cancer on June 17, 1987, they decided to create the Human Kindness Project in her memory.

Cocuzzo graduated from the University of Massachusetts in 1978 with a bachelor of arts degree through the Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration program. She later filled several positions in the Northeast/Sylvan Residential Area, as a resident director, cluster coordinator and area coordinator.

Cocuzzo's former colleagues have described her as an ambitious and caring woman.

"She loved UMass, her work and us," said Mary Custard, a former RD and area residential director in the Northeast/Sylvan cluster. Custard is now the tutorial program coordinator for the Collegiate Community for Education of Black and Other Minority Students (CCEBMS). She is also pursuing her doctorate in multicultural education.

After Cocuzzo's death her co–workers wanted to keep her memory alive.

"There was talk of dedicating a hall, lounge, building or wing to Michele... but we felt it should not be a memorial as much as something that she wanted to be a part of," said Ann Miller, coordinator of Residential Education in 1986.

The Michele Cocuzzo Human Kindness Project was the result.

The project was more appropriate than a concrete memorial because Cocuzzo influenced so many people's lives, said her friends and colleagues.

Custard and Cocuzzo first met when Cocuzzo hired her as the ARD. "Michele was the essence of human kindness. She was the most influential person in my life," she said.

"She would not let me be complacent. Whenever I reached one of my goals, there were always more to obtain."

Custard credits Cocuzzo for helping her be more sensitive to others and gain self–confidence. "[Michele] was my supervisor, but more than that she was my mentor... my friend," Custard said.

The Human Kindness Project is currently housed in Lewis Residential Hall but is open to any UMass student. Locating the program's headquarters in a particular dorm was considered necessary for a "living, learning community where kindness, compassion and empathy are foremost," according to the project's founders and members.

The purpose of the project is to "illustrate what kindness would look like. . . and to help students understand how the world could be," Miller said.

A large portion of the project's activities includes community service. Volunteers spend a few hours a week helping out at day care programs, soup kitchens, churches and nursing homes. A number of food and clothing drives have been held also. In 1989 the project dedicated November as Human Kindness month.

The Annual Lecture and Awards Ceremony is the cornerstone of the organizations activities. This function honors individuals who possess "exceptional and consistent principles of kindness." Members of the project and the community who display these characteristics are asked to speak at

Students express election fears

By CATHY CHANG

As the South African election nears, people around the world wait apprehensively for the fateful day's events and the days to follow. Last night in Northampton, five South African students discussed their feelings and expectations about the election at Smith College, a world away from the turmoil of their homeland.

"After April 28, not any African child will have to suffer through the pain we endured," said Heather Sonn, who will be voting next week.

Sonn said she and others had expectations that the results will improve the life of non-whites in South Africa, who have been oppressed under apartheid and racist constraints since the 17th century.

One of the most immediate changes Tandi Njobe said she expects the new government to make was improvement of education for Africans, since many black schools have been abandoned and left to fall apart since the mid-80s.

"It should be able to provide children with materials to learn," she said.

However, the group agreed that not all changes will be easy. Land redistribution will be a tricky task, with many compromises on both sides, Nolwandle Mgoqi said. Another dilemma will be social reform, with more equality in pay and status for Blacks and Asians.

The women expressed dismay that the American press has focused only on the violence and conflict between the parties. Despite the positive changes in South Africa in the past ten years, including Nelson Mandela's release, Mgoqi said, "All their work is reduced to this [sensationalism]."

Sonn said she has mixed feelings about the changes the election may bring.

"It bothers me," she said. "I'll have a hard time adjusting to living next to white people."

Mgoqi said this is something Africans will have to deal with: "It's not easy to forget, but you can forgive."

the ceremony and often receive awards for their services.

Recently the program's membership has declined. Under the guidance of the new housing director, Chika Nnamani, Custard said she hopes to see the program thrive again. "I don't want people to forget Michele," she said.

This year Andrew Isaac, a sophomore mechanical engineer major and RA for fourth floor Lewis, has been named director of the program and plans to revive the project. This semester the program hopes to complete several volunteer activities. Potential clients include the Valley Community Development Corporation in Northampton, Community Option in Belchertown, the Helen Mitchell House in Amherst, and the United Way.

Graduate Student Organization (GSO) had to be moved from their location in the Campus Center to another room by the BOG. According to Johnson, organizations cannot move their own equipment because it is in violation of union rules.

"The stuff was moved out of the room and left in the hall for days," Johnson said. "The Committee's things were taken and the BOG wouldn't take responsibility."

The GSS gave more money to the PSC for next academic years' budget, because they did not have the money to compensate for the stolen items according to Johnson.

The Graduate Women's Network also had problems with the BOG when phones were stolen from their office and BOG refused to pay to replace them. The problem was that the GWN's office was left unlocked.

"[GSS] talked to the BOG and told them that they

the audience. "There's definitely a divide in the graduate student community," said Tris Carpenter from the labor studies program.

For president, Venugopal said, "student power lies here on campus ... in the Graduate Lounge and the Blue Wall."

The elections will begin on Tuesday April 26, following the general meeting, and will go on until April

Dinner serves closeness

By MICHAEL F. GUTHRIE
Collegian Correspondent

In order to foster better relations between the faculty and students, a Faculty/Student dinner was held in the Hampshire Dining Commons.

"The idea is to give both students and faculty the opportunity to interact and exchange their own unique experiences outside of the classroom," said Simoneel Davierwalla, an assistant resident director at John Quincy Adams Residence Hall and supervisor of the Academic Support Committee, which organized the event.

JQA residents who made the dean's list for the fall semester were asked to nominate professors for the dining in festivities and the committee sent out their invitations.

The dinner party consisted of 23 faculty members, dean's list students and JQA staff. "Years ago we used to be Faculty Resident Advisors and every floor down here in Southwest used to have one," said Professor Gary Aho of the English Department. "We would come down here to eat with the students five or six times a semester, but things changed. It's nice to see that things turning around and the rift closing again."

"This is a really good idea and it's nice to have the opportunity to a side of the faculty from outside of the classroom," Kathleen Egan, Aho's student and his sponsor for the event, said.

"It is nice to get the opportunity to talk to students outside of one's department because I was surprised to see how some students were so shy about talking with professors," said Professor B. Mabias, a professor in the comparative literature department.

"We hope to extend this to more of the faculty and make it a better program next year. The idea is great and we want to share the wealth with a broader group of people across campus," Davierwalla said.

"I thought that the program went very well. After a brief period of introductions, the small talk and conversation really took off. I think it was a real success," Erika Beatrice, the Down Under Room Coordinator, said.

Beatrice said the Down Under Room is a resource set up for Resident Assistant floor programs and give residents the opportunity to sit and eat dinner together as a large group.

She said the Faculty/Student Dinner was a good idea and she would like to see it continue in the future.

"We do want to thank the Dean of Students Office and the Dining Commons for co-sponsoring the program and making it such a success," Davierwalla said.

The dinner was held at 6 p.m. Thursday, April 14 in the Hampshire Dining Commons' "Down Under Room."

Former prof. advises PBS

Author helps in the creation of Holocaust documentary

By CRAIG O'CONNOR
Collegian Correspondent

In an effort to not only save the lives of thousands of prisoners, President Roosevelt signed Executive Order 9417 which created the War Refugee Board.

This order staved off a political crisis that would expose the State Department's lack of response to the horrors emanating from the Nazi effort towards a Final Solution, according to David Wyman, a former professor of history at the University of Massachusetts.

> "We need the president to give leadership. From the way we are handling the events inthe former Yugoslavia I wonder if we have learned anything."
> — David Wyman

Wyman is the author of a book which focuses on the indifference of America to the plight of the Jewish people in the years leading up to and including World War II. He served as academic advisor to the recently aired PBS movie "America and the Holocaust–Deceit and Indifference," which examines the attitudes and actions in America until the War Refugee Board was established.

The movie follows the life of Kurt Klein, a 17–year–old refugee from Hitler's Germany in 1937, and his attempt to overcome the stalling process of the State Department and bring his parents to America to escape persecution.

This movie highlights the fact that in America during these years anti–Semitism was on the rise and this country failed to provide a safe haven to a people in need. The chief argument from the State Department was that allowing all these immigrants from Germany in had caused unemployment.

Representative Martin Dies is shown in a newsreel saying, "And if we refused admission to the 16,5000,000 foreign– born in our midst, there would be no serious unemployment to harass us."

By 1941, after over half a million Jews had already been murdered, the Nazi's idea of a Final Solution was discovered by the State Department through the information of a Jewish activist in Geneva named Gerhart Riegner, but little was done and the information was actively suppressed as "a wild rumor inspired by Jewish fears."

"The State Department was actively blocking information about the genocide. Roosevelt refused to focus on the issue. The American churches were largely silent . . . the press had little to say — and buried that little on the inner pages. So it fell to Jewish activists to bring the information to the public," Wyman said.

"In the end," he said, "the War Refugee Board played a vital role in saving the lives of 200,000 Jews . . . but the number is terribly small compared to the total of six million killed. The great shame is that if Roosevelt had created the Board a year earlier it could have saved tens of thousands, even hundreds of thousands more — and in the process have rescued the conscience of the nation."

Wyman's books include Paper Walls: America and the Refugee Crisis, 1938–1941 and The Abandonment of the Jews: America and the Holocaust 1941–1945, the latter of which won several prizes, was a New York Times best seller and was named one of the eleven "Best Books of 1985" by the Times.

Wyman said he sees in the Holocaust something of a criticism of today and the situation in Bosnia. He said he thinks there is little response to Bosnia by the press, by the State Department and by the American public.

"We need the president to give leadership," he said. "From the way we are handling the events in the former Yugoslavia I wonder if we have learned anything."

He supports the actions of Rep. John W. Olver, who has circulated a letter demanding action by Clinton and outlining ideas as to what can be done.

Wyman said he was upset at the way the press only covered the biggest events in Bosnia and puts little pressure on Clinton to take a firm stand. He said this is similar to the way the press ignored the first signs of the Holocaust.

Letters to the editor are encouraged and will be printed on a space-available basis. All submissions must be typed, kept to a maximum of 400 words, and should include the writer's name, address, year and major, as well as a phone number for verification purposes. The Collegian reserves the right to edit submissions for grammar, clarity and length. Persons wishing to submit guest columns should contact the Editorial/Opinion editor in advance. The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily represent those of the Collegian. Unsigned editorials reflect the majority opinion of the Editorial Board. Our readers are entitled to one free copy of the Collegian each day; additional copies are available at a cost of $10 each.

Listen to both sides of the issue

The issue:
The pro–life insert in today's Collegian has been attacked by members of the campus community who do not agree with its contents.

Our opinion:
A responsible newspaper does not shy away from controversial subject matter, but presents issues to its readers in order to encourage debate.

The supplement which is being distributed with today's Collegian presents the abortion issue from the point of view of the pro–life movement. The insert is an advertisement paid for by the Human Life Alliance of Minnesota which is solely responsible for its editorial content.

The fact that this advertisement was accepted should in no way be construed as an endorsement of its contents by the Collegian or its executive board.

Some members of the campus community opposed to the views expressed in the supplement feel that it was irresponsible of the Collegian to accept this advertisement.

However, as the daily student newspaper at the University of Massachusetts, it is our responsibility to expose the campus community to all sides of controversial issues.

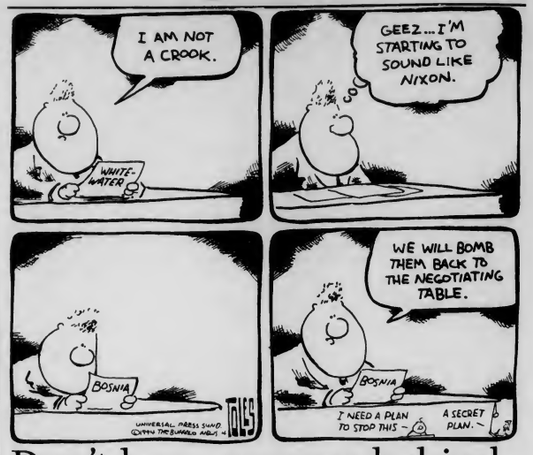
Abortion is a sensitive subject, but one that merits serious debate. There is no better place for that debate to take place than on the campus of an institution which is dedicated to the pursuit of knowledge and the exchange of ideas.

On the UMass campus, which we claim values diversity so highly, there must certainly be room for more than one point of view, even on issues as emotionally– charged as abortion.

Everyone has the right to their own opinion — that includes the pro–choice members of our community who choose to protest the views expressed in the insert, as well as the group which produced the insert in the first place.

It is not the Collegian's role to take sides in this debate. Neither is it our role to make decisions about what people should or should not be allowed to read.

Rather, we have an obligation to ensure that our readers are exposed to all sides of an issue so that they might be able to make informed decisions for themselves.



There will always be some ideas that we might prefer not to hear, but ignoring an opinion or a point of view which we find offensive will not make it go away.

* * * * *

The Collegian anticipates that, as a result of the decision to accept this advertisement and the ensuing protests, there will be an intense campuswide debate on the issue of abortion. Students, faculty and community members are encouraged to register their opinions on the issue of abortion by submitting letters to the editor.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian's executive board.

Opinion

Don't leave women behind

Marni E. Helfner

Women belong in non–traditional roles, because roles shouldn't be classified as non–traditional or traditional. Women can do anything and everything that a man does with the exception of donating sperm.

I've known a lot of women who have held roles that were considered as non–traditional. I've done everything from heavy lifting to delivering newspapers, from working crew in a road–house theater to supervising a staff. All these roles are usually classified and narrowed down to men–only. People are surprised when they hear that I've done those things for a living but, hey, you do what you have to get by, and besides, I enjoyed it.

My friend Caren is also experiencing that surprise. She is a sports journalist, and she is fighting her way into the field. As the daughter of a sports journalist, I understand how closed off the field is and, as matter of fact, when I made the decision to work in the journalism field, my father pulled me aside and asked me to stay away from sports reporting.

He told me that, if I went into sports journalism, I would face terrible obstacles and horrendous discrimination. I would be the object of leers and insults, relegated to the lousy stories like croquet and archery, and would never see major league professional sports. I would be denied access to good stories and the top athletes purely because of my gender.

Caren is learning to deal with all those things as well as something I never even thought of. Caren often has to make the tough decision as to which story she will cover — I mean, she might have the choice to cover either a men's baseball game or cover a women's softball game. That means that she can cover the men's story and have her story read by more people and gain name recognition, or she can cover the women's story and bring badly needed recognition to women's sports.

Caren has to decide what is best for her, and what's best for women; it's a tough decision.

Another field in which women are often few and far in between is engineering. Scholarships abound for women, but there are very few women in the field. Recruitment is heavy, and the applicants are few. But that doesn't mean that sexism doesn't come into play on the job. Jobs for female engineers are few and far between. I just heard a story about an engineer who mistook a female engineering student for a secretary for another student.

Women fall into the "non–traditional" role whenever they step outside the home, and men whenever they step inside the home. I feel just as bad for men who stay at home and take care of their children. They are often ridiculed and called feminine (as if that was a bad thing), told that they can't find a real job, and laughed at. My father is a single parent, he raises my brother and me as a single parent, and he works harder than anyone else I know. He is kind and nurturing, and no one calls him feminine.

For a reality check, there are women out there doing blue– collar work as well. My friend Gail's mom is a garbage collector, and she likes her job. I know a college student who works for a painting company as a manager and paints houses, does estimates, and supervises several other workers. She is one of the most qualified people for the job. Caitlin, another friend, worked for Housing Services this summer doing groundwork. Yes, she mowed lawns for a living, and worked all day in the hot summer sun.

I know for myself there is nothing more rewarding than coming home from a hard day's work sweaty and disgusting. I know I've accomplished something if I am tired and exhausted at the end of the day.

So what am I trying to say here? Women can do anything they set their minds to, but unfortunately they have to deal with the problems that arise when change occurs within the system.

Marni E. Helfner is a Collegian columnist.

I'd rather not talk about it

There are things that I, like anybody else, would just rather leave untold. Whether it's stemming from regret, embarrassment or guilt, I sometimes just want to leave the topic alone.

But since you are so curious what it is that I'm talking about, I'll explain it to you.

Andrew Bryce

I'd rather not talk about tripping up the stairs a couple of weeks ago — If I'm not falling down the stairs, I'm stumbling up them. Why me, though? Probably because a) I had just found out about a 10–page report that was due the very next day and I couldn't get much more frustrated, b) I had a full cup of coffee in my hand, and c) there were a bunch of girls walking behind me.

Just for the record, I ended up finishing the report on time the next day, the coffee spilled all over my hand and the girls managed to ask me if I was alright between the laughter.

Hey, how about those Red Sox?

I'd rather not talk about the thing I saw in the toilet this weekend — I know I've mentioned this before in my column, but I just can't seem to fathom why someone would leave a rack in the john. It's disgusting to think that someone can just feel no shame for leaving one without flushing. It's pretty tough to actually catch someone doing it, so I'm not going to try.

I'd rather not talk about my addiction to "Beverly Hills 90210" — It's painful. I sit there for an hour, mesmerized by an unrealistic bunch of 30–year–olds playing college freshmen who, after being best friends in high school, all go to the same college. Pathetic.

By the way, make sure you come over before 8 p.m. tonight; I don't want to have to sign you in.

I'd rather not talk about not doing laundry since Spring Break week. — Who once said, "I wear 'em until I can smell 'em?" Oh wait a minute, I think I did. Oh, get that disgusted look off your face, I'm just kidding around.

I'd rather not talk about my friend who, as a freshman on the high school swim team, was suplexed off the diving board by a couple of seniors — Chris quit as soon as he reached the surface of the water. What was next, a piledriver? A DDT? A camel clutch? I shudder to think.

I'd rather not talk about how one of the DC ladies went to grab the rest of the pickles out of the jar with her bare hands — My friends Jenn and Jess witnessed this. I thought Jenn was blowing it all out of proportion, because the next time we ate at the DC, she only got one piece of pita bread and a glass of lemonade.

I told her to stop having a hissy and take one of my rolls. Not a good idea, because the roll had a hair in it.

I'd rather not talk about my friend who use to love stepping in dog poop — I don't remember who it was, or if it was just part of one of my crazy dreams, but I can recall the person liking the way the poop feit when it squished through their toes. Do I really have to go any further about this one? I would really rather not talk about this one.

I'd rather not talk about the obscene phone message I received yesterday — I'd also rather not talk about how much I enjoyed it.

I'd rather not talk about the socks that I have on right now — The right one has a damn hole in it, and the left one doesn't match the right one. Not to mention both of them came out of the hamper. Oh, times are getting tough.

I'd rather not talk in today's column space anymore — Alright, alright, enough of the applause.

Remembering the Armenian Genocide

To the editor:

Imagine this scenario: since the end of World War II, both Germanies have denied that the Holocaust occurred and evaded responsibility for it. Under political pressure from the Germanies, most other nations in the world have joined them in denying the Holocaust. As a result, not only have the perpetrators of the Holocaust never been brought to justice, the deaths of six million people have been ignored and then forgotten by the world community.

Now consider the case of the Armenian Genocide. In the years immediately before World War I, a political group similiar to the Nazis in its policies against racial and religious minorities came to power in the Ottoman Empire.

Its leadership decided to eliminate, once and for all, the Armenian minority — then two million strong — whom Turkish leaders, soldiers and individuals had been persecuting and massacring in relatively small numbers for many centuries. During the next two years, regular and irregular Turkish soldiers murdered 1.5 million Armenian children, women and men.

What is more, every Turkish government in power since World War I has denied that the Armenian Genocide occurred, and has activeiy suppressed efforts by Armenian survivors and their progeny to call attention to this crime against humanity.

Despite the great amount of documentary evidence corroborating the testimonies of Armenian survivors and foreign eyewitnesses (such as Henry Morgenthau, American ambassador to the Ottoman Empire during the Genocide), the world community, has been swayed by Turkish pressure to ignore the Armenian question and accept Turkey's claim that no genocide of Armenians ever took place.

The Turks were so successful in eradicating the Armenians and quelling the world community's initial outrage at their actions that Hitler took the Turks as the model for his campaigns against civilian populations. Acknowledging this on August 22, 1939, he remarked to his general staff:

"Our strength consists of our speed and brutality . . . I have placed my death–head formations in readiness . . . with orders . . . to send death mercilessly and without compassion men, women and children of Polish derivation and language . . . who, after all, speaks today of the annihilation of the Armenians?"

The Turkish governments since World War I have been so successful in denying the Genocide and in applying political pressure to other nations to do the same that, for most non– Armenians the Genocide becomes real only when it is compared to the Holocaust or some other well–known tragedy.

April 24, 1915, is the day on which the Turks began the first major massacres of the Armenian Genocide. On every April 24th since World War I, Armenians have mourned the deaths of 1.5 million of their people. We have too often mourned alone.

Join us in answering Hitler. Who still remembers the extermination of the Armenians? We remember.

Sexual healing, '90s style

•He said: Spring is the time for getting together

By CUTTER GARCIA
Collegian Stud

"Spring is a time of renewal. A time when things long buried in the deep, dank, dungeons of the earth once again burst forth with cataclysmic fury to begin the wonderous journey towards fruition! Birds begin to sing! Flowers bloom rapturously! And the air in Amherst becomes filled with the pungent aroma of young people in love!"

Oh Jesus, I think I'm going to puke. Spring time in Amherst looks nothing like that and I can pretty much assure you that what you're smelling isn't love, it's cow crap floating over from Hadley in a big brown cloud.

Spring time at UMass is about one thing and one thing only — Sex. Yeah, that's right, we're finally going to talk about it. Sex. Doing the nasty. Bumping ugliies. Boinking. Screwing. Fu – weil, you get the picture.

–So here for you now is: Cutter's big list of Important Things You Should Know About Sex And How To Do It.

•The Kiss is Key. I sat around Delano's the other night and spoke to a group of three women who were more than willing to share their sexual opinions with me. (Let's give them a code name — we'll call them, "The babes".) They all agreed that the kiss was the important thing and the most powerful lure. One babe said, "The kiss is key. If it's a good kiss then the clothes just come right off and all the morals go right out the window." Another said, "If he kisses well chances are good that we'll want to boink."

(Cutter Garcia is a great kisser)

•Chicks dig oral Sex. I only heard two negative comments about this topic from the babes. One was that they hate it when a guy is forceful. "As soon as a guy touches your head it's over!" And the other concerned an aversion to the flavor of semen which was described as having a taste "a lot like a fish milkshake."

Gack!

But overall the babes seemed to love it. Two of them were from New Jersey and these are direct quotes from them. One said, "New Jersey girls love to [perform oral sex]. It really turns me on." And the other one said, "It's a powerful feeling. You know you're good if you can make a guy [achieve orgasm]."

Sweet Jesus, I'm moving to Jersey.

•Women enjoy confidence. Babes love it when a guy is strong and sure of himself. They want to know that they're with a manly man and not some girlie boy who's awkward between the sheets. Next time you're with a lass and are getting ready for a little ouch on the couch, make sure you know what you're

•She said: respect rules in the tricky game of sex

By EMILY MARINO
Collegian Staff

Debating the topic of sex with him was inevitable. Any full–fledged battle of the sexes is simply incomplete without an in–depth discussion about the dirty deed, itself.

There are a number of things that I could say about boys and sex — things that we have all heard before. Most of us have witnessed the tendency for women to liken men to various animal species who regard sex with much the same thoughtful grace that, say, two dogs in heat do.

Sex, however, is a very individual thing. Of course there will always be guys who feel that getting laid is the true mark of a real man. These are the ever–competitive studs who play the game of sex to tally macho points or add notches to their belts.

If other games felt half as good to play, these guys would undoubtedly spend much less time trying to lure lovers between the sheets, and more time rolling dice, for example. But sex does feel good so the dice are out, though the object of the boys' real game is equally simple: put my thing in the hole.

Women, in many situations, are not much more noble in their pursuit of physical intimacy; they are merely held more accountable to their actions by society. There is, of course, the prude/slut catch 22; women who hesitate or refuse to have sex are the former, while women who enjoy sex and are not shy about pursuing it are the latter.

Sexual liberation for women did not entail only the burning of the bra. Thanks to technological advances in birth control (specifically, the pill), women were able to separate the procreative utility of having sex from the pleasure of the act, and could start enjoying it.

Sexual mores, too, changed with time. Somewhere between Holly Hobbie and the Femme Fatale, women found a place in society where they could be comfortable with their sexuality, and confident enough to be assertive in pursuing sexual relations on their terms. Almost.

For men and women alike, sex is a strange, complicated thing. Though the actual act isn't all that complex (although I'm sure he has some interesting suggestions to liven up anyone's sex life; at least from having spent an afternoon or two in a locker room, or in the adult section of the video store), the politics behind, and rules around having sex are enough to make one's head spin (don't say it, Garcia).

Cops and Robbersons caps off a disastrous year for Chevy Chase

By ED HUMPHRIES
Collegian Staff

What a year for Chevy Chase. First his abysmal talk show is sent the way of Cavett and Sajak, then he's lampooned for his career pratfall in a series of Doritos ads. Still, there's always Tinseltown salvation for the former Not Ready for Primetime Player, if only his sense of film choices were not stuck in a rut of arrested development.

His latest, Cops and Robbersons, suffers straight out from a truly uninspired premise. This is the type of film where board room suits sat around a table spouting, "Okay, there's this harried house husband and this tough as nails cop with a penchant for one–armed pushups. When a criminal moves in next door, the cop seeks the husband for surveillance cover. The rest is madcap hilarity . . . with a touch of heart, of course."

Chase stars as Norman Robberson (Cops and Johnsons doesn't have quite the same effect), a suburban "Joe" feeling the strain at work and in the home, where he's saddled with an over–sympathetic wife (Dianne Weist), a feisty teenaged son (Jason James Richter) and a younger son under delusions of "vampirism."

When stock bad guy Robert Davi moves in next door, veteran cop Jack Palance comes seeking the Robberson household for stakeout duty. Chase wants a piece of the action, and does his best to come up with one "madcap scheme" after another to join Palance's investigation.

Cops fails simply because it setties for high concept over jokes. Director Michael Ritchie expects his carefully orchestrated Chase pratfalls to carry the film and then betrays his inane silliness by struggling to wrap his film in shoddy sentimentality, allowing Chase and familiy to feel their strangled fraternal bonds begin to loosen once the bad guy is put away.

The entire film plays like a stock piece of formula, perhaps one you wished Orion Pictures had owned (at least it would have stayed shelved for a few years.) There isn't a character here that hasn't been seen before, from Chase's bumbling husband (Clark Griswald?) to Palance's grizzied detective (take your pick.) It seems pithy to argue a point in such a throw–away of a film, but why does Palance's detective have to warm to Chase's distractions? Little piot detours like that can make formula breathe a little easier.

Still Cops and Robbersons is not a film worth worrying over. A few weeks and it's gone. Too bad "comedy this droll" can't be sentenced to the same morose incarceration that it so freely hands down to its audience. D (Hampshire Six)

COURTESY STEVE SCHAPIRO/TRISTAR PICTURES

Fay Masterson, Miko Hughes, Chevy Chase, Jack Palance, Dianne Wiest and Jason James Richter star in Cops and Robbersons, a new comedy that, according to this review, isn't very funny.

The Pub brings it all together

ARAM COMJEAN / COLLEGIAN

COLLEGIAN Editors' Pick

This year, for the first time, the Collegian has chosen its favorite local restaurant. Although the Valley is home to an exceptional number of quality eateries, our staff felt that the Pub exemplifies the ideal standards for excellence in dining out.

Our staff had a difficult choice, and based its decision upon affordability, atmosphere, food quality, location and service. We sent a team of editors to the Pub to capture the dining out experience, and here is why we selected this North Pleasant Street establishment as the finest in its class.

Emily Marino, Arts & Living Editor: I remember visiting UMass as a high school senior with my dad, who was most impressed with my choice to attend the University because, believe it or not, it was conveniently located just down the road from one of his favorite restaurants from his own college days. Yep, that beloved eatery was the Pub.

I have always liked the Pub for a number of reasons, including its jovial atmosphere and world class burgers. On this occasion, I sampled a savory Caesar salad with grilled chicken. The salad was chock full of Parmesan cheese, bacon, mushrooms, flavored bread crumbs, Caesar dressing and, of course, chicken. I was most impressed by the fact that the chicken was already sliced into small pieces, rather than served as a whole breast, which is usually a hassle to slice atop a bed of lettuce. The service was great as was the atmosphere, and though we ate indoors, the outdoor patio was filled with pleasant conversation and the promise of happy summer dining.

Brian Babineau, Music Associate: I'm not accustomed to writing restaurant reviews, and my comments on any meal usually consist of "Mmmmm, I'm really full." However the Pub actually provided us with a great meal that was reasonably priced, and inspired me to apply more words than "food good" to our dining experience. The chicken stir– fry I had was nicely spiced with teryaki and ginger. There were monstrous pieces of chicken and vegetables laid across a huge bed of rice. The serving was large, and even though I am a fairly big and typically hungry guy, I was full before I was done. A nice garden salad preceded the dinner. A darn good meal for $8.95, if I do say so myself.

The service was prompt, and our waiter Matt was friendly and accommodating (providing a member of our party with a plateful of pickles on request), even posing so our photographer could take a snapshot. There were nine members of our dining expedition, but the food still came out speedily. Despite my apparent lack of social skills for the evening, it was an all around pleasurable restaurant experience. In other words, food good.

Caleb Cochran, Arts & Living Associate: For my meal at the Pub, I chose an appetizer of cheese garlic bread, the Tex–Mex chicken sandwich, and a Rolling Rock (yes, I'm 21). My stop at the Pub marked the end of a long day, and I was starving by the time I took my seat. After inhaling the cheese garlic bread, a delightful appetizer, my Tex–Mex chicken sandwich arrived with a side order of fries. Both the sandwich and the fries were delicious. Our waiter, Matt, provided patient and courteous service throughout the evening. My visit to the Pub with the Collegian crew was, not surprisingly, another successful dining experience at the Amherst establishment.

Jon Lupo, Arts & Living Associate: It could be the dizzying array of choices from the thick menu or the friendly, jovial attitude of the wait staff that makes the Pub one of the best, most versatile restaurants in the area. But I'll be honest: it's the food. From sizzling stir–fry to delectable salads, the Pub is that one rare place where everything on the menu tastes good.

On the warm, sun–drenched early evening I went to the Pub, I decided on a meal of golden chicken tenders and a side–order of the Pub's one–of–a–kind cross–cut french fries. Hardening one's arteries has never been so much fun — and so tasty.

By the time our prompt and courteous waiter (who wanted to be known as Matty P, but I thought if I obliged he would start rapping, or worse yet, start scat singing) had taken my empty plate, all my senses were satiated. You see, the Pub, unlike other restaurants, can be a multi–media event. If you're lucky, you get to see that talented songstress Settie perform. But I prefer to gawk at all the couples on their first dates and ponder some of life's biggest questions: why do people put themselves through the anachronistic, humiliating experience of dating, and why am I hardly ever one of them?

So the Pub is not only a great place to eat (and a great date spot (with our without a date) at a reasonable price. Besides, it's the best place to bring your parents and your insufferably finicky little brother (you know, the one with the pointed head). There's something on the menu to please even him.

Christina Orwicz, Arts and Living Associate: I learned four years ago that the Pub was a cool place to eat. But the best discovery I ever made there was their burgers. Being raised on mom's homemade, barely–fit–in–your–mouth, juicy, on–the–grill patties, I've learned to appreciate what I would term real burgers, and the Pub makes them closest to what reminds me of home.

ARAM COMJEAN / COLLEGIAN

Not in the mood for the usual Mexican fare, which I have been addicted to ever since I tried the Pub's Fajitas, I opted for the one sure thing that will satisfy a meat lover. Needless to say I had one of these beef delicacies this past Friday night.

After going through the nearly memorized "book" called the menu, I had made the decision to go in this grilled beef direction, then came the choice of what kind. Ordering a burger at the Pub takes careful honing of your tastebuds: do they feel like trying an Italian style mozzarella, a blue cheese, or just a plain Excaliburg? I have sampled most of the variety of patty choices and decided to go with a Californian, something new.

I was in the mood for guacamole, veggies, and a burger, not to mention the criss–cross fries and real pickle they give you. The Pub, as usual, delivered. Even though I asked for the meal without the Monterey Jack cheese, sour cream, and mayo, I was definitely pleased and can add a new style of beef patty to the list of my faves at this restaurant.

Darienne J. Hosley, Managing Editor: I went for a Chicken Enchilada with rice and re–fried beans, for the college student price of $6.25. The spicy level was good, requiring one huge glass of ice water followed by an iced coffee. There was more food than I could handle, but I still found myself wishing for a side of bread or salad like all my friends with dinner entrees.

Tracy Monahan, News Editor: Well, I asked for a teriyaki steak sandwich and received an open–faced steak sandwich, but it was really good nonetheless. It came with the Pub's special waffle fries, which are always good. I also got a plate of pickles from our waiter, Matty P.

My meal also came with salad, and the Pub always makes really good salads. The pumpernickel croutons are a special favorite of mine. If anyone knows of any supermarket that sells them, please let me know. The bottomless refill on the Coke was also a huge bonus.

Juan J. Chacon Quiros, Developing Nations Editor: Being quite an expert in Mexican food I had a few doubts about that section of the menu. I decided to go for the Chicken Nachos, and I was not disappointed. There were enough Nachos for a crowd of hungry eaters, and they fulfilled all the quality requirements of Mexican cuisine. If you go for it, make sure you ask for side dish of Jalapenos, fresh melted cheese and a few Coronas. And if you're really sensitive about quality ask if Craig is working, I taught him how to make them!

By CALEB COCHRAN
Collegian Staff

There are plenty 'o choices in the Pioneer Valley if you're in the mood for food falling into the category of Burgers and American Fare. To help make your choice a bit easier, let's run through some of the area's best traditional American restaurants.

Just down the road from UMass is The Pub, conveniently located on North Pleasant Street in Amherst. The Pub offers everything you could want in an American restaurant, from good 'ole burgers to more extravagant offerings. A great choice for a date or a night out with mom and pop.

Located right here on campus, our own Top of the Campus Restaurant, located on the 11th floor of the Lincoln Campus Center, also offers a wide array of American food. UMass students can also take advantage of a $3 dinner discount on weeknights with a valid ID.

Hotdog! This little weener is no longer just a barbecue alternative.

Seasons Restaurant, on Belchertown Road in Amherst, offers dishes such as prime rib, seafood and veal specialties. Seasons is also famous for its Sunday buffet brunch, which runs from 10:30 a.m.–3 p.m. Dinner is served daily from 5– 10 p.m. Reservations are always accepted.

Across the bridge in Northampton, Fitzwilly's is always a favorite stop for discriminating diners. The burgers are great, but make sure to take advantage of the wonderful pasta and chicken dishes as well. Located on Main St., Fitzwilly's is another fun date spot.

Just up the road from Fitzwilly's is Packard's, located just off of Main St. on Masonic St. Packard's offers a wide variety of sandwiches, burgers and other American favorites, all at reasonable prices. Be sure to check out my personal favorite, the Cajun chicken sandwich.

Another of Northampton's fine American restaurants is Bistro on Main, located on (you guessed it) Main St. Bistro on Main offers traditional and contemporary American cuisine, including gourmet pizza and pasta, grilled seafood, steak, poultry and veal. Using fresh local ingredients, Bistro on Main offers lunch and dinner seven days a week.

Our tour of Northampton continues with a stop at Eastside Grill on Strong Avenue. The Grill serves up favorites such as grilled steaks, seafood and Cajun food. Lunch starts at 11:30 a.m., and dinner begins at 5 p.m.

There's nothing quite as American as fried chicken, and nobody knows this better than Jim Dandy Fried Chicken, on King St. in Northampton. Bring the whole family for a night of Southern fried fun.

Bub's Bar–B–Q, on Amherst Rd. in Sunderland, offers a real Southern barbecue, plus full catering service. Open seven days a week from 5 p.m.

For Buffalo wings and other American favorites, be sure to stop by Buffalo Bill's, located on Main St. in Amherst. Buffalo Bill's also has an extensive take–out menu that covers not only these zesty poultry treats, but features burgers and fries that will knock your socks off.

Finally, Northampton's City Cafe, on Pearl St. in Northampton, serves up grilled food, barbecue, steaks, seafood and chicken. Open from 10 a.m. daily, and Sunday from 11 a.m. Conveniently located near Pearl Street Nightclub, City Cafe is a good choice for dinner before a show.

That about wraps up our tour of the area's American restaurants. Next time the D.C. meal sounds unappealing or your cold cuts go bad, pick one of these great places and treat yourself to an evening of fine American dining.

More than just egg rolls, Chinese food offers many tasty variations

By GINA LARSON
Collegian Correspondent

Here in the Pioneer Valley, there are almost as many Chinese restaurants as pizza parlors to choose from. There is one for nearly every occasion and taste.

Located in Amherst center is the Panda East, which is the only Chinese restaurant in the area offering Japanese cuisine featuring a sushi bar and tempura. They offer Hunan, Szechuan, Cantonese, and Mandarin style food, and there is a special Chinese menu available on request for those who desire authentic Chinese food. Be warned: the menu is written in Chinese for those who would like to peruse this bill of fare.

The Panda East also operates a second restaurant in Northampton named the Panda Garden — minus the sushi bar.

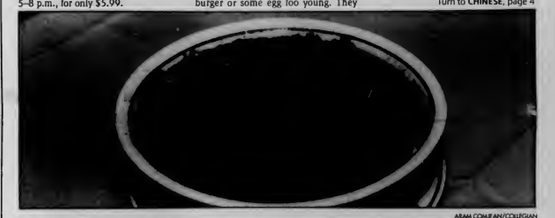
Located around the corner is Amherst Chinese Food, which offers homestyle Mandarin cooking. Amherst Chinese does not use any MSG in their food and the vegetables that they use are grown on their own farm.

Kim Toy is one of the best hid Chinese restaurants in the Amherst area is nestled next to the Amherst Cinema. Kim Toy specializes in Cantonese food only, and is known more through its take–out business.

The newest Chinese cuisine addition to Amherst is Cousster. Since being known as Lai Lai, Chousster has gained more dining space and a new chef. The are also proud to bring the authentic Chinese noodle to the Amherst area. The menu offers a wide range of Chinese food, and if there is something you want that is not only the menu the will be happy to make it up for you. They feature weekly dinner specials and offer a low, one–price special on all lunch plates ($4.95). As a bonus, to all Collegian readers who mention they heard about Chouster in these pages, they will receive a free soda with their dine–in meal!

Looking to add a more festive flair to your dining experience? Try out the Hunan Garden, which give its patrons that Aloha ambiance in its Polynesian setting. The Hunan Garden hosts a great, budget–fitting, 13–item buffet every night of the week from 5–8 p.m., for only $5.99.

ARAM COMJEAN/COLLEGIAN
Collegiate cravings for Chinese food are somehow never satiated. Thanks to local restaruants, happiness is only an eggroll away.



At the corner of University Drive and Route 9 is China Dynasty. This restaurant is the perfect place for special occasions, as well as casual dining. The menu offers weight– watcher selections and specials (changing monthly). They have a large, spacious dining area (for a short wait on the weekends) and the bar is equipped with a wide–screen television, for those of you who hate to break away from a UMass game during dinner.

To plan an all–in–one date, try Kai Chi, located in the Mountain Farms Mall, near the AMC Four cinemas. Kai Chi offers Chinese and American cuisine for those who want to grab a burger or some egg foo young. They offer bar specials Monday through Thursday night — and a 10 percent discount on appetizers after 9:30 p.m.

Further down Route 9 is the Peking Garden. The Peking is known for its live comedy acts presented every Friday and Saturday night, at which time meals are discounted 20 percent. The Peking Garden and comedy club specializes in Mandarin and Szechuan and hosts a full–size bar.

In the Northampton area, you can find China Chef. Besides the usual Chinese fare, this restaurant also offers Hong Kong dishes. They have recently added dinner specials to their menu

International atmosphere highlights Paradise of India

NATHAN MARTIN/COLLEGIAN

The Valley is home to quality International fare, such as Indian and Thai cuisine.

By HENRY BRIER
Collegian Staff

Paradise of India, on Main Street in Amherst Center, is a family-run restaurant. It is one of a chain of three with the other two in Northampton and Brattleboro, Vermont. The restaurant has been in Amherst a little more than a year.

The walls are decorated with Indian paintings, each with unique themes. The scenes are of warriors in action, a painting of the Indian landscape, and two Indian women, dressed in traditional Indian garb, speaking with each other.

Indian music permeates the air. Classical instrumentals, such as Sitar, played by Ravi Shanker, adds an interestingly soft touch to the ambiance. Shanker is known as a famous musician of Sitar. The music and the decor compliment one- another to make for a fine dining experience.

The cuisine also figures into the equation. A highlight of the appetizers is Garlic Paratha. This whole wheat bread is flat and layered, and the garlic is not too pungent. It comes with three sauces: mint, which contains coriander and pepper, has a subtle, bland taste; tamarind, which has raisins, is tangy and sweet, and onion, which is mixed with tomato and tumeric, the strongest of the three, boasts a heavy after taste.

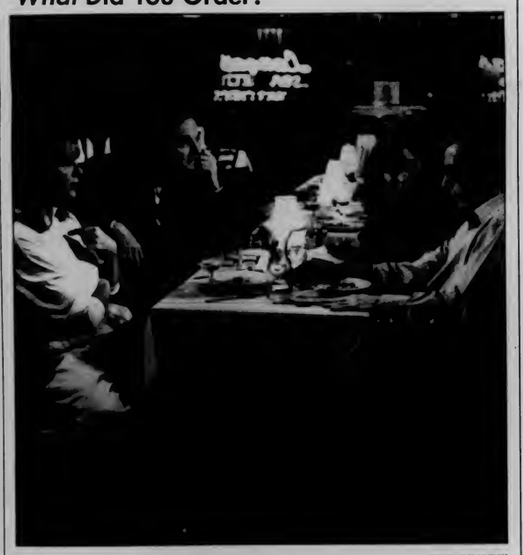
A zesty entree is chicken mushroom, which has exotic herbs and spices. The amount of spice can be controlled, yet the "mild" variation is enough to make one sweat. The rice, which comes with the boneless chicken, helps extract the full flavor of the sauce, and it also absorbs the hotter part of the sauce.

"Wow. My taste-buds are tap-dancing and my gastric juices are flowing," exclaimed Miriam Wyman, a junior environmental science major.

Paradise of India has an intriguing beverage which goes along with the meal very well. Darjeeling Tea is imported directly from Northeastern India. Black and green cardamon are added to give it a distinctive taste, different from the other teas found in other restaurants.

A dessert which appropriately adds the finishing touch to dinner is Kulfee, a homemade ice cream. Kulfee is healthier than most ice creams, as it is made from reduced milk. Almonds and pistachios are added, which provides for a unique flavor.

When the check arrives at the end of the meal, it will not leave your wallet empty. The luncheon starts at $3.95, while dinners start at $6.75.



Paradise of India is also considering opening a buffet table. Every Sunday, South Indian dishes are served, and the focus is on ground lentils and coconuts.

"Coconuts are abundant in Southern India," said Dhunmun Singh, the restaurant manager.

The restaurant has numerous non-meat options, as they are ready to accommodate vegetarian eaters.

"We try to serve quality food," added Singh. "We like quenching customers' thirsts and fulfilling their cravings."

Food, fun and friends have always been a great combination — at least until the bill arrives. Surely Diane Keaton, Alan Alda, Anjelica Huston and Woody Allen figure it out by the end of Manhattan Murder Mystery.

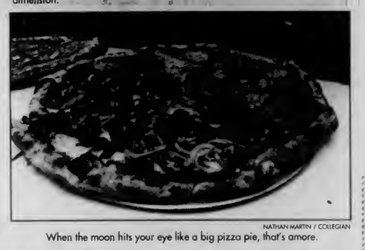
A slice of heaven: there's a pizza for every kind of palate

By AMY S. BURNS
Collegian Staff

Pizza has always been an important part of my life.



When I was little, my parents would order pizza every Friday night. As a result, even now my stomach lets me know if it's been more than a week since I've had pizza.

Needless to say, I was thrilled to have the opportunity to eat pizza at Bertucci's last Friday, all for the good of the Collegian. I have also compiled a list of pizza restaurants in the area. Next to each restaurant's name I have listed the price of a large two-item pizza, which I believe is a standard UMass student's order.

NATHAN MARTIN / COLLEGIAN

Have a pizza this, baby! Today pizza has been raised to a whole new dimension.

SIT-DOWN RESTAURANTS
(TO=take-out, D=delivery)

Andy's Pizza $8. TO/D (with coupon). To make sure you don't get tired of the same old, same old, Andy's has a wide variety of toppings, including artichokes, eggplant and feta cheese. They are particularly proud of their super sized salads, which are large enough for two people.

Bertucci's $10-13. TO/D. Bertucci's offers 19 specialty pizzas, as well as a create-your-own option. They also have unusual toppings, including proscuitto, a.k.a. spiced Italian ham. Bertucci's trademark "Brick Oven Pizza" is available in thin or thick crust.

La Cucina di Pinocchio $8.75 TO/D (with coupon). Pinocchio's delivers calzones and subs in addition to pizza. They have all the basic pizza toppings, plus a few unusual ones such as pineapple and pesto. Pinocchio's also has a special "white pizza" which features tasty cheeses.

Pizza Hut $12.97 TO/D. This is the home or basic, reliable pizza, and proves that this traditional Italian treat is pretty much the same everywhere. Big fool: pizzas with three toppings are a great deal at only $10.99. They also have a lunch buffet for only $3.99, Monday-Friday, 11:30 a.m.-1 p.m.

Trattoria Geppetto $9.95 TO. This cute little restaurant in North Amherst has a real Italian feel. It offers a unique, quiet ambiance far away from the crowds uptown. The restaurant will be offering pizza delivery starting in a few weeks.

FAST FOOD
(TO=take-out, D=delivery)

Antonio's Pizza $10-12. TO. Antonio's is by far the most popular pizza place in Amherst Center. The line almost always stretches out the door, especially on Friday and Saturday nights. They offer tons of unique combinations, including potato, taco and tortellini. My personal favorite is pesto artichoke. The pizzeria also sports some great posters and prints of the old country, from Sienna to Rome.

Bruno's $8. TO/D. Bruno's delivers lasagna and subs, as well as pizza. They also have specialty pizzas including Hawaiian, Pesto and Vegetarian. They deliver for lunch, and are located right on Main Street.

College Pizza $6.99. TO/D (college special). College Pizza is definitely the cheapest and quickest pizza around. It's perfect for a college student's budget and makes a great late night snack. They offer all basics, nothing fancy.

Domino's Pizza $11.50. D. Domino's is pretty much the same basic pizza wherever you go, and really does the job when you have a hankering for pizza. You can get their giant Dominator for only $10.99.

D.P. Dough. TO/D. It's not exactly pizza, but D.P. Dough has pretty much cornered the market on calzones. By specializing in just calzones, they're able to do a good job and get them to you fast. Calzones are $4 each, or two for $7.

Krete Pizza $9.50. TO/D. This place offers tasty Greek pizza. Since they're located in Hadley, the delivery is not as speedy as some, but it's well worth the wait. Plus they have a great party size pizza (for all you party animals) for $11.95.

The Sub $8.95. TO/D. The Sub delivers a wide variety of hot and cold subs, as well as pizza. They offer a delicious, economical, party size pizza for $12.95. For carry-out, their pizza slices are only $.95.

Superior Pizza $8. TO/D (college special). Superior is conveniently located near Townhouse and Brandywine Apartments. It's also one of the few places that delivers to Sunderland. They have a wide variety of toppings

Cafe DiCarlo boasts elegant flair

ARAM COMJEAN/COLLEGIAN

Italian food is a matter of art at Amherst's Cafe DiCarlo.

By JORMA KANSANEN
Collegian Staff

With the pace we put on ourselves during the course of the semester due to school work, and with most of us catching up on it, we tend to neglect what exactly we put in our mouths.

For some, it is the Potato Chip/Doritos Syndrome. With others, it is the old size 10 sneaker. (I can sympathize with these people, as I am currently recovering from this ailment).

But our very own downtown Amherst possesses a throwback to the days where people actually sat down to eat and, maybe had an extended conversation, too.

At 71 North Pleasant St., Cafe DiCarlo presents for its customers a menu consisting of fresh-made traditional Italian cuisine, with the chef presenting daily saute specials centering around this genre.

From the appetizer menu, a mixture of old favorites and new ones combine to tempt the palate. Beginning with the soup of the day ($2.95), like the asparagus bisque or chicken minestrone, and Caesar salad ($4.95), the Cafe does not stray too far away from the fan favorites.

But with other appetizers, such as the Cafe Bread ($5.95), which is Italian bread layered with prosciutto, roasted red peppers, Brie, mozzarella, asiago and romano cheeses, the distinct flavor of Italy is subtlety brought forth.

As I perused through the pasta and entree portion, the imagination of the menu's developer came to my mind as one of uncompromising good taste. For those looking to splurge, entrees consisting of the traditional Marsala ($14.95-$16.95, choice of chicken or veal, respectively), to the Bistecca alla Fiorentina ($18.95), which is beef tenderloins with caramelized onions, pabiano chili peppers, mushrooms and garlic, will surely suit your desires.

With the more budget conscious clientele, the Cafe has its Lasagna Verde ($7.75), and the inimitable Puttanesca ($7.75) pasta tossed with vegetables, garlic and olive oil in a whole roasted pepper. (Yes, I heard your stomach groan.)

To top off the meal, the desserts go back to the basics. Tiramisu ($4.25) and cannolis ($3.25) conclude what was a truly epicurean delight to the eye of someone who has missed the sensation of the true sit-down meal.

NATHAN MARTIN / COLLEGIAN

Pasta may well be one of the most popular Italian contributions to diets everywhere. It's every college student's dream: easy to make, inexpensive to buy and definitley sossy to serve.

Getting your just desserts

Coffeehouses, bagel bonanzas await hungry folks

NATHAN MARTIN / COLLEGIAN

Cleaning your plate is no chore, with the promise of tasty desserts and coffee in mind. The Valley prides itself on offering a variety of sweets. From gourmet International desserts like tiramisu to that old standby, chocolate chip cookies, most sugar-fixes are just a walk into town, or over the bridge to Northampton. Coffee is available in abundance, from funky flavors to extra-strength espresso, the Valley has it all.

By TARA MK CONNELLY
Collegian Staff

Coffee houses and small cafes seem to be the common link between universities and colleges all over the globe.

What would a scholar's life be like without the trip to the corner cafe for espresso and bagels?

Where would you and with your new found friend from philosophy class?

Where else would you sit for hours, sipping tea and watching the world pass by?

Could you imagine a life minus these marvelous places where poetry can be read, jazz can be heard, and journals can be written in?

Being in the Happy Valley, home of college cool, we never have to worry about such a lack of intellectual housing. Amherst and Northampton have a veritable plethora of small cafes, coffee houses, bakeries and sandwich shops. This area is a mutable Mecca for slackers everywhere to sit back and enjoy a steaming cup of joe and a great piece of pie.

Bart's Ice Cream (Amherst and Northampton) is the ultimate in college culture. Bart's just draws in hoards of famished people daily, all craving mouth-watering edibles. Not only does it scoop up tons of its delectable ice cream (chocolate chip cookie dough; need I say more?), but it also serves a variety of other things as well.

Their deli can whip up some damn good sandwiches (might I recommend turkey with lettuce, tomato and honey mustard), and they have a pretty good variety of soups as well. The even have something for vegetarians: Mexican veggie lasagna and veggie chili.

Room for dessert? You can partake of the many pastries and baked goods that Bart's creates. They have everything from cookies to French Silk Pie. If you want some caffeine to go with your sugar fix, Bart's can accommodate with espresso, cafe au lait, or with any of their specialty coffees.

The Black Sheep Cafe (Amherst) is another haven for the hungry. They're known for their unique sandwich combinations that are sure to please even the most finicky sandwich connoisseurs. If you like to listen to music, you might also want to check out their live performances.

Bruegger's Bagels (Amherst, Northampton) is an ideal place to kick back and relax. Their bagels are hot and fresh, and their coffee is great. The place is especially packed during the weekend mornings, and it's a cool place for your Sunday brunch, especially if you're strapped for cash.

The French Bakery (Northampton) is a dessert lover's paradise. Filled with rich french faire sure to get your taste buds moving. Their individual cherry cheesecakes, almond topped eclairs, and German chocolate cake just don't get any better. They also have a gourmet deli and fresh loaves of French bread. It's a little pricey, but you won't be disappointed.

The Coffee Connection (Northampton) embodies the sidewalk cafe. It serves up hot fragrant coffee with a variety of desserts. It's a great place to relax in and there are always people around. Known for supplying the ever popular Au Bon Pain with their cafe, you know you're getting first-rate brew.

doing. Don't embarrass yourself and pull some dorky Jerry Lewis move. Chicks hate Jerry. (Cutter Garcia is no Jerry Lewis)

•Always Tell the Guy he was Great. After a sexual encounter with a male the female should always extol his virtues and prowess. It's important because on the surface we all think we're great lovers but then we go home and watch pornos and realize we aren't because we didn't have to peel you off of the ceiling when it was over.

Now when you do this, be careful, because we can smell a sex lie from a mile away. For instance — never say, "You were the biggest!" when, "You were the best!" will do just fine. The first response will be an obvious lie and will most likely offend. But the second choice is good because it will give us the opportunity to reaffirm our masculinity as well as giving us good quotes to tell our friends.

•It's not always Length. Girth is good too. The babes had two powerful quotes on this subject. The Cape Cod babe said, "Short and thick does the trick." While one of the Jersey babes sang, "Stamina! Stamina! Stamina! It's not the length, it's not the size! It's how many times you make it rise!"

God, I loved these girls.

•Experiment with Foods. Food is good. Sex is good. Food with Sex? . . . Excellent! Next time you find yourself in a love clench, head to the kitchen and experiment with nutrients. You'd be simply amazed at what you can achieve with the propper amounts of chocolate syrup, whipped cream and fresh fruits. But don't stop here. Be creative. Pull out stuff that looks crazy and exciting. Take some chances! Chicks dig risk takers.

All I can tell you is that you have no idea what you're missing until you play with jelly donuts and Hava Ice. At the worst you end up with messy sheets (which is kind of what you're going for anyways, isn't it?) and at best you end up in the shower together. Nice!

I'm running out of space here so I'm not going to be able to talk to you about; game playing, fun with blindfolds or battery operated utensils — so I'm just going to have to leave you with a few quick thoughts. To the guys: No one likes a premature ejactulator. Punch the clown before you go out so you don't have to worry about it later. You'll be glad you did and more importantly she'll be glad you did.

To the girls: It's the 90s and if you want equal rights then stand up for yourselves and start taking some chances. In fact, I might think a whole lot more of you. Especially when I'm alone in the bathroom.

Heh, heh, heh.

■ she said

More often than not, I think that sex is about power. Intercourse, although it's fun and is the epitome of instant gratification, is rarely the issue. Sex, in truth, is common. Pretty much anyone, anywhere, could find a sexual encounter at any time, if they really wanted to.

Finding someone we actually want to have sex with marks the beginning of the complications. Are we looking to be seduced, or do we want to do the pursuing? Do we want just to sleep with this person, or will we be waiting that phone call the next day? Are we going to admit that one encounter might make our hearts beat a little faster than they should, or are we going to blow it off as a sudden loss of sanity that we'd rather forget about? Do we view sex as the physical manifestation of the "L" word?

All of these questions revolve around the central issue of power. Sex is something we all want to have on our own terms (although, some folks, like Garcia, are pretty loose about those terms), and the defenses we put up and risks we take constitute just some of the games we play to do so.

What people seem to ironically forget is that sex is something shared by two people, and if both partners are playing games, and struggling to do so by their rules, more often than not, at least one person loses.

I am not saying that every sexual encounter has to be full of life-changing meaning, nor does sex have to entail all the red tape and emotional B.S. that often keeps the wrong people miserably together for too long. It should, however, involve respect.

Respecting someone doesn't mean proclaiming your undying love for them, nor committing the next decade to helping them fulfill their life-long dreams. Respect doesn't necesarily mean not playing games, either.

Sure, 12 beers may be slightly impairing your judgement, but chances are you and your partner are both going to wake up with the same hangover and feelings of, well, confusion.

And while you may not regard your body as a temple, STDs and the sobering reality of AIDS should cause you to take the sexual encounter seriously enough to warrant the use of a condom.

Ideally, it's good to know something about the sexual history of your partner, but if remembering his/her name is proving to be difficult at the time, at the very least, go with the condom.

As far as the game analogy goes, playing by these rules will ensure safer, hopefully more enjoyable sex. Besides, a case of gonorrhea is a little more serious than swallowing your pride after losing a round of tiddlywinks. Don't say it, Garcia.

New releases from West Africa capture essence of world beat

By LEE BLACKSTONE
Collegian Correspondent

This week, it's a trip to West Africa for two new releases, and yet another chance to see how the world music market is faring.

From the country of Benin comes Angelique Kidjo, with her third effort Aye (on Mango Records). Angelique is a fierce traditionalist, in that she sings in her native Fon language, refusing the p.. * of some record company executives to broaden her appeal by singing in some of the colonial languages in West Africa. For this, she receives full marks.

But listening to Kidjo's album reveals a real tension. While the songs emphasize human rights issues, spirituality and Fon folklore, the produced sound is decidedly the Western world's slick pop. Five of the CD's 10 tracks were recorded at Paisley Park by Prince protege David Z. The result? There are the expected whomping dance grooves and exciting brass lines, and throughout Angelique's voice is wonderful.

At times her high note exclamations sound like the woman from C+C Music Factory; Kidjo can get real funky and growling (listen to the glorious "Tatchedogbe") or go for the slow burn as on "Azan Nan Kpe (A Day Will Come)."

While the album is great fun, and Angelique's lyrics, which are provided in both English and French translation, set her music apart from most standard pop fare. It's a great example of remaining true to one's roots, and working one's messages into the system to hop for change. Nice to hear a woman in control of her tradition an her future!

Also on Mango Records comes Salif Keita's The Mansa of Mali . . . A Retrospective, from the country that lies north of Benin. Salif's voice sometimes reminds me of Youssou N'dour's; the music here is comprised of much longer cuts that on Kidjo's CD, allowing space for funky or laid-back jazz-inflected jams.

Don't get me wrong: the music is excellent, but my main complaint is with the liner notes. You get some decent bibliographical information on Keita, but no indication about what he's singing about. If this is an introduction to the man and his music, with CD's often running between 13 to 16 bucks a pop, I think the consumer is at least entitled to some lyrics in translation.

Aye: A; Mansa of Mali: B+

Disney B'way musical overdone

By MICHAEL KUCHWARA
Associated Press

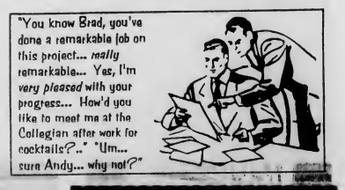
NEW YORK — What hath Mickey wrought on Broadway? An overstuffed mouse, I'm afraid.

Beauty and the Beast, the fabled Walt Disney animated film, has made a disappointing transition to the stage.

Punctuated by a series of spectacular special effects that make Cats, Les Miserables, The Phantom of the Opera and Miss Saigon look like chamber musicals, the show that opened Monday at the Palace Theater is still a cartoon.

A lavish cartoon, but a cartoon nonetheless, that now seems musically undernourished, only fitfully entertaining and, most damaging of all, emotionally barren.

As a theater musical, Beauty and the Beast leaves nothing to the imagination. What you see is what you get: a big bazooka of a show. At a cost of reportedly $12 million to $14 million, the musical looks as if Disney has put every penny of that amount on stage.



Much of it can be found in Stan Meyer's ingenious settings - a grandiose and gloomy castle that glides effortlessly on stage, for example — and Ann Hould-Ward's inventive costumes, particularly for the inanimate objects that come to life.

And oh, those technological wonders - accompanied by, among other things, smoke, fire, confetti, sparklers and what looks like a heavy rainstorm. Several are truly astonishing, and one — it won't be revealed here — near the end of the show drew gasps from an appreciative audience.

Amid all these diversions, the story seems like an afterthought, although adapter Linda Woolverton has stuck closely to her original screenplay.

What is charming on film evaporates when director Robert Jess Roth transfers it to the stage. The film's opening musical number, in which townspeople and several main characters are introduced, sets the buoyant, fanciful tone of the movie. Yet the same song turns leaden in the theater.

Clinton reappears on MTV

President reaches nation's youth through town hall

By NANCY BENAC
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Questioned by young Americans troubled about suicide, emptiness and crime, President Clinton told teens in an MTV town hall Tuesday to avoid the "copout" of cynicism and "keep your eye on the future."

"In the end, we can only go forward if we believe in each other," Clinton told a studio audience of 200 young professionals and high school and college students.

"We have to have a change in behavior and attitude and feeling among young people."

The questions reflected the concerns and curiosities of Generation X and of the nation overall — everything from rising crime and the bloodshed in Bosnia to "gangsta" rap and the president's choice in underclothing.

"Mr. President, the world's dying to know: Is it boxers or briefs?" asked 17-year-old Laetitia Thompson of Potomac, Md. "Usually briefs," the president confessed, flushing and shaking his head as he fielded the unusual query.

The first question in the 90-minute town hall, taped to air later Tuesday, went to the heart of many young Americans' concerns. Seventeen-year-old Dalia Lyons of Bethesda, Md., told Clinton that the suicide of grunge rocker Kurt Cobain "exemplified the emptiness that many in our generation feel." She asked how young people could be encouraged to value life more.

Clinton called it perhaps the "most important question." "We have to find a way to help young people think in a hopeful way about five and 10 and 15 years from now," he said. "... If you can keep your eye on the future, then suicide doesn't become an option because you know there can always be a better tomorrow." Another youngster told Clinton: "Many of our generation are very angry and frustrated with the bureaucracy of government and the broken promises of politicians. ... How can we believe that this time things will be different?"

Clinton told him, "All I can say is you just have to watch and see." The president said he was doing his best to keep his promises, then issued a broad warning against letting cynicism be an excuse for shirking responsibility.

"Cynicism is a copout, because once you become cynical and you say that someone else is not going to do something, that lets you off the hook," he said.

One of the toughest questions came from Princeton student Sasha Greenwalt, who told Clinton that his Bosnia policy was on a course likely to "reward genocide and allow war criminals to stay in power."

Rabin cracks down on opposition

By NICOLAS B. TATRO
Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Secret service agents and soldiers arrested more than 400 Arabs and seized automatic weapons in a predawn sweep Tuesday against an Islamic fundamentalist group that terrified the nation with suicide bomb attacks on commuter buses.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, who ordered the crackdown, hinted there could be further moves if the attacks persisted, and officials said Hamas political leaders could be targeted next. "We will fight those who continue terror with all the means that are available to us. The only limitation is the limitations of the law," he said on Israel TV.

Rabin balanced his crackdown with gestures to Yasser Arafat's PLO. He confirmed Israel would allow the return of 20,000 to 30,000 Palestinians, most relatives of the PLO police force, once agreement with the PLO was reached.

Israel also allowed the return Tuesday of six fugitives from Arafat's Fatah faction, who crossed from Egypt into the Gaza Strip. "Their return is a sign that the peace process is continuing despite the obstacles," said Sufian Abu Zayde, a PLO spokesman. PLO officials said the roundup of Islamic activists, the largest since Israel deported nearly 400 Palestinians to Lebanon in December 1992, was particularly ill-timed because it came while PLO negotiators were seeking the release of prisoners of all factions. About 3,500 Hamas activists are among the 10,500 inmates Palestinians say are held by Israel.

Palestine Liberation Organization officials said the sweep was unlikely to force a suspension in Israel-PLO talks but would undercut support for the peace process.

"These arrests are certainly not going to contribute in any positive way. On the contrary, they feed the skepticism and the convictions people have that this peace process is merely a reorganization of the occupation and won't lead to real peace," said Hanan Ashrawi, a PLO spokeswoman.

She added that the arrests set back PLO efforts to persuade Islamic activists to participate in self-rule elections and the process of reconstruction.

The focus of the raids, carried out in a dozen fundamentalist strongholds in the Gaza Strip and West Bank, were young activists and a few key preachers of Hamas and the smaller Islamic Jihad faction. Hamas sources some key leaders had fled earlier to Egypt.

Women Unite To Take Back the Night

NATHAN MARTIN / COLLEGIAN

Approximately 200 people participated in Take Back the Night Rally on April 14. Women from the five colleges organized the event to increase awareness and help end violence against women. The night consisted of a candlelit march framed by demonstrations, songs, and speeches. Women from all over the valley came to join in and lend their voices.

"This march is about breaking... silence and ending isolation. Say no, get angry, and get active."

— Veronica Frenkel

"We need to look for a society which is safe for us, our sisters, and our children."

— Jean Grossholtz

"We all have a very special strength and we all can learn from one another."

— Janet Aalfs

NATHAN MARTIN / COLLEGIAN

"I was slapped in the face to the fact that violence against women is a reality and does exist."

— Kellie Paige

"It makes me mad to think how much time women have to waste being afraid. That time adds up to months and years that women could spend on other, more productive things. The march made me feel safe and empowered . . . I wish we could walk that way every day and night."

— Deidre May

"I will never forget this feeling of empowerment."

— Oriana Noel Lewis

"Women who are abused are not weak, but strong. Don't judge a situation unless you experience it."

— Dawn Melchionda

CHRISTOPHER BACUSA / COLLEGIAN

"I look forward to the day when there is equal power relations and mutual respect for all women. It's time to take back the night, our rights, and our movement"

— Sage Freechild Coordinator for the Counselor/Advocate Program at the Everywoman's Center

"This march was very important to me because it brings women together so that we can share our experiences and help other women. It's a time to take back one night while working toward taking back every day."

— Stacey Malone

"Let's hold hands as sisters to end violence against women."

— Melanie DeSilva

Your Horoscope

By Jeane Dixon

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You could be asked to handle two distinctively different propositions simultaneously. A business partner leaves you complete projects on schedule. Do not fall victim to a blue mood tonight.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A brilliant flash of insight from you solves a difficult problem. Working conditions continue to improve, thanks to a team effort. You could end up marrying a business associate.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Expect to be granted more authority; you excelled in a health problem will turn around. Your ability to let go of the past has a positive effect on your love life.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You may be thinking of adding another room onto your house. Certain home improvements are worth more than others. Seek a reconciliation with a friend or neighbor.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A prominent person's itinerary should be kept strictly confidential so as not to draw unwanted attention. Creditors could be breathing down your neck. Test will make your relationship more harmonious.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Impromptu gatherings often turn out to be more exciting than carefully-planned social events. Discussing world events is easy if you read the newspapers.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Accomplishing something worthwhile is all the incentive you need to roll up your sleeves. An old friend may get in touch with you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Some people expect to find a fortune in an abandoned mine or other unlikely place. You usually remain down-to-earth, nevertheless, a moneymaking proposition has captured your attention.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your ability to cut costs will make you a hero in the eyes of VIPs. A raise in promotion could be forthcoming.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Do not let an emotional upset wreck your carefully laid plans. Your ability to sort through the details is vital to your success. Curb a tendency to mingle your professional and personal lives.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Bringing any problems or doubts to light will help you find a timely solution. An older relative plays a major role in your progress. You are neither a loner nor a martyr.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You will obtain credit approval when you really need it. Shop for the lowest interest rate. Speak with authority when around youngsters; they are refusing on your leadership.

Berroa, a part- time player for Oakland. Berroa came up in the talent-rich Blue Jays farm system (Remember your '88 Donruss Rated Rookies, of which you probably have 12 doubles) but bounced around until he finally stuck after being a non- roster invitee this spring.

How about Reggie Sanders of the Reds? The outfielder charged Pedro Martinez while he was working on a no- hitter. Yeah, Reggie. My perfect game went out the window an inning ago, but now I'm throwing at you on an 0–2 count.

Did anyone ever write into the standard player contract that players must come equipped with brains?

Hot streak upped to eleven

ARAM COMBIAN / COLLEGIAN

Coach Mike Stone's Minutemen ran their winning streak to 11 games yesterday, the longest during his coaching reign here in Amherst.

By MICHAEL REISS
Collegian Staff

The April 19 date on Central Connecticut State's schedule had the University of Massachusetts listed as the opponent. But what got in the way of a possible Blue Devil upset victory yesterday was Nelson U.

Lacking a spark in the early innings and trailing 4–2, the Minutemen turned to their leadoff hitter, Nelson Ubaldo, for some life. The sophomore left-fielder responded, hammering a three–run home run that gave Massachusetts the lead and momentum for keeps, en route to a 9–5 victory over visiting CCSU at Earl Lorden Field yesterday.

The win runs the Massachusetts' streak to 11 games, the longest in Coach Mike Stone's career in Amherst.

"When you go ahead after you've been down a couple of runs, it's always a big hit," said Stone of Ubaldo's fourth– inning moon shot.

"I didn't think it was gone because of how high I had hit it," said Ubaldo.

At the time, Massachusetts was trailing 4–2 and had given the Blue Devils every indication that they could steal this game away. With two on and two out in the fourth, Ubaldo turned things around, crushing the first offering from pitcher Cleve Huggins to deep left–center field.

"From my previous two at–bats, I had a pretty good idea of what he was going to throw me," said Ubaldo. "I knew he was going to start me off with an off–speed pitch. He threw it in there and i just hit it hard."

Hit it hard, indeed. With its first lead of the game, 5–4, Massachusetts and shortstop Brad Gorrie weren't through. The freshman slIced a single to right and advanced around the bases, eventually scoring on a wild pitch.

The Minutemen would hold on to the two–run cushion until the sixth, where they added three more. With Gorrie and designated hitter Justin Howard on base (both walked) with two outs, senior rightfieider Bill Knight hit a 400–foot homer to straight away center field, upping the lead to 9–4.

"The two home runs were big," said Stone. "One put us ahead, while the other put us further ahead. it's nice to see that we're winning with a different line–up out there."

"He threw me a coupie of strikes and i was out ahead of him," Knight said of his home–run at–bat. "I was just telling myself to sit back, and when he threw that fastball over the plate, I just hit it."

Knight's biast knocked Huggins out of the game, while effectiveiy putting away any hopes of a Biue Devil victory.

Starter Jason Bennett (2–0) was tough enough through six, mixing a slow curve and liveiy fastball. Stone elected to go with Steve Levy opening the seventh and the freshman reliever earned his first save of the year, throwing effectively.

"It was the first time i had thrown since Florida, so the knees were shaking a bit," said Levy, who surrendered only two hits. "I was just trying to keep the ball down because we have a great defense out there."

The Minutemen host Rhode Isiand today at 1 p.m.

"It is just such a big day for us," said Stone of today's doubieheader. "We're in pretty good shape right now, but things certainiy aren't wrapped up."

Minutewomen place sixth

By BILL BALFOUR
Collegian Staff

Every team has a defining moment that will set in motion the future success of that program. Last weekend at the Atlantic–10 Championship, the University of Massachusetts women's tennis team had such a moment.

Competing in the first Atlantic–10 Championship in the program's history, the Minutewomen displayed a lot of heart and soul finishing in sixth place.

"If I'm coaching here four years from now, this one tournament is going to be remembered as the time this program turned around," Coach Judy Dixon said. "It almost doesn't get any better than it was this weekend."

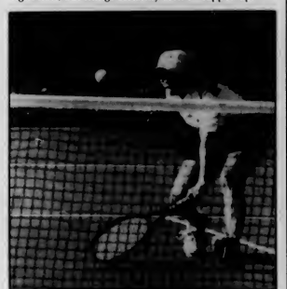
UMass entered the tournament having only competed against one of the nine A–10 teams and proved they belonged with the rest of the field. The Minutewomen were seeded sixth for the tournament and finished in the sixth spot.

The Minutewomen opened the championship by losing to Rutgers, 9–0. UMass then rebounded against Duquesne, winning 8–1 before losing to St. Bonaventure 5–4 in a battle for fifth place. Temple captured the overall crown.

In the win against Duquesne, the Minutewomen won handily with some of the season's top performances.

Pam Levine and Mary Edwards came through winning the No. 3 doubles to put UMass up 2–1 going into the singles matches.

"The team finaily came together," Dixon said. "That match in particular was the difference."



UMass had opportunities to knock off St. Bonaventure for fifth place but was unable to get the job done. In the third set of the No. 1 doubles, UMass was up 3–1 in the third set with Liesl Sitton on serve. Sitton's serve was broken and UMass lost the momentum and the match.

"They learned a lot," Dixon said. "Their tennis is at its best and their playing up to their abilities."

Liesl Sitton, UMass' No. 1 singles player, had a strong showing all weekend winning two of the three singles matches she played. Sitton's only loss came at the hands of the No. 1 player from Rutgers.

"Liesl's tennis is bordering on the top four kind of tennis. That was a really good showing for her," Dixon said.

Another strong performance for

Harvard, UM clash on Hill

By MATT VAUTOUR
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's iacrosse team will have its hands full this afternoon when it hosts No. 19 Harvard.

The Crimson (3–4) have played well all season, despite their under .500 record. Three of their four losses came against No. 2 Princeton, No. 7 Duke and No. 8 Brown.

This game is a must win for the Gorillas. Two criteria are essential for UMass to make the post–season: the New England Championship and 10 victories. It appears it will be a showdown between UMass and Brown for the New England title. Neither team can afford to lose to a local opponent.

"We have to get focused," said UMass Coach Ted Garber. "It's going to take a lot of work."

To obtain 10 wins, the Gorillas have to win five of their last six games. With tough games against Syracuse and Rutgers on the road, UMass must dominate at home.

This season, Harvard has scored a lot of goals and given up even more. if the Gorilla offense, which has been potent all season, is at its peak tomorrow, and the defense can hold off the Crimson attack, UMass should be successful.

Jeremy Murphy, who had four goals in the early season win against Hofstra before injuring his knee, will be back in the offensive mix. He will join Wes Depp, Mike Valente and Brendan Glass, all who are having excellent offensive seasons.

Harvard will counter with some fire power of its own. Sophomore Mike Eckert has been an impressive passer in his second season, dishing out 22 assists. Senior Mike Porter has shined in his senior season, leading the Crimson with 14 goals.

Gorilla goalie Tom LoPresti will try to rebound from Saturday's 14–13 loss to Delaware. This season, LoPresti has turned in some of his best performances following UMass' losses.

Harvard will probably start freshman Rob Lyng who has been plagued by inconsistency and an inexperienced defense this season. He turned in a brilliant performance against Army, but came back and gave up 12 goals to Boston College. Which Lyng shows up could make a big impact on the game.

Game Notes: This afternoon's game will be broadcast on WMUA 91.1 FM.

ARAM COMBIAN / COLLEGIAN

The Gorillas look to get back on the winning track as they host No. 19 Harvard today at Richard F. Garber Field (3 p.m.)

The program has put been put together much like the construction of a puzzle, piece by piece.

"These guys have rallied around each other and overcome the adversity of losing the number one player on the team [Kasper Vaala]," said Dixon. "It's only going to make them better next year."

Except next year, there will be no Hicks and Twer. Yet they will forever remain intact as the frame that held this puzzle together.

Grades are out for baseball's first few weeks

Michael Morrissey's BEANBALLS

For the last three seasons, the Atlanta Braves staggered out of April with a losing record. in each of these seasons, the Chop Shop bunch won the National League West.

This year, things have changed with the Braves being in the East and roaring out to a fast (13–1) start. The comparisons now aren't with the Buffalo Bills of the NFL but rather the 1984 Detroit Tigers.

Remember that team? The Tigers started with a 35–5 record, one of the best all–time. They won their five–game Championship Series with the Kansas City Royals before beating the San Diego Padres in five and winning the world championship.

One note that I remember vividly: Manager Sparky Anderson said that it wasn't any fun during the season because everybody expected them to win. Will the Braves be the same way?

Don't expect it. Although Ryan Klesko, Tony Tarasco and Javy Lopez have a ton of potential, do not expect any of them to challenge for league leader–type numbers. Simiiarly, I don't think Greg Maddux will maintain his 0.35 earned run average.

I would like to see Atlanta wipe up the rest of the league en route to the World Series, but they deserve to have a little fun along the way. The rookies and Deion Sanders will take care of that.

Okay, so I was a little misguided about expecting a big year from Darryl Strawberry. I have been called gullible and naive before, yes...

Pittsburgh avoiding the cellar after 11 games is comparable to the San Jose Sharks winning a playoff game at Joe Louis Arena.

Dante Bichette, Ellis Burks and the rest of the Colorado Rockies may break every singie–season offensive record this season. Bichette already has a slugging percentage over 1.000 and Burks leads the Ni. in on–base percentage.

The Rockies will still finish in last place, though. The reason is obviously lack of pitching, although David Nied could develop into a great hurler if he was removed from the mile–high aititude.

In the American League, the Kansas City Royals are coming on strong. They have won five in a row and, with a good year from Vince Coleman (seven stolen bases), they could challenge Chicago and Cleveland.

Oakland has gotten great pitching from Steve Karsay, the man once traded for Rickey Henderson. Now that Henderson is back with the A's, the team has a speed burner who aiways gets on base.

The biggest surprise has to be Gerronimo

Seniors lead men's tennis team

By MICHAEL REISS
Collegian Staff

They are the backbone of a first–year team that has taken its lumps. They are steadying presences that strive on consistency and endurance. They are the lone two seniors.

Kevin Hicks and Joe Twer are two important members of the University of Massachusetts men's tennis team. While both are leaders at heart, they go about their business in different ways.

"Kevin is sort of a free–spirit type of guy," said Coach Judy Dixon. "His game relies on his quickness, as he drives the opponent crazy."

Hicks' game is one that frustrates opponents. Hit a scorching forehand down the line. Hicks is there to push it over the net again. Smash a blistering serve down the heart of the court. Hicks is there. Slice a drop shot barely over the net. Hicks is there. Get the picture?

In addition to his contributions in singles, Hicks has played solid first doubies as well.

Twer's style is quite different from Hicks. A tactician and scholar of the game, his trademark is the wearing down of the opponent. He's not short on determination, either.

"Joe plays pretty much by the book," said Dixon. "The reason he wins matches is because of his heart and guts."

Twer has fought through a shoulder injury that has greatiy affected his serve and backhand as well. But would this senior sit it out and let his shoulder recover?

"I've asked Joe the past couple of days if he was okay to play, and he's said 'I'm playing,'" said Dixon.

The team's record at this point stands at 3–5, following a 6–1 victory over Central Connecticut last Thursday. The Atlantic–10 Championships await this weekend and the team will leave for Morgantown, West Virginia, on Thursday.

"The goals for us this weekend is that we accomplish three things," said Dixon. "One is to reintroduce to the conference that UMass men's tennis is back. Second, we want to come in seventh place. That is going to be difficult, but not out of reach. And finally, I want us to hold the momentum we've created coming off the number of wins we had last week."

The team was reinstated this year after a two–year hiatus, and Dixon is happy with the progress thus far. However, there is still much room for improvement.

"I feel like we're right where I thought we'd be," said Dixon. "I'm feeling that this team is playing up to its potential and we will have ended the season having put this program back together."

Close finish puts Minutemen in second

By JORMA KANSANEN
Collegian Staff

To come so close, yet be so far away.

With circumstances as they were, the University of Massachusetts men's track team became the victim of this accursed saying over the weekend.

in a tri–meet last Saturday at Llewelyn Derby track, UMass came up two points shy of Holy Cross' final tally of 78 points. Following these two were Providence with 43 points and Hartford with one point.

"We anticipated a tough meet," said Coach Ken O'Brien. "Holy Cross has a extremely well–rounded team, both in the track and field events."

Blessed with clearing weather and the best meet conditions of this young season, UMass (4–4) came up strongest in the field events. Led by sophomores Marc Lefebvre and Mike Masone, the team took four out of the eight top finishes.

Lefebvre, the team's leading scorer this far into the schedule, grabbed the first place points in the shot put and discus, with distances of 48' and 134' and 7 inches, respectively. The ever–present Tom Galligani joined with Masone's success in the javelin, with the top effort of 45' and 2 inches in the tripie jump.

"The balance of our second and third placings with Holy Cross got us past Providence," said O'Brien. "But with HC's performance, the majority of the first placings just slipped out of our reach."

in the track events, senior Lionel Benjamin continued his resurgence from a slow start, winning the 100 meter competition with a time of 11.3 seconds. Juniors Rick Copley and Ethan Nedeau also came up big. Copley, bettering his last meet time by over 10 seconds, won the steeplechase with a time of 9:26, and Nedeau placed in the top three of both the 800 and 1500 meter races.

As the day wore on, UMass found itself 19 points behind with only five events left. After a rousing comeback, including the sweep of the top three places in the discus competition, the team came just short of accomplishing a winning record for the season up to this point.

How short?

In the 4 by 100 meter race, UMass got the second place time with a 44.6 second finish, behind Holy Cross' time by three–one hundreds of a second. This would have made the difference, but Coach O'Brien said that he is still pleased with the balance his team has showed.

Red Sox offense finally wins one

By ROB GLOSTER
Associated Press

BOSTON — Mo Vaughn and Tim Naehring twice hit back-to-back homers and Scott Cooper added a grand slam as the Boston Red Sox defeated the Oakland Athletics 13-5 Tuesday.

The Red Sox, who have beaten the A's seven straight times, hit six home runs, their most in a game since Aug. 12, 1981.

Vaughn and Naehring hit consecutive solo homers in the second and sixth innings. In each case, Vaughn homered to right field and Naehring followed with a shot that cleared the screen atop the left-field fence.

Naehring, who aiso had a run-scoring single in the fourth, and Vaughn each have four homers this season.

Cooper hit his first career grand slam in the third, two batters after Damon Berryhill walked with the bases loaded.

Mike Greenwell added a two-run homer in the eighth, for the Red Sox, who got a sacrifice fly from John Valentin later in the inning.

Aaron Sele (1-0) allowed three runs and seven hits in seven innings. Sele, who struck out eight, has never allowed more than three earned runs in any of his 21 major-league starts.

Ruben Sierra homered in the fourth for Oakland, his sixth, and the Athletics first hit of the game. Anthony Brumley singled in two runs later in the inning.

Troy Neel hit a two-run homer off reliever Greg Harris in the eighth for Oakland.

Oakland starter Bob Welch (0-1) allowed seven runs and six hits with four walks in 2 2-3 innings. He has not won since last Aug. 29, compiling an 0-5

The ♥ of the Matter

The special love between a mother and baby comes straight from the heart.

This supplement has been prepared and copyrighted by Human Life Alliance of Minnesota, Inc., 3570 Lexington Avenue North, Suite 302 • St. Paul, Minnesota 55126 • (612) 484-1040.

Dear Reader:

If you're in a crisis pregnancy, or know someone who is, please be assured that we understand the emotional trauma you are going through — the doubts, the fears, the sense of shame and frustration. We know the agonizing decisions you face and the pressures you feel.

At first blush, opting for an abortion probably sounds like the "quick-fix" solution to your problem. You need to be advised, as this supplement does in numerous articles, that abortion is not in your best interest. Those who have been telling you that it's a "women's rights" issue have been withholding critical information from you.

Actually, if you are subjecting yourself to the possible after-effects of abortion, as outlined on page eleven; or puting yourself in the position of being the anguished mother pouring out her heart from personal experience (also page eleven); or making yourself two to four times more prone to breast cancer (documented by recent research), shouldn't people who claim to be for women be warning you of these consequences?

Perhaps abortion isn't about women's rights after all! What then, or whom, is it about? The answer can be found within these pages.*

For instance, isn't it exciting to discover, as Dr. Jerome Lejeune points out on page four that the miniaturized language mapping out the new baby at the time of fertilization contains more information about him/her than can be stored in five sets (not volumes) of Encyclopedia Britannica?

*It is our hope that in reading this supplement and relating to the preborn child you will be convinced that abortion, besides not being in your best interest, is indeed an unjust, inhumane and irreversible destruction of an innocent human life. There are alternatives to such a drastic measure!

Is carrying your baby to term a manageable decision? Yes it is! Please refer to page five to realize the number of people and organizations ready and eager to help you. Don't hesitate to call on them, whatever your needs. The support is there to see you through your crisis pregnancy - and beyond!

Remember the decision you make will affect you for the rest of your life. Don't let anyone pressure you into a quick decision! We don't pretend to have an easy solution - but a just, manageable, rewarding one, one which you will not regret: continued life for your baby!*

The War of Words

Claim: Abortion is legal, therefore, it must be right.
Answer: If child abuse were suddenly declared legal by the U.S. Supreme Court, would that make it right? Would we ignore such an injustice and do nothing to protect the children?

Claim: I have the right to "choose" to abort my baby, a woman's "right to choose!"
Answer: Abraham Lincoln once said "No one has the right to choose to do what is wrong." Furthermore, the advocates who defend this "choice" are not consistent. Why is it only in the case of abortion they argue that "choice" should be legal and absolute? Using the same rationale, shouldn't people have the right to "choose" to use drugs ("It's my body") or the right to "choose" to practice prostitution? Should our society allow a person to "choose" to kill another person (or have that person killed) to solve the first person's problem?

Claim: The government should not interfere with a woman's "right" to abortion.
Answer: Our Declaration of Independence declares that we have an " inalienable right to Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Happiness." Thomas Jefferson defined government's role, "The care of human life and happiness, and not their destruction, is the first and only object of good government." Pres. Reagan, a defender of the human and civil rights of the preborn, called it "the transcendent right to life of all human beings, the right without which no other rights have any meaning." (Without life, taxation, health-care etc. are immaterial).

Claim: If public money (tax money) is not available to pay for abortions "poor" women will be denied access to abortion. They will be discriminated against.
Answer: Are we obligated to provide cigarettes and alcohol to poor people if they cannot afford them? On the contrary, government is very explicit about which items may be purchased with food stamps. Is this considered discrimination? The same people who argue for "public" subsidies for abortions are the same ones who argue that it is a "private" decision. To quote Congressman Henry Hyde, " We have a "right" of free speech. Does this mean the government has to buy us a personal computer? A typewriter? A megaphone?"

Claim: I am personally opposed to abortion, but I would not interfere with another's right to have an abortion nor impose my morality on others.
Answer: Analogy -- if President Lincoln and the abolitionists had bought this line of reasoning regarding the slavery issue, we could still be saddled with slavery today. Every law ever passed sets standards which reflect someone's (or a body of law-makers') morality.

Claim: You want to ban women's "constitutional right" to abortion.
Answer: This is a "spurious" or false "right" - having no basis in the constitution. The U.S. Supreme Court claims to have discovered a "privacy" right in the "penumbra" of the Constitution ("penumbra" definition: a partly lighted area around an area of full shadow). Court decisions (Roe v. Wade and Doe v. Bolton) are aberrations (deviations from truth) and do nothing more than grant temporary license to kill children in the womb, the most dangerous place of residence. This license is tenuous and could be over-ridden by reversal or an amendment to the U.S. Constitution. Indeed, to guarantee the permanent freedom of the slaves and establish rights for all U.S. "persons" the 14th Amendment to the Constitution was passed. It states, "...No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States: nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law." (emphasis added). In Roe v. Wade the Court determined that unborn children are not "persons" even though they have the right to inherit property and many other rights. Some states have entire sections of law outlining Crimes Against Unborn Children in which they, from conception on, are protected from negligent or willful harm or death.

Claim: If legal abortions are banned, women will resort to back alley abortions.
Answer: In 1972, the year before the Supreme Court legalized abortion, a total of 39 women died from illegal abortions, according to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control. Former abortion provider Carol Everett states, "In the last 18 months I was in the business, we were completing 500 abortions monthly and killing or maiming one woman out of 500" (p.10). If the numbers are this astounding for her four Texas clinics, it doesn't take an expert mathematician to figure out that the number of casualties happening nationwide at the over 3000 supposedly "safe" abortuaries would be in the high hundreds.

Claim: Abortion should be legal to end a pregnancy resulting from rape or incest.
Answer: It is important to remember that the child conceived in rape, or incest, is no less human than any other child. David Reardon's article, (page 8) points out that the very worst solution that can be offered to the pregnant woman at this crisis time in her life is an abortion. Abortion compounds the problem! If a small child were killed in the street by a negligent driver and it was later determined that the child had been conceived in rape, would the driver be held less responsible? Is that child's death less tragic?

Test Your Abortion I.Q.

1. On January 22, 1973 the U.S. Supreme Court legalized abortion through which month of pregnancy? A) 3rd month; B) 4th month; C) 6th month; D) 9th month

2. Since abortion was legalized in 1973 the number of preborn babies' lives extinguished by abortion is: A) 6 million; B) 12 million C) 30 million; D) 32 million

3. Abortion is the leading cause of death in the U.S., causing what percent of total deaths? A) 21%; B) 35%;C) 46%; D) 52%

4. Although African-Americans compose only 12% of the U.S. population, Black women are having what percent of the 1.6 million abortions performed each year: A) 16%; B) 32%; C) 35%; D) 49%

5. About 10 million Black children have been aborted since abortion was legalized. This is what fraction of the present Black population in the U.S.? A) one-eighth; B) one-fifth; C) one-third; D) one-half

6. Since 1960 the number of babies born out-of-wedlock has risen by what percent? A)60%; B) 105%; C) 250%; D) 419%

7. In the Black community what percentage of children are born to single mothers? A) 35%; B) 65%; C) 72%; D) 75%

8. With the advances in medical science the number of surgical procedures which are now performed on babies in the womb is: A) over 50; B) 80; C) 90; D) over 100

9. One out of every how many preborn babies is killed by abortion? A) two; B) three; C) four; D) six

10. What percent of abortions performed in the U.S. are repeat abortions? A)30%; B) nearly 40%; C) nearly 50%; D) 60%

11. What percent of women who have had abortions experience suicidal tendencies? A) 45%; B) 60%; C) 70%; D) 75%

12. A developing baby's heart begins to beat at: A) 21 days; B) 30 days; C) 45 days; D) 60 days

13) How many Americans now have an incurable sexually transmitted disease? A)20 million; B) 36 million; C) 56 million

14) Every year up to what number of U.S. women become infertile because of STDs? A)66,000; B)75,000; C)98,000; D)150,000

The answers to these questions can be found on p. 9.

Abortion is Legal During 7th, 8th and 9th Months

In Roe v. Wade the Court allowed states to restrict abortions in the 3rd trimester "except where it is necessary... for the preservation of life or health of the mother." However, in Doe v. Bolton, the companion case to Roe, the Court defined "health" to include "all factors - physical, emotional, psychological, familial, and the woman's age - relevant to the well-being of the patient." Because of this broad definition of "health" the Court, in effect, permitted abortion-on-demand in all fifty states right up until birth for any reason!

Chronology of a New Life

Fertilization: The sperm joins with the ovum to form one cell. This one cell contains the complex genetic blueprint for every detail of human development—the child's sex, hair and eye color, height, skin tone etc.

Month One: The first cell divides within several hours and then cell division continues in an orderly fashion every few hours as the small group of cells travels down the Fallopian tube to the uterus, where the uterine lining has been prepared for implantation. There are over 100 cells present when this tiny embryo reaches the uterus 7 to 10 days after fertilization. Day 20—foundations of the brain, spinal cord and nervous system are already established; day 21—the heart begins to beat in a regular fashion; day 28—the backbone, the rest of the skeleton, and muscles are forming—arms, legs, eyes and ears have begun to show. At one month old, the embryo is 10,000 times larger than the original fertilized egg — and developing rapidly. The heart is pumping increased quantities of blood through the system. The placenta forms a unique barrier that keeps the mother's blood separate, but allows food and oxygen to pass to the baby.

6 Weeks

Month Two: At 35 days the pre-born baby has all her fingers. Brainwaves can be detected at day 40; the brain is controlling 40 sets of muscles as well as the organs. The jaw forms including teeth buds in the gums. The eyelids seal during this time to protect the baby's developing light-sensitive eyes which will reopen in the seventh month. The stomach produces digestive juices and the kidneys have begun to function. The tiny human being responds to touch. By 8 weeks, the developing baby is now referred to as the fetus, a Latin word meaning "young one" or "offspring."

16 Weeks

Month Three: Day 63 (9 weeks): Unique fingerprints are evident and never change. The baby now sleeps, awakens and exercises her muscles by turning her head, curling her toes, and opening and closing her mouth - often sucking her thumb. Her palm, when stroked, will make a tight fist. She breathes amniotic fluid to help develop her respiratory system. By 12 wks. all the organs and systems of her body are functioning. The only major activity from now until birth is growth - the increase in her size.

Month Four: By the end of this month (16 weeks) the baby is 8 to 10 inches in length and weighs a half pound or more. Her ears are functioning, and there is evidence that the baby hears her mother's voice and heartbeat, as well as external noises. The umbilical cord has become an engineering marvel, transporting 300 quarts of fluids per day and completing a round-trip of fluids every 30 seconds. Because the preborn child is now larger, the mother usually begins to feel her baby's movements during this month.

Month Five: Half the pregnancy has now passed. The baby is about 12 inches long. If a sound is especially loud or startling, she may jump in reaction to it. Babies born at this stage of development (19 - 20 weeks) are surviving at an increasing rate thanks to advances in medical technology.

Month Six: (24 weeks): Oil and sweat glands are functioning. The baby's delicate skin is protected in the amniotic sac by a special ointment "vernix."

Month Seven: The baby's brain has as many cells as it will have at birth. The preborn child uses the four senses of vision, hearing, taste and touch. Research has documented that she can now recognize her mother's voice.

Month Eight: The skin begins to thicken, with a layer of fat stored underneath for insulation and nourishment. Antibodies increasingly build up. The baby swallows a gallon of amniotic fluid per day, more if it is sweetened. She often hiccups. She has been urinating for several months.

Month Nine: Toward the end of this month, the baby is ready for birth. The average duration of pregnancy is 280 days from the first day of the mother's last menstrual period, but this varies. By this time the infant's heart is pumping 300 gallons of blood per day. In response to signals from the brain the child triggers labor and birth occurs. Of the 45 generations of cell divisions before adulthood, 41 have taken place in the womb. Only four more will come - during the rest of childhood and before adolescence. In developmental terms we spend 90% of our lives in the womb.

Life Begins at Conception

Through the writings and testimony of the world-renowned geneticist, Dr. Jerome Lejeune, M.D., Ph.D., we can learn much about the intricacies of the beginning of human life. Contrary to the popular view that the tiny baby becomes more and more "developed" as the weeks of pregnancy go on, Dr. Lejeune says that the very first cell, the fertilized egg, is "the most specialized cell under the sun." No other cell will ever again have the same instructions in the life of the individual being created.

In the words of Dr. Lejeune, "Each of us has a very precise starting moment which is the time at which the whole necessary and sufficient genetic information is gathered inside one cell, the fertilized egg, and this is the moment of fertilization. There is not the slightest doubt about that and we know that this information is written on a kind of ribbon which we call the DNA."

The Doctor goes on to explain the composition of the DNA molecule of a human chromosome. "I would say it (the DNA molecule) is a long thread of one meter of length, cut in twenty-three pieces. Each piece is coiled on itself very tightly to make spiral of spiral of spiral so that finally it looks like a little rod that we can see under the microscope that we call a chromosome. And there are twenty-three of them carried by father, twenty-three of them carried by mother." When these 46 chromosomes unite at fertilization a new human being is created. According to Dr. Lejeune, "Nature has used the smallest possible language to carry the information from father to children, from mother to children, from generation to generation."

Dr. Lejeune talks at length about this "fantastically miniaturized language" which scientists have only recently been able to begin to read. He explains that the fertilized egg contains more information about the new individual than can be stored in five sets (not volumes) of the Encyclopedia Britannica (if enlarged to normal print). To further emphasize the minuteness of this language, Dr. Lejeune states that if all the one meter long DNA of the sperms and all the one meter long DNA of the ova which contain the instructions for the 5 billion human beings who will replace us on this planet were brought together in one place the total amount of matter would be roughly the size of two aspirin tablets.

When Dr. Lejeune testified in the Louisiana legislature (House Committee on the Administration of Criminal Justice, June 7, 1990) he stated, "Recent discoveries by Dr. Alec Jeffreys of England demonstrate that this information (on the DNA molecule) is stored by a system of bar codes not unlike those found on products at the supermarket...it's not any longer a theory that each of us is unique. It's now a demonstration as simple as a bar code in the supermarket." Dr. Lejeune states that because of studies published within the last year we now have the scientific know-how to determine within 3 to 7 days after fertilization if the new human being is a boy or a girl.

Dr. Lejeune discusses the stages of development of a new human being. He points out that during the process, as the cell develops, nothing new is learned by the developing cells, but progressively a lot of things are forgotten: the first cell knew more than the three-cell stage, and the three-cell stage knew more than any of those to follow. He explains that specialization begins at the two-cell stage. "At no time," he said, "is the human being a blob of protoplasm. As far as your nature is concerned, I see no difference between the early person that you were at conception and the late person which you are now. You were and are a human being."

In the testimony Dr. Lejeune gave on The Seven Human Embryos (Circuit Court for Blount County, Tennessee at Maryville, Equity Division, August 8-10, 1989) he compared the chromosome to a mini-cassette, in which a symphony is written, the symphony of life. He explained that if you buy a cartridge on which a Mozart symphony has been recorded and insert it in a player what is being reproduced is the movement of air that transmits to you the genius of Mozart. In making the analogy he said, "It's exactly the same way that life is played. On the tiny mini-cassettes which are our chromosomes are written various parts of the opus which is for human symphony, and as soon as all the information necessary and sufficient to spell out the whole symphony (is brought together), this symphony plays itself, that is, a new man is beginning his career...as soon as he has been conceived, a man is a man."

Legalized Abortion Based on Lies and Fraud

Norma McCorvey was the "Jane Roe" of Roe v. Wade.

Early in 1970 Norma Mccorvey claimed that she had been gang-raped and became pregnant. Attorneys Sarah Weddington and Linda Coffee, newly graduated from the University of Texas Law School, needed a "client" in order to challenge Texas' 100-year old law that banned abortions. They convinced Norma that she should be seeking an abortion instead of arranging an adoption for her child.

The case was subsequently argued all the way to the Supreme Court which resulted in legalizing abortion in all 50 states in 1973. In the meantime, the baby was born and released for adoption. In 1987, McCorvey admitted that she hadn't been gang-raped at all but the father was someone she knew and thought she loved. The story of the gang-rape was a lie.

While Roe v. Wade legalized abortion, on the same date, Doe v. Bolton provided for abortion-on-demand for the entire nine months of pregnancy and was the legal vehicle which provided Court sanction for the over 4000 abortion mills across the country.

Sandra Cano was "Mary Doe" of Doe v. Bolton

Sandra Cano now says she was an unwitting participant in fraud on the highest court in the land. Sandra was a young expectant mother with three children faeing a divorce from a husband who was in jail for child molestation. Cano's three children had been taken from her by family service workers. They were being shunted from one bad environment to another. Cano loved her children dearly. She was almost insane with grief when she turned to Legal Aid Services for help. The offer of N.O.W. lawyers to take the whole mess off her hands, obtain a divorce and regain custody of her children sounded too good to be true.

When the attorneys hinted that they would like to strike a deal which would include aborting the child Sandra was carrying she made it very clear that she could never do that. Yet, her attorneys ignored her objections and ran roughshod over her. When she realized her case had been used to obtain abortion-on-demand she said, "...why would I stretch my imagination to inelude a plan so bizarre that it would give people in a civilized society permission to kill their own babies? ... I surely never thought they would tie my personal anxieties about retrieving my children to a scheme to make abortion-on-demand legal." Ironically, the Cano baby, like the McCorvey baby, was carried to term and relinquished for adoption. Yet, 30,000,000 other babies have lost their lives to abortion because of these two cases.

Sarah Weddington was the Attorney

Sarah Weddington, the attorney who argued Roe v. Wade before the U.S. Supreme Court, gave a speech at the Education Ethics Institute in Oklahoma. She explained why she defended the sketchy story and false rape charge of a Texas waitress "Jane Roe" all the way to the Supreme Court: "My behavior may not have been totally ethical. But I did it for what I thought were the right reasons." Tulsa World 5/24/93.

Playboy Provided the Funding

Hugh Heffner, founder of Playboy claims to have done one great thing for women: "Playboy probably had more to do than any other company with Roe v. Wade. We supplied the money for those early cases and actually wrote the amicus curiae for Roe."

Do You Hear What I Hear?

"With no hype at all, the fetus can rightly be called a marvel of cognition, consciousness and sentience."

"She slides into the world with eyes alert, the tiny ridges of her ears living antennae scanning the conversation frequencies in the room. She finds her mother's voice with her ears, and her eyes."

The baby's alertness and awareness begins with early development in the womb. The preborn baby can hear and respond to sound. Car horns can make the baby jump. Her heartbeat quickens.

When Peter Hepper of Queens University in Belfast repeatedly played to 30-week-old fetuses the theme song from a popular soap opera, they relaxed. After birth, the babies became "quite alert" when they heard the tune.

"...When a loudspeaker -directs speech syllables at a mother-to-be's abdomen, the fetus's heart slows, a sign of attentiveness. The heartbeat speeds up as the fetus gets bored with the sounds, then slows again if new ones flow into the womb."

A fetus remembers some experiences and may alter her behavior as a result.

A Life Is Taken By Abortion...

Birthmother Opts for Adoption... The Loving Alternative

Lisa O.

It was the beginning of my junior year in high school. I was excited, looking forward to another year of diving, gymnastics and track. But this excitement quickly came to an end when I realized I was pregnant.

When the pregnancy was confirmed, my mind went racing. It wasn't enough to just say that I was scared - I was terrified! The idea of having an abortion was never a consideration for me. I could not live with the realization that I was responsible for taking the life of my child - a death because of my actions.

My first instincts told me that I needed to raise my child on my own. I knew I could love and care for a child, but when I stopped thinking about myself, and thought about what was best for my child, I knew adoption was the right decision. I was sixteen at the time. I wanted to go back to school for my senior year and wanted to participate fully, in sports etc. I wanted to go on to college.

I knew I could not do all of this and raise a child at the same time. I did not want to have to live with my parents indefinitely and depend on them for everything. I did not want them to be thrust into the role of prime care-givers for my child. It just would not be fair for any of us, for them, myself or the baby. I knew that placing my child for adoption would be the right thing to do, the loving alternative!

The adoption procedure I opted for is not your ordinary plan. I chose to do an independent open adoption. Through this process I was able to select from among the prospective adoptive parents. I had the opportunity to establish a personal relationship with them as well as to develop a lasting friendship. The more I got to know them the more excited I was about placing my baby with this couple. They had so much love and security to offer my child. They were there with me in the hospital when my son was born. Their video camcorder ran non-stop.

I will always treasure the three days I spent in the hospital with my son. Handing him over to his new parents was by no means easy, but I knew in my heart that this was the right decision for both of us.

Many tears were shed throughout the nine months and during the hospital stay. But, they were not all tears of sadness. I miss my son very much. I think about him every day and a smile comes to my face. I thank the Lord that He led me to two such special people to be adoptive parents for my child.

It has been several years since my son was born. He now has an adoptive sister. I keep in contact with the family through letters and pictures. I can't begin to explain the feelings of pride and contentment that I experience when I see the smile on his face.

I am now a junior in college majoring in paralegal studies. Relinquishing my son was the hardest decision I will ever have to make but I'm more confident than ever that it was the right one. While in the hospital I received a card which read, "Some people come into our lives, leave footprints on our hearts, and we are never the same." This is so true!

The Abortion Experience for Victims of Rape and Incest

by David C. Reardon

Rape and incest are very emotional topics. They often elicit in the general populace feelings of revulsion; people draw back from the issue of rape and incest, even from the victims of rape and incest. People don't know how to handle a person who is in that much pain. There is no quick fix....

Some people who are otherwise very pro-life will condone abortion in rape and incest cases because they don't know what else to offer. And they will accept it as a rare case. This pro-life difficulty in defending the unborn even in rape and incest cases is largely due to ignorance because the facts, as I have found them, show that the victim's needs are not being served by abortion. In fact, rape and incest victims actually suffer considerably from the abortion.

The facts suggest that only a minority of rape and incest victims actually choose abortion[1]—so right there, one should pause and reflect. Abortion is not usually chosen as the immediate solution by rape and incest victims but that is the prevailing belief of the general population. A woman has been raped and made pregnant: "Oh, she's got to have an abortion." No one has studied the rape and incest victims' needs; abortion is presumed to fill their needs.

Kathleen DeZeeuw states, "Having lived through rape, and also having raised a child "conceived in rape," I feel personally insulted and assaulted every time I hear that abortion should be legal because of rape and incest. I feel that we're being used by pro-abortionists to further the abortion issue, even though we've not been asked to tell our side."

The children conceived through sexual assault also have a voice which deserves to be heard. Julie Makimaa, conceived by an act of rape, works diligently against abortion. She believes every life has a value beyond measure, a purpose which only time can reveal. Not ashamed of her origin, Julie proudly proclaims: "It doesn't matter how I began. What matters is who I will become."

Abortion Adds to the Pain of Rape

Various studies and my own research indicate that rape and incest victims fall into the high-risk category of aborters, and the existence of rape or incest is actually a contradication for abortion. Jackie Bakker, whose testimony is in my book,[2] says, "I soon discovered that the aftermath of my abortion continued a long time after the memory of my rape had faded. I felt empty and horrible. Nobody told me about the emptiness and pain I would feel deep within causing nightmares and deep depressions. They had all told me that after the abortion I could continue with my life as if nothing had happened." This is the same story we hear from a lot of aborted women. But for the rape and incest victim it is an especially keen story, because they have been told, "In your situation that is the only thing you can do." And they have been betrayed by that advice.

Victims Gave Reasons to Forego Abortion

Perhaps the best study was done by Dr. Sandra Mahkorn, published in Psychological Aspects of Abortion[6] Dr. Mahkorn was an experienced rape counselor who, in 1979, identified 37 pregnant rape victims who were treated by a social welfare agency. Of these 37, only five chose to have an abortion. Of the 28 who gave birth, 17 chose adoption and 3 kept the child themselves; for the remaining eight, research was unable to determine where the child was placed.

Several reasons were given for not aborting. First, several women felt that abortion was another act of violence — that it was immoral or murder. One said she would only suffer more mental anguish from taking the life of a baby. Second, some saw an intrinsic meaning or purpose to the child. Somehow this child was foisted into their lives but, on the other hand, they sensed some sort of hidden purpose behind it. And although not responsible for having brought the child into being, it had happened, and the consequences could be lived with. Third, at a subconscious level, the rape victim feels that if she can get through the pregnancy she will have conquered the rape. Outlasting pregnancy shows she is better than the rapist who brutalized her. Giving birth, then, is the way rape victims seek to reclaim their self-esteem. It is a totally selfless act, a generous act, especially in light of the pressure to abort. It is a way for them to display their courage and strength to survive even a rape.

In her study, Mahkorn found that feelings or issues relating to the rape experience were the primary concern for most of the pregnant rape victims — not pregnancy. While 19% — a significant number — placed primary emphasis on their need to confront their feelings about the pregnancy, including feelings of resentment and hostility towards the unborn child, the primary difficulty they experienced with the rape pregnancy was pressure from other people who saw the pregnancy as a blot to be eliminated. Family and friends just weren't supportive of the woman's choice to bear the child.

Dr. Mahkorn also found that, in the group who carried their pregnancies to term, none, at the end of pregnancy, wished she had decided on an abortion. Abortion therefore inhibits the healing to the rape victim and reinforces negative attitudes.

Abortion Reinforces Women's Powerlessness

[A]nother example from my book is Vanessa Landry, another rape victim who said," I didn't really want to have the abortion. I have always been against abortion all my life. People think that whenever anyone is raped, they have to have an abortion. My social worker just kept telling me all kinds of things to encourage me to have the abortion. They didn't give me any other option except to abort. They said I was just another minority bringing a child into the world and there were too many already." Here is a woman who is being victimized not only because she is a rape victim, but also because she is black and a minority and she has a low income. That is one of the stories that upsets me the most.

Childbirth can be a victory. For the majority of pregnant rape victims who wisely choose to forego abortion, childbirth is the choice of triumph over rape. It is a choice that says, "Rape will not dictate

WHICH IS MORE VALUABLE?

AN UNBORN EAGLE

AN UNBORN CHILD

If you chose the unborn child, sorry you're wrong -- at least according to the law of the land, U.S. Code, Title 16, Section 668, the eagle takes precedence. A person who kills, damages, transports a bald eagle, its egg, or nest is subject to a fine of up to $5,000.00 or imprisonment for up to one year or both (first offense). Whereas, not only is there no penalty for aborting an unborn child, doctors get paid exorbitant fees for destroying the child in the womb.

Does something seem wrong to you? It is! If you are troubled by this injustice help us save the unborn babies and educate the public to the harsh realities of abortion. If you or someone you know is facing a crisis pregnancy, we'd like to help. We can refer you for specific needs. All human life is sacred! There are many alternatives to abortion!

Abortion Techniques Described

Suction-Aspiration: The method of abortion most commonly used for early pregnancies. The abortionist inserts a hollow plastic tube into the dilated uterus. The tube is connected to a powerful suction apparatus. The suction tears the baby's body into pieces.

Dilitation and curettage (D and C): Similar to the suction procedure except the abortionist inserts a tiny hoe-like instrument into the uterus. With this, the abortionist cuts the baby into pieces and scrapes him/her out into a basin. Bleeding is usually profuse.

Dilitation and evacuation (D and E): Used after 12 weeks. A pliers-like instrument is needed because the baby's bones are calcified, as is the skull. The abortionist inserts the instrument into the uterus, seizes a leg or other part of the body and, with a twisting motion, tears it from the baby's body. The spine must be snapped and the skull crushed in order to remove them from the womb.

Salt poisoning (saline injection): This is used after 16 weeks. A long needle is inserted through the mother's abdomen into the baby's sac. Some fluid is removed and a strong salt solution is injected. The solution is swallowed and "breathed" and slowly poisons the baby. He/she kicks and jerks violently as he/she is literally being burned alive.

Hysterotomy or Caesarean Section: Used mainly in the last three months of pregnancy, the womb is entered by surgery through the wall of the abdomen. The tiny baby is removed and allowed to die by neglect or direct act.

Prostaglandin chemical abortion: This form of abortion uses chemicals, developed by the Upjohn Pharmaceutical Co., which cause the uterus to contract intensely, pushing out the developing baby. In one article, one of the complications listed with this method was "live birth." In fact, the two most "dreaded" complications for an abortionist are a dead mother or a live baby.

Dilatation and Extraction (D and X) Late Term Abortions

(The authenticity of the following information has been confirmed in an article in the American Medical Association's Newsletter, American Medical News, in the July 5, 1993 edition).

At a September13-14, 1992 meeting of the National Abortion Federation, a trade association of abortion providers, an Ohio abortionist, Dr. Martin Haskell, described this new technique he has perfected. Unlike the D & E procedure whereby the preborn child is dismembered inside the mother's womb, with the D & X method the preborn baby is alive until the end of the procedure when the child is killed by suctioning the brain tissue through a hole at the base of the skull while the baby's head is still inside the uterus. Then the intact aborted child, minus brain content, is removed from the womb.

According to the paper presented by Dr. Haskell the procedure takes three days and begins with "dilation (and) MORE DILATION." The cervix is initially dilated to 9-11 mm. with mechanical dilators, in order to accommodate the placement of five to seven synthetic laminaria, Dilapan hydroscopic dilators, which remain in place overnight.

The following morning the Dilapan are removed and replaced with a second insertion of 15 to 25 dilators, again left overnight. The Dilapan process may cause severe cramping.

On the third day, after removing the dilators, the abortionist ruptures the membranes, if this has not already happened, and drains the amniotic fluid. The abortionist places an ultrasound transducer on the mother's abdomen and locates the child's legs and feet.

The abortionist then uses a large forceps to grasp one of the baby's legs. He pulls firmly, forcing the child into a feet-down position. He continues pulling until the baby's leg is drawn into the birth canal.

Next, using his hands instead of forceps, the abortionist delivers the baby's body in a manner similar to a breech birth. First, the child's other leg is delivered, followed by the torso, shoulders, and arms. The baby's head "usually" remains inside the uterus.

The abortionist then performs the last step which Dr. Haskell calls "fetal skull decompression." Using blunt-tipped surgical scissors in a closed position, he pierces the child's head at the base of the skull. He then forces the scissors open to enlarge the skull opening.

Removing the scissors, the abortionist inserts a suction catheter into the wound and vacuums out the child's brain tissue (in Dr. Haskell's words, "evacuates the skull contents") causing the baby's death. With the skull emptied of brains, it collapses and he then "applies traction to the (dead) fetus removing it completely from the patient."

Dr. Haskell has performed over 700 of these abortions on preborn babies as old as 26 weeks. Dr. Haskell refers to another abortionist, Dr. James McMahon of McMahon Med. Center and Eve Surgical Centers in Los Angeles and Tarzama, CA, who not only also uses this technique but sometimes uses it to abort preborn children up to 32 weeks "or more."

Barbara Radford, Executive Director of the National Abortion Federation said of this late-term abortion technique, in a 6/18/93 letter to NAF members, "Don't apologize: this is a legal abortion procedure."

How Developed Is Your Baby?

Baby at Approximately Six Weeks

This remarkable photograph of a tiny preborn baby in his unruptured amniotic sac was taken after surgery (for a tubal pregnancy) at the University of Minnesota by medical photographer, Robert Wolfe, in 1972. This picture demonstrates the remarkable early development of a preborn baby at only six weeks after conception.

Consider This Testimony

"Eleven years ago while giving an anesthetic for a ruptured ectopic pregnancy (at 8 weeks gestation). I was handed what I believe was the smallest living human ever seen. The embryonic sac was intact and transparent. Within the sac was a tiny human male swimming extremely vigorously in the amniotic fluid, while attached to the wall by the umbilical cord. This tiny human was perfectly developed, with long, tapering fingers, feet and toes. It was almost transparent, as regards the skin, and the delicate arteries and veins were prominent to the ends of the fingers.

"The baby was extremely alive and swam about the sac approximately one time per second, with a natural swimmer's stroke. This tiny human did not look at all like the photos and drawings and models of 'embryos' which I had seen, nor did it look like a few embryos I have been able to observe since then, obviously because this one was alive!

"When the sac was opened, the tiny human immediately lost his life and took on the appearance of what is accepted as the appearance of an embryo at this stage of life (with blunt extremities etc.)."

Statement by Paul E. Rockwell, M.D., anesthesiologist, as quoted by Dr. and Mrs. J.C. Willke in Handbook on Abortion.

Feet of Baby at Ten Weeks

Dr. Russell Sacco of Oregon took this picture of the perfectly formed feet of a 10-week-old aborted baby waiting for disposal in a pathologist's laboratory. The feet in the picture are held between the doctor's thumb and forefinger.

Don't Make My Mistakes

Michelle C.

Some people say that abortion is "an informed decision between a woman and her physician." You hear that a lot. But the fact is that most women never meet the abortionist until they are on the table, as happened in my case.

I was 18 years old when I got pregnant. I wasn't serious about my boyfriend. It was a casual relationship. Since I had already enlisted in the Air Force, I thought I had to have an abortion in order to make something out of my life.

My best friend drove me to the abortion clinic. I was there for about four hours. It was like an assembly line. When the ultrasound was being done I asked to see it. But this wasn't allowed (so much for "an informed decision"). Then I asked how far along I was. I was told I was nine-and-a-half weeks pregnant. That hit me hard. I knew then that my baby was further developed than I had thought. I started doubting, and wanted to talk to my friend. But I wasn't allowed to do that either.

When it was my turn the nurse told me that I was going to feel some discomfort, like strong menstrual cramps. The truth is that the abortion was more pain than I've ever felt in my life. It felt like my insides were literally being sucked out of my body. Afterwards I went into shock!

After the abortion, I tried to make up for the abortion by trying to get pregnant again. I wanted my baby back. I never got pregnant again. I don't know if I can ever have another baby. I named my baby. I found out later that this is part of the grieving process.

I ended up in the hospital with bulimia two-and-one-half years later. I felt that no one had punished me for what I had done so I was punishing myself. I became obsessed with women who were pregnant, with women who would talk about their pregnancy. My life was in shambles! I was suffering from post-abortion trauma.

When I was 21 years old God brought me help through a woman who was involved in pro-life activism. She helped me a lot. I went through a post-abortion counseling program called "Conquerors." God not only forgave me, He challenged me to help others . I answered the challenge!

I started picketing and sidewalk counseling. There is a healing process that comes from getting involved in the pro-life movement. I talk to youth groups and students about abstinence and I share my testimony. To them, and to you, I plead, "Please don't make the same mistakes I did."

Michelle

U.S./Korea to engage in war games

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Large-scale war games for tens of thousands of U.S. and South Korean troops will be held this fall unless North Korea drops its objection to full inspections of its nuclear program, officials said Wednesday.

On a day when the U.S. and South Korean governments sought publicly to play down the prospect of actual hostilities with the North, officials said they were reinstating plans for the annual "Team Spirit" exercise because North Korea last month blocked inspection of its suspected nuclear arms project.

There was no word on exactly how many U.S. and South Korean troops would take part in the maneuvers. In past years the exercise has involved more than 100,000 troops.

North Korea has condemned Team Spirit as a provocation and a central obstacle to settling a range of issues with the South and with Washington, including a long-running dispute over whether the North is developing nuclear weapons.

Zulus to participate in election

PRETORIA, South Africa (AP) — Zulu leader Mangosuthu Buthelezi broke a political deadlock Tuesday by agreeing to take part in next week's election, giving South Africa its first hope of peaceful balloting and an end to years of violence.

"This agreement is a leap forward for peace ... A bright future awaits our land," African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela declared after a two-day summit culminated in the announcement.

Mandela, Buthelezi and President F.W. de Klerk struck a deal whereby Buthelezi's Inkatha Freedom Party will be added to the ballots for the April 26-28 elections. Buthelezi had threatened to boycott the vote unless he won guarantees of autonomy for his KwaZulu black homeland.

"We had to carry them into this agreement kicking and screaming ... It's good for South Africa. Let the violence now stop," de Klerk told a campaign rally in the southeastern city of Port Elizabeth late Tuesday.

Christopher to travel to Middle East

WASHINGTON (AP) — With peace talks in a lengthening recess, Secretary of State Warren Christopher is going to the Middle East on Sunday with hopes the Arabs and Israel will return in early May prepared to make "hard decisions."

Christopher's trip, to be announced later today, is timed to the expected conclusion of an agreement between Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization to begin Palestinian self-rule on the West Bank and in Gaza.

But even that accord is somewhat elusive. Negotiations in Cairo are near conclusion but not yet over, and Israel's negotiators are seeking guidance from their government in Jerusalem.

The agreement was to have been completed April 13. Mounting violence in the area, including an attack on a mosque in Hebron and bombings of Israeli buses, are blamed for the slowdown.

Clinton holds Serbs responsible

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton declared Wednesday that Serb forces responsible for the carnage in the Muslim enclave of Gorazde "must pay a higher price" for their unrelenting attacks. He called for more aggressive NATO air strikes to stop assaults on safe havens throughout Bosnia.

Acknowledging that the situation in Gorazde is increasingly grim, Clinton urged NATO to ban all heavy weapons from Gorazde and other designated areas, as was done last month to break the siege of Sarajevo.

Clinton, at a White House news conference, said the Sarajevo approach was best despite apprehension among some allies.

Angry students rally against insert

By GERI SAHN
Collegian Staff

In response to an anti-abortion paid advertisement in Wednesday's Massachusetts Daily Collegian, a crowd of approximately 200 people rallied on the Student Union Steps to speak out against the paper's decision to display the ad.

The ad was a 12-page advertisement inserted into the Collegian. It was titled "She's a child not a choice," and had articles, pictures and statistics about abortion.

Melanie DeSilva, a social thought and political economy/communications major and a member of the Progressive Organization for Women's Rights, began the protest talking about the Collegian. She said the campus needs to "expose the Collegian's callousness towards women."

DeSilva said the anti-abortion advertisement was another example of the Collegian's bias against women. "Why do I only see one side of the debate on this issue? Whose lives does the Collegian care about? The Collegian should be absolutely embarrassed for printing this," DeSilva said.

DeSilva said the Collegian has not been equal with their choices of what advertisements they run. She referred to the past controversy over an ad for Anthony's, a Springfield strip bar. DeSilva, in response to the advertisement, tried to run a protest ad next to the Anthony's ad. Her advertisement was refused.

Michael Morrissey, the editor-in-chief of the Collegian, said, "We have a general common-sense policy. As long as it doesn't slander the Collegian or another paid advertisement, the advertisement can run."

Floyd Abrams, a First Amendment lawyer and legal counsel to the New York Times, said, "They have no basis for criticizing the Collegian for opening up its pages to people who have contrary and perhaps wrong-headed views."

Stacy Malone, also a member of P.O.W.E.R., said the Collegian degrades women. "The last thing I wanted to see 9 a.m. in the morning is a fetus in my face. The Collegian keeps denying women. The women on this campus won't let the Collegian get away with this," Malone said.

Joy Collins, a UMass junior, Collegian staff member and a former women's issues editor, also spoke against the ad in the newspaper. She said the environment at the Collegian is difficult to work in as a woman. Collins also said she voted against the ad.

Darienne Hosley, managing editor of the Collegian, said, "In the three years I have been here, I have seen a large number of women with power in this newsroom. Last semester, for example,

Armenians' plight pondered this week

By SHAMELE STRAUGHTER
Collegian Correspondent

Yesterday students gathered together to discuss the current dilemma that is facing Armenians as they fight for the independence of Karabaugh, a war-torn territory which is fighting Azerbaijan to become an autonomous republic.

Sponsored by the UMass Armenian Students' Club, the discussion was the first of this week's events that are scheduled to honor the beginning of the Armenian Genocide. The genocide began 79 years ago this week, with a Turkish advancement in which over two million Armenians were killed.

The discussion began with a bootleg video produced by an Israeli Journalist of Monte Melkoian, an Armenian-American who returned to his homeland to become a commander in the resistance movement against Azerbaijan.

The video depicted the lack of necessities such as food and electricity that are unavailable to the Armenians living in Karabagh because of the surrounding Azerbaijani blockade. Melkoian said the Armenian situation in Karabagh is "more than a violation of human rights. The ability to survive is taken."

The event then shifted to Antranig Kasbarian, former editor of The Armenian Weekly, a political theorist who spent time in Karabagh as a news correspondent in the resistance movement. Although Kasbarian noted that there is nothing like "being there and feeling the movement on your skin," the slide show allowed the audience to visually comprehend the resistance movement.

According to Kasbarian, a typical scene in the Karabagh communities is large amounts of women and unsupervised children. Absent from the picture are men who have been either killed or continuing to fight in the resistance.

However, there is an increasing number of women entering into combat positions. There was a "sense of pride that everyone is playing their role. It's a people's war."

The audience was sobered by the unsanitary conditions of the hospitals in Karabagh. However the insect-infested and smoke-filled hospital environment did not deter the fighting spirit of the Armenian soldiers as the waited to recuperate to go back to the battle lines.

Kasbarian ended his lecture by connecting the current genocide of Armenians taking place in Karabagh to the genocide that took place 79 years ago. Kasbarian insisted the Azerbaijans are following the same racists beliefs of the Turks and the elimination of Armenians is once again taking place.

BOG cited for 'inefficiency'

SGA attorney general targets 'unresponsive' Board

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: This is the second in a series of stories concerning the Board of Governors.

One of the major causes of the decision to restructure the Board of Governors at the University of Massachusetts is the result of the Board's recent inefficiency and failure to fulfill its duties, according to the attorney general of the Student Government Association.

"I think that the [BOG] was clearly inefficient and unresponsive to student needs as their forum indicates, as their minutes indicate and as their record in the last year and a half indicates," said Matthew Malone. "The GSS lack of participation points to it, and six of their own governors point to it."

The SGA worked in part with the BOG and formed a committee to reconstruct the Board. The SGA drafted a proposal to change the BOG into the Student Union/ Campus Commission, an 18-member board whose members will be appointed.

"The SGA introduced a proposal that did not substantively change from what was proposed by their own committee, it just reduced the number of committee members and made them appointed," Malone said.

"The proposal brought greater accountability, greater cost effectiveness, and greater efficiency to the Board," Malone said. "And it tries to make the Board responsible to the Senate and, therefore, to the student populations as a whole."

The structure of the new Commission will also try to correct some of the problems BOG is currently having.

"What has happened was that BOG sort of got out of their role, and did programming and got political," said Jeremy Hathoway, SGA Budgets Committee Chair.

"When the Republicans took over in 1991 and kicked the Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Association seats off and did some other things, they started getting out of their realm of advocating for students."

"Bill Harris, the Campus Center Director, has taken on a paternal relationship with the BOG. Right there, that's not good" Hathoway said.

"I envision a student group that's supposed to keep Harris, Building Services, the Campus Center, Student Union Administration in check, to make sure student voices come across to them."

Malone cited the BOG's minutes from last semester which detailed an incident regarding payroll which was of great concern to the SGA.

"The minutes of their last meeting of the fall semester read that the chair inquired as to whom would like to be paid for the break," Malone said. "After those interested indicated that they wanted to be paid, the BOG then proceeded to create tasks for them, none of which were ever executed."

"In the end only three were paid over this last intersession," Malone said. "SGA took serious issue with this because they were clearly doing this in the opposite manner in which payroll ought to be allocated."

The recent inefficiency of the BOG is also noted in their minutes from last year.

"BOG made 30 decisions in the fall of 1993," Malone said. "According to their minutes, 24, or 80 percent, of their decisions were to either approve their minutes, open elections or suspend the rules, etc. They were of an internal nature."

"The majority of the six decisions, 20 percent, made by the BOG that were of an external nature were to create small ad hoc committees to address specific issues," Malone said. "Some of these ad hoc committees never even met."

The BOG's Two by Two Ad Hoc Committee was charged with reviewing hotel policy, such as the size of bath towels, according to Malone.

"So essentially what it came down to was this: SGA was a little concerned that the roof of the Collegian was collapsing, and the Board of Governors was discussing the size of bath towels," Malone said.

Golden Key students are source of pride

By HEATHER REDFERN
Collegian Correspondent

Photo albums and numerous plaques honoring the achievements of Golden Key National Honor students clutter the office of Associate Dean of Students and Advisor to the Golden Key Honor society, Gladys Rodriguez.

Recipient of the "Advisor of the Year Award" at the North East Regional Conference this year for her dedication and enthusiasm, Rodriguez has been advisor of the UMass chapter for the past four years.

"I'm very proud of these students. They're already there. It's not like I have to watch them flourish," said Rodriguez.

Golden Key recognizes juniors and seniors who are in the top 15 percent of their class. Approximately 400 to 500 students of all majors are inducted into the society each year.

As a non-profit organization, the main focus of this group Rodriguez said is placed on student leadership and service to the community and the University.

"This group brings out special skills in students," said Rodriguez.

Holocaust survivor shares story

By LISA GREENFIELD
Collegian Staff

A crowded Mahar auditorium was silent on Tuesday, April 19, as Holocaust Survivor Solomon Perel spoke of his unique life experiences.

The University of Massachusetts-Amherst Hillel, Five- College Hillel, The UMass Arts Council and the UMass Cultural Enrichment Fund brought Perel to speak as a belated close to the Holocaust Memorial Week.

Perel's story, immortalized in the film Europa, Europa, describes how a young Jewish boy passed as a Nazi soldier.

"I experienced the Holocaust not among my people ... I lived four years among the enemy," said Perel.

At the age of 14, Perel, known as Shlomo, fled with his brother Isaac to Eastern Poland. Leaving his parents, Perel said, was the most traumatic part of his story. Upon leaving, his father advised in Yiddish, "Don't forget ever who you are." His mother said, "You must live."

Perel said, "For my surviving I had to pay a price ..." It is a price he is still paying today. To survive, he had to forget who he was — he had to disguise himself and become someone else.

Perel was taken to a German prison which he described as a crucial and overwhelming experience. He realized that when asked if he was a Jew or not, he would be killed if he told the truth.

> "I experienced the Holocaust not among my people ... I lived four years among the enemy."
> — Solomon Perel

Perel said, "a wonderful angel came to me," and gave him the confidence to answer that he was a German.

At that point, Perel assumed the identity of Josef, a German soldier. He explained the difficulty of not only assuming the role of a Nazi, but becoming someone else.

On the front lines of the war, Perel saw how they killed Jews and remembers looking into their eyes during the last minutes of their lives. "My heart was bleeding, but tears flowed inside," he said of his alienation.

After a year on the front lines, Perel spent a year in an elite Hitler-Youth academy.

During a Christmas break, Perel felt the conflict of his two identities, when he tried to find his parents in the Lodz ghetto. "It was a confrontation between my two worlds, the Nazi world and the Jewish world."

On a train crossing through the ghetto, he said that he saw the face of a female he thought could be his mother, but he could never be sure." Perel later found out that his mother died in a gas chamber.

Perel said at the end of the war he fell into an American prison where he was beaten, abused and harassed. He said he was disappointed that Germany lost the war because it was "too difficult to come out of the skin of the enemy in which I lived."

The ongoing process of coming to terms with his ordeal took 40 years before he could share it with others.

Perel has complicated feelings about his other identity, Josef. On one hand, he said, "I hate him, he's a Nazi. I want him out of me ... all my trying is unsuccessful." Yet he also said, "I love Josef the Hitler boy, he saved my life."

Within the context of his life history, Perel spoke of the holocaust as, "Not only a Jewish problem, not only a German problem. It's a universal problem ..."

Hillel House draws students

By CYNTHIA LARSEN
Collegian Correspondent

Set back from campus, but still only a walk away to all classes, is the Jewish Living Center, Hillel House. Hillel has been a vital part of the Jewish community on campus for the past four years.

Even though Hillel House is called a Jewish Living Center, this does not mean that one must be Jewish to live there. Hillel is also an option for Judaic Studies majors, people interested in Jewish events, or those who are attracted to the living arrangements available through Hillel. In fact, of the 20 residents living at Hillel, four of them are not Jewish.

One of the non-Jewish residents, Joe Martin, said he was attracted to Hillel House because of the size. "There are so few residents that everyone here knows each other. We generally hang around with each other and are all friends."

Martin said another aspect unique to Hillel is the sense of community the residents share. That includes the different activities, events and chores residents take part in. Every week a different resident is assigned the responsibility of making sure the kitchen and lounge areas are clean. Many of the residents, however, described it as just "taking part in the community that you live in."

Hillel House does not have a separate meal plan, but they do offer Kosher meals from Thursday through Sunday in their downstairs kitchen. The kitchen offers a Thursday lunch, Friday dinner and a Sunday brunch and dinner. The meals are available to all UMass students, not just Hillel residents, for a small fee.

This spring, many of the residents and Hillel staff are planting a garden. The fresh vegetables harvested from the garden will be used in many of the meals cooked in the kitchen.

The upstairs kitchen, located on the same floor as the residents' rooms, is a milk kitchen. This means no meat is allowed there, due to the Kosher food law that meat and milk may not be mixed at the same meal. There is also the option of one of three UMass meal plans, for those whose cooking skills reach no further than bringing water to a boil.

Some say it is easier to get a single room in Hillel than it is on campus. This attracted one female resident who said she liked the idea of having her own room — a room that is off campus but with the accessibility as if it were on campus. She said she had only one complaint, "The walls here are thin, which at times makes it noisy."

And the cost? Living at Hillel next semester will cost $1,150 or $2,300 to guarantee a single. The cost to live on campus is approximately $1,030 for a double.

For more information or an application for Hillel Housing, call Hillel House at 549-1710.

75 percent were women."

"I feel more comfortable and see more opportunity for advancement here than I have in any other place I have worked. The people who made the decision to have the ad were mostly women," Hosley said.

Both Malone and DeSilva were Collegian staff members. They resigned after they signed a petition protesting the Anthony's ad in the Collegian. Morrissey said whether Collins will be forced to resign is being discussed.

Mirran Raphaely, president of the Student Government Association, announced that there was a petition going around to fire the executive board of the Collegian. "We could have the board of executives fired immediately," she said. Raphaely later said, "I don't see life without choice."

Al Lizana, student trustee, also spoke against the Collegian for running the ad. He said it was another type of propaganda on campus that is controlled by money.

"Ms. Raphaely's assertion [that the executive board could be fired] is not only totally false, but it is also disheartening for me to hear a member of the Student Government stick their nose into an issue that they have no reason to," Morrissey said.

"The executive board are the highest decision makers. No one can fire them. I can't fire myself," he said.

Many women and men from the crowd also spoke their opinions about the abortion issue. Many people felt the ad was very offensive.

"My son was denied that special relationship between a mother and son because I had him when I was so young," said Arlene Avakian, a women's studies professor.

The decision to run the ad was made by the Collegian's executive board last semester. The decision was a 5-2 vote. Morrisey said the advertisement was a business decision. Human Life Alliance of Minnesota Inc. paid $935 for the ad, and the advertisement lists the address and phone number for Massachusetts Citizens for Life Charitable Trust.

"We're going to make their life a living hell," Malone said of the Collegian.

SGA removes seven senators for no-shows

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Student Government Association meeting had to be canceled last night because not enough senators showed up.

"All of the senators are supposed to come for one night a week and they don't even show. It's just disgusting."
— SGA Senator Andrew Berenson

The SGA meetings have ended early each of the past two weeks because some of the senators left early, causing a lack of quorum. SGA meetings can only be held if at least one more than half of the senators are present. Last night, fewer than 40 of the 73 senators attended.

Senator Christine Lopes said she thinks the reason senators have not been showing up is that some people become senators without realizing how much work it involves.

"I think a lot of senators, not all, but a lot of senators become senators so they can put it on their resume, and then when they realize how much responsibility it is they try to work around it," Lopes said. "I'm not upset with the leadership of the SGA, but the membership. I respect the SGA's ideas, but I don't have respect for the people who decided to take the night off."

Lopes, who is also the SGA speaker's assistant, said she is so upset she might quit.

Senator Andrew Berenson was just as angry.

"It's [expletive] sad," Berenson said. "All of the senators are supposed to come for one night a week and they don't even show. It's just disgusting."

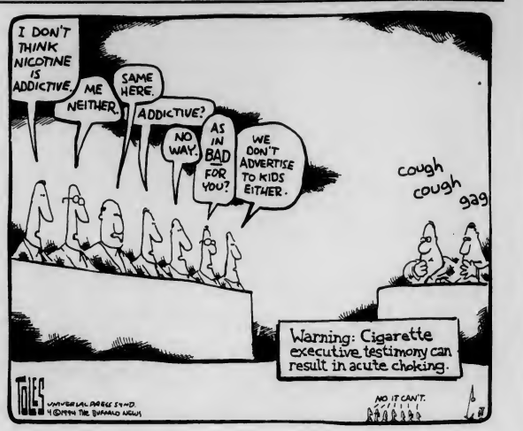
For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:00 p.m. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. Letters to the editor are encouraged and will be printed on a space-available basis. All submissions must be typed, kept to a maximum of 400 words, and should include the writer's name, address, year and major, as well as a phone number for verification purposes. The Collegian reserves the right to edit submissions for grammar, clarity and length. Persons wishing to submit guest columns should contact the Editorial/Opinion editor in advance. The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily represent those of the Collegian. Unsigned editorials reflect the majority opinion of the Editorial Board. Our reader are entitled to one free copy of the Collegian each day. Additional copies are available at a cost of $10 each.

First Amendment expert supports Collegian

The decision by the Collegian to publish the paid pro–life insert as an advertisement, to discuss it in a news story and to criticize it editorially is one worthy of praise and respect. It is in the highest tradition of the First Amendment.

To say this is not to say that the insert is persuasive or correct; I disagree with it, just as the Collegian itself has editorially. But nothing is more central to our concept of free expression than that we permit the expression of views with which we differ, even views that we loathe. A newspaper is not obliged, legally or morally, to publish every advertisement submitted to it. But as a general matter, it should lean in the direction of offering its readers more views, not fewer — particularly, I would say, when it is a college newspaper. When such a newspaper chooses to publish an insert setting forth views with which it differs, it should be honored.



Reasonable people can disagree about which advertisements should sometimes be accepted and which rejected. Should the advertisements containing the lies that the Holocaust ever occurred be published in college newspapers? Even that is a close call, one that has led different newspapers to make different choices. The choice of the Collegian to publish an anti–choice advertisement was an easier one. However persuaded we may be to the merits of this issue, it is undoubtedly one that continues to divide our people on moral grounds. Why not take all steps to assure all sides are heard? That is what the Collegian has done.

A final note. While the decision about which advertisement should be run by a newspaper is sometimes a close one, even the notion of punishing those who decide to do so is an affront to the First Amendment. In a state school, it may be worse. Any such action may be unconstitutional, may well lead to litigation, might well lead to damages being imposed on those who use their official positions to punish others for exercising their First Amendment rights.

Toleration of views that anger us is one of the prerequisites of living in our often deeply divided society. That is why we allow people to burn flags or even crosses. It is imperative that that lesson be learned throughout our society and, most particularly, on our campuses.

State needs a graduated tax

"A flat tax rate helps the wealthy. A graduated tax helps the middle class ... we wish the campaign success."
— Springfield Union News

If you are yawning about the elections this fall in Massachusetts, there is one issue on the ballot that should peak your interest. The issue is tax fairness and its supporters, the Tax Equity Alliance, have come up with a revolutionary idea.

Their revolutionary idea is for Massachusetts to have the same kind of tax structure as the rest of the country. It is very simply to let the rich pay more than the middle class, and the middle class pay more than the poor. In other words, it is a graduated income tax which asks those who have more to pay more.

Neil Carpenter

Right now, Massachusetts is one of the few states in America that has a flat state income tax. This means that someone who takes in $20,000 a year in income and someone making $2,000,000 pay the same percentage of their income (a little over five percent) to the state in taxes. When combined with local property taxes (which are charged regardless of income level), the middle class in Massachusetts pay double the percentage of their income to the government than the well-off.

The concept of cutting taxes for the middle class and poor and to increase taxes on those more well-off sounds very familiar. In fact, it sounds a lot like the Clinton campaign and their middle class tax cut. However, the Tax Equity Alliance has put their plan itself on the ballot, so you are being asked to vote for the plan — not the politician.

When and if the plan is passed by the majority of Massachusetts voters on November 3, 1994, the new rates will automatically go into law. There is no middle man and no deficit reduction to worry about as a competing interest either. In fact, Gov. Weld is proposing a tax cut for the wealthy this year. So the graduated tax plan will still leave money left over to fund important services — like higher education.

A graduated income tax has been in place in most other states for many years now, so why hasn't it come to Massachusetts until now? The first reason is simple: money. This plan will cost wealthy Baystaters some bucks, so they logically buy TV time to fight against it. Their ads describe how a graduated tax would destroy the economy.

Many working class folks who might have benefited from tax relief swallow the flat tax line because they don't have any other information to go by. In fact, the graduated income tax proposals have historically received the least voter support in low-income areas of the state where those people have the most to gain but are the least well-informed about politics.

The second response against a graduated income tax is more substantive, "Tax the rich and they will move to New Hampshire!" At first glance, this makes sense unless you know that a commuter who lives in N.H. but works in Massachusetts still have to pay Massachusetts taxes. Second of all, N.H. is one of the few states that doesn't have any kind of income tax at all, but all the well–off people from Massachusetts haven't left to seek greener pastures yet.

Gov. Weld, who strongly opposed the plan, actually commissioned a study of the graduated income tax to see if would cause rich people to leave the state. The answer that came back from his own economist at Brandeis College, much to his chagrin, was no.

Weld says the graduated tax is a bad idea for Massachusetts because it will hurt the economy but he has no proof, and all the experiences from other states suggest he is just flat wrong. Gov. Weld is ideologically attracted to the slogan misproven in the 1980s: "What's good for the wealthy is good for America." The graduated income tax is a perfect example of why he's wrong.

Spring brings protest rallies

This week, I've decided to change the name of this esteemed column to Hypocrisy from the Student Union Steps in honor of the oh–so–lovely rally that took place yesterday.

Let me get this off my chest: I do not support your view. However, I staunchly support your right to congregate and demonstrate your opinion. I do not ask you to support my view or anyone else's, but you absolutely cannot get mad to the point where you are foaming at the mouth about someone expressing their views just because they're not what you want to hear. That's childish, it's out there, deal with it.

Freedom of expression really isn't a tricky thing.

If you want to call me a no–manners–having, woman– hating, oppressive male with absolutely no future, you have that right. If I want to call you an insane bitch, I have that right, too.

By the way, I don't hate women. You can ask my mother, but you have to time it right — my father and I decided she's only allowed to talk between the hours of 4–5 p.m. during the week. We did, however, extend her weekend privileges until 5:30 p.m. due to good behavior.

* * * * *

I was relieved to see the "Ban the Minuteman" rabble rousers were able to take advantage of yesterday's political fervor to once again promote their agenda (Ooooh, there's that dreaded "a" word).

The other day I tried to milk a dead cow, and it just didn't work.

* * * * *

Kudos galore go to Student Trustee Al Lizana and SGA President Mirran Raphaely for their performances at yesterday's little soiree.

Really, guys, you can relax now. You won the election. Time to quit the butt–kissing and concentrate on the in–house fighting.

* * * * *

How bitterly ironic all of this went down the same day the Girl Scouts set up shop to sell cookies on the Campus Center concourse.

Such impressionable young minds. I hope nobody told the leftist feminists — those girls are too young to know they're oppressed. I don't want to have to deal with a bunch of sash–wearing, man–hating young women screaming systematic, patriarchal oppression next time I don't buy a box of Tag–Alongs.

"How was your day at UMass? Did you learn anything?"
"Oh, yes. It was wonderful. I learned all about abortion and how I should hate men. Can I go back tomorrow?"

What a beautiful introduction to the UMass way of life.

* * * * *

Serious beef here. Let me first say that I have the utmost respect for John Edgar Wideman and his work. His daughter is a nifty point guard, too.

For those of you who don't know, Wideman, a professor in the English department here, has been chosen to be the keynote speaker at commencement exercises May 22.

This is typical UMass garbage. Don't they realize that if I wanted to hear Wideman speak I'd take his class or go to his office hours? He has no business speaking at this commencement.

Wideman would be an ideal commencement speaker if this were any other school (we can always dream), but the stark fact is this is UMass and he's a professor here so he should not be considered a proper keynote speaker.

Is it me or does everybody notice that the postal workers who work at the post office near Bart's are a hundred times more courteous than the ones who work at the one near Price Chopper?

Those bastards at the latter made me lick 183 stamps the other morning all for the low, low price of $73.81. This after I was up for 30 straight hours doing my cover letters and resumes. I still can't open my mouth, but lucky for you I can still type.

Another satisfied customer.

Who was the prankster who came up with the bright idea of putting that little six–inch dip in the pavement between the library (does it have a name yet?) and South College?

Com'ere, I got something for you.

* * * * *

It's time to bring back Joe Morgan.

I respect the effort of former Undergraduate Student Speaker Matt Pavesi trying to gather signatures so he can take them to the State House to lobby for better funding for the University.

But you had some absolute bozo with you the other day openly taunting and verbally attacking people who did not sign the petition. Way to go, buddy. As long as you're not alienating anyone.

Letters to the Editor

Editor's note: Due to space constraints, the Collegian is unable to print all the letters submitted regarding the pro– life advertisement which was distributed with yesterday's paper. The following excerpts were taken from several of the letters which were submitted yesterday afternoon.

To the editor:
Newspapers are supposed to give accurate, impartial information about current events and issues; that's why they're called newspapers. If the Collegian wants to print articles on controversial issues to provoke debate, fine — but do me a favor and keep them on the editorial page.

Now, I understand this is a paid advertisement, and the views do not necessarily represent those of the Collegian, but this doesn't explain why you accepted and printed it. Did you read this thing? It claims "that a child conceived in rape is no less human than any other child." Not only are women the victims of rape and incest at horrifying rates, we are expected to carry these pregnancies to term, re–living our victimization on a daily basis.

There are not words strong enough to express my absolute disgust with this insert and with the Collegian for printing it. I assure you that reading the Collegian will no longer be part of my daily routine. I only wish it cost money so I could stop buying it.

Tina Cincotti
Freshman

To the editor:
I must express to you that the pro–life supplement included in the Collegian is unacceptable. A blatant disregard for the public interest and the insensitivity to that interest is not a reflection of a representational publication. What this supplement represents is an opinion, a 12–page editorial that I am supposed to be fooled into believing is a subjective view of one group who paid to have this "advertisement" included with our University's publication.

The influence of the press is a powerful tool and should be handled with responsibility. The freedom of press was instituted to thwart oppression, not perpetuate it. The abuse of the right to free press has the ability to oppress the voices of those who do not govern the pages of our representation. This "business" decision is a weak and irresponsible excuse for personal politics stuffing the pages of our paper.

Rachel Cunningham
English senior

To the editor:
At yesterday's rally, a woman went on a tirade about the hatred and denial of access to the Collegian that women suffer from despite the prominent representation of woman editors on the paper, including the managing and news editor positions. Simply because these women might not agree with you doesn't erase their views from this contention nor should it warrant dismissing their worth.

Most prominently, the issue of free choice was voiced rather vehemently by the speakers and the crowd throughout the rally, yet the ralliers failed to recognize the simple concept that every single reader, advertiser, editor, journalist and radical advocate has the right to their own opinion and to read or not read what they choose.

Michael F. Guthrie
Journalism/political science junior

To the editor:
Freedom of speech has always been especially important to me. However, since I have been at UMass I have come to see things in a new light. Freedom here refers to whatever is "liberal," whatever goes with the flow.

I have also come to realize that diversity means much the same thing. It no longer refers to the acceptance of differences, but has come to mean whatever fits into the norm the University has created. Yes, even "liberalism" can become the norm.

I look around at the people around me sometimes and I am disgusted. Everyone in this world is struggling to be heard, and UMass is a great place to do that. But who has the right to step on toes? No one does. No one person or group of people was ever given the right to trap my brain or padlock my mouth. That is what "freedom" is all about.

Who do you support? Stand up and yell it out! Maybe if you listen to the person next to you, you might learn something new. But let them yell, too. Take the cotton out of your ears and the plug from your mouth, and stop living the double standard.

Minorities face choice in UMass Greek area

By CATHERINE B. PULLEY
Collegian Staff

You are finally a college freshman. You come to the university and say good–bye to parents or guardians. Now what?

Many students decide to go through fraternity and sorority rush, but for students of color, that decision might be a complicated one.

When analyzing the Greek system at the University of Massachusetts, there are choices between mainstream, "white" houses, and others for students of color.

"I am not African–American, I am of Latino dissent. I had to figure out if I wanted to go to a White sorority or Black sorority," said Yvette Baez, a member of Delta Sigma Theta, an African–American sorority that was founded at Howard University in 1931.

"It would be unrealistic of me not to say that there was not a color line between the two systems," said Baez. Baez, a senior from Boston, is also the president of the National Pan–Hellenic Council, the governing body of the African– American sororities at UMass.

Diego Figueroa, a member of Alpha Chi Rho, a national "mainstream" fraternity, feels that he has experienced more discrimination because he is Greek.

"I have experienced more discrimination from students and professors because I am Greek, not from being Puerto Rican," said Figueroa. "I cannot define a fraternity as being Black or White. I don't understand why there has to be a difference."

According to Baez, African–American Greek letter organizations were created in the purpose of uplifting their community and giving them a network or a place to "fall back on."

"Because the sorority or fraternity was based on the principals of uplifting the African–American race, then it has always been seen as a Black sorority or fraternity," said Baez.

Baez said that the two systems are different in regards to the pledge process, and they are based on two different sets of principals.

Jose Corporan, a senior from Boston, MA, joined Iota Phi Theta because he felt that the brothers were down to earth.

MATT KAHN / COLLEGIAN
Corporan: Joined Iota Phi Theta because brothers were "down to earth."

MATT KAHN / COLLEGIAN
Figueroa: More discrimination for being Greek than Puerto Rican.

"I don't think [the Greek system] is discriminatory," said Corporan. "I have only dealt with a few other [mainstream] fraternities, and the ones that I have seen aren't any different from us. They have a brotherhood just like we do."

Corporan and Baez believe that many students have stereotypes about African–american fraternities and sororities concerning hazing. Many students in African–American Greek letter organizations decide to get a "brand" of their letters on their body.

"Branding is a personal choice," said Corporan. Baez said she got a brand after she became a member, and when she went to health services to treat it for a possible infection, she was questioned about hazing.

"I am a member," said Baez. "How can I haze myself?"

Baez cited a communication problem between the two systems and expressed a desire to merge together them together.

"We should come together not as Black Greeks and White Greeks, but as a system," said Baez. "Working together for the most fundamental part of our organizations, which is public service."

Baez also said that the two groups probably have pre– conceived ideas that one wants nothing to do with the other.

"I think it comes from years of isolation between the two," said Baez. "It isn't something that the Black or White Greeks blatantly did. It was probably a thought that we should stay away from each other because we are so different. But that is not true."

SHPE offers opportunities for students in the sciences

MATT KAHN / COLLEGIAN
SHEP members holding elections for next year.

Being a Hispanic minority is not an easy task and we know that. Therefore, we, the Society of Hispanic Professional Engineers (SHPE), are here to help you! We want to introduce you to a Hispanic organization that offers many great opportunities for the Hispanic community at the University of Massachusetts.

SHPE is a national organization whose mission is to promote the development of Hispanics not only in engineering, but in science and other technical professions, in order to achieve excellence and economic opportunity.

Founded in 1990, our UMass SHPE Chapter has been growing in size and involvement at the local, regional and national level. For example, during the 1993-94 academic year, we participated in the Sub-regional Meeting in Rochester, N.Y.; in the Regional Career Conference in East Brunswick, N.J.; and in the National Career Conference that took place in Austin, Texas.

At these conferences, SHPE members had the opportunity to interact with professionals on the field on workshops, technical presentations, academic competitions, career fairs, and social events.

Our agenda on campus has been pretty busy: organizing a Career fair along with the National Society of Black Engineers (NSBE), doing study sessions, selling t–shirts in concession stands, assisting at the School of Engineering Open House, and community service projects such as a Secret Santa dinner and roller skating activity, just to name a few.

This spring semester, SHPE introduced the First Annual Engineering Week Collegiate Bowl. This was a trivia event that covered all engineering disciplines.

As part of our community outreach program, SHPE members tutor young students at Fort River Elementary School in Amherst.

It is important to remind you that SHPE is a Hispanic society not only for engineers but all kind of science and technical majors.

Please do not hesitate to contact the SHPE Executive Board or Alba Brown, our advisor, in order to get more information about the great opportunities that SHPE can offer you.

SHPE is located at 128 Marston Hall, at the Minority Engineering Program (MEP) Office. Our phone number is 545-2030.

This is a compilation of different SHPE brochures done by Maria del Pilar de Gracia, SHPE secretary.

The indelible loss of César Chavez

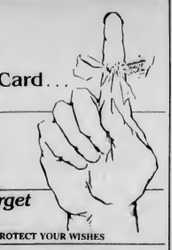
One year ago the world mourned the death of Cesar Chavez (March 31, 1927- April 22, 1993). Chavez, founder and president of the United Farm Workers of America, died in his sleep on April 22, 1993 in San Luis, Arizona.

Barbara Reyes

César Chavez lived his life as a poor man; he lived a life rich in integrity. He was personally known by the most powerful and influential national and international men and women of recent time, yet he walked, talked, ate, and lived with the poor. César dedicated his life to social change within the Southwest for poor Mexican–American migrant farmworkers and other farmworkers throughout the rest of the United States. But many still ask, Who was César Chavez?

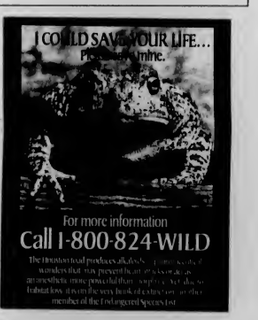
Born near Yuma, Arizona to Librado and Juana Estrada, he spent his early childhood on the family farm. During the 1930s, his family lost the farm and consequently moved to California to become migrant farmworkers. It was his experience as a young migrant worker that gave César the insight and inspiration to confront the agricultural workers' dilemmas.

At a young age, César recognized the absence of standard components of life among the poor migrant workers— social justice, dignity, and other fundamental rights. Low pay and difficult labor, along with impoverished housing camps (no bathrooms, sewers, electricity, nor running water), were conditions that he passionately fought to change. During the 1950's while working with Community Service Organization in California, he helped families, workers and other poor people to register to vote, obtain food, better housing, medical care and legal aid.



César's constant communication created a rapport among the farmworkers and communities. The power and unity that César helped to navigate led to the formation of the National Farm Workers Association in 1962 (now known as United Farm Workers). He dedicated his life to improving the quality of farmworkers' lives. Despite the occasional violence his union encountered, even deadly at times, he was a man of non–violence, often using his tool of peace — hunger fasts, marches picked lines and boycotts. The union demanded better pay and working conditions, and called upon all Americans to support migrant workers by refusing to buy any product not picked by union pickers. In 1965, Chavez, along with the AFL–CIO, declared a boycott on table grapes (UVAS NO, or NO GRAPES) and lettuce. César publicized the chemical assaults on the workers by the growers; there were high reports of cancer, birth deformities, and death among the farmworkers and their children, all of whom toiled in the fields with these poisons everyday.

César was a mover and a shaker; h– fought firmly for the benefit of others, he fought for the cause—La Causa. He once said in one of his speeches, "If you're outraged at conditions, then you can't possibly be free or happy...you can't change anything if you...avoid sacrifice. We have tasted freedom and dignity, and we will fight to the end...We have too much further to go to give up now!"



La Causa still lives. To honor the first anniversary of his death, the UFW has planned a march several hundred miles long, from his birthplace in Yuma, Arizona to the UFW headquarters in Keene, California. Several thousand marchers will include family, friends, farmworkers, activists, and other supporters.

Found diary charges Lincoln's wife a liar

By MONTE REEL
Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. — Was Honest Abe's wife just as honest? No, according to 19th century diary entries from a friend of Abraham Lincoln.

The entries concerning Mary Todd Lincoln are from the diaries of Orville Hickman Browning, a confidant of the former president and a U.S. senator from Illinois during the Civil War.

In an entry from 1862, Browning accuses Mrs. Lincoln of conspiring with the White House gardener to produce false bills to pay for personal expenses out of the public treasury. He also writes that she leaked her Republican husband's private papers to a reporter for a Democratic newspaper.

The claims echo rumors about Mrs. Lincoln that have been around for 130 years, said Tom Schwartz, a state historian and curator of the Illinois Historical Library's Lincoln collection.

"These were charges that were hinted at in newspapers at that time, especially the Democratic press, and things that people whispered in conversation," Schwartz said. "But like many other things, they could easily be explained as partisan attacks or complaints by someone who didn't like President Lincoln."

When the diary was sold to the Illinois State Historical Library in 1921 by Browning's niece, the entries criticizing Mrs. Lincoln were not

MassPIRG celebrates Earth Day, combats homelessness

By MIMI FELLNER
Collegian Staff

The MassPIRG branch at the University of Massachusetts has events scheduled for the Spring semester, including a Hunger and Homelessness campaign, an Environmental Education campaign, and an Earth Day event.

Created at UMass, the Massachusetts Student Public Interest Research Group is a statewide, student-directed organization that works on environmental, consumer protection, and democracy issues. It began with students more than 20 years ago who believed that by pooling their resources and working with a staff of professionals they could have an impact on the community in which they lived.

Students are working with the National Student Campaign Against Hunger and Homelessness. Heather Foran, a volunteer and work site coordinator of the UMass Hunger and Homelessness campaign said the program is based on "going in on a regular basis to volunteer and get other people to volunteer in shelters in Amherst and Northampton."

Last Saturday the Campaign raised money to give to shelters as part of the nationally sponsored Hunger Cleanup Walkathon.

The "HOME For ALL Bill" supported by MassPIRG is a comprehensive approach to problems of homelessness and the lack of affordable housing for low and moderate income residents of Massachusetts. The bill includes the authorization of a Housing Bond which will modernize over 8,000 units of run-down public housing, remove lead paint from over 3,500 houses, and rehabilitate over 5,000 foreclosed or abandoned private units for home ownership and affordable rental housing.

At the state level MassPIRG is also supporting the new Solid Waste Master Plan, which will be issued this Spring by Governor Weld's administration. The plan is critical to Massachusetts' waste reduction and recycling hopes. Citizens can voice their desire for the Master Plan by supporting the "Alternative Action Plan" proposed by MassPIRG and Clean Water Action.

MassPIRG is working on the Environmental Education campaign which is a presentation program for elementary school students, through which MassPIRG volunteers talk to the children about recycling and the environment. "The more you educate from the beginning, from when they're young, the better it is for the future," says Foran.

MassPIRG's plans for Earth Day this year are coordinated by William (Bill) Whitebone '94 sponsored by UMass and Amherst College Ch apters of MassPIRG, Bicycle World Too, and People's Market, and will take place on Saturday April 23 on the Amherst Common from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. It will be a day of education and information on environmental and social issues with live music, food, kids' games, face painting and a mountain bike raffle. Proceeds will go to the Amherst Conservation Commission.

Foran says that MassPIRG wants people to realize that Earth Day is not just one day but that it should be every day. "The whole thing is an awareness for students to realize that its not just one day that you should think about the environment and recycle or something, but that you should think about it every day."

The various local bands that will be playing at the event are Karen's Way, Sons of a Corporate Dog, Meristem, Electric Noodle Factory and Sneaky Project.

In the past, MassPIRG students have worked on issues like the Recycling Initiative on the November 1992 ballot, registering close to 18,000 students to vote. They have also raised $10,000 and mobilized hundreds of students to stop hunger and homelessness.

■ Golden key

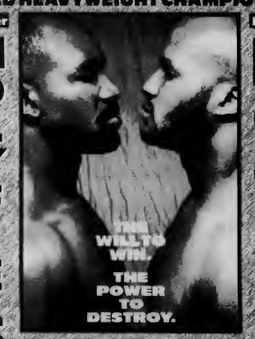
Sponsoring an AIDS awareness day at the Campus Center, as well as presenting a bilingual drug education program to Holyoke elementary students, are only two of the many programs this group actively participates in.

At the present time, the society is working with Kaplan to offer students practice diagnostic exams for graduate schools. GRE, GMAT, MCAT and LSAT exams can be taken at Whitmore on April 16, 23 and 30 with a charge of eight dollars.

Golden Key Society not only enables students to practice their leadership skills, but also build friendships with a diverse student population.

As one of 150 collegiate chapters, Golden Key students are given the opportunity to attend national conventions with students from other chapters of major universities in the United States.

At these conventions students attend meetings and workshops to learn new methods such as "Power Speaking" and "Creative Fund Raising."



While at a National convention in August, members of the UMass chapter were the recipients of a Golden Key Chapter Award. This award is based on the groups' communications at a local and national level, the level of successful planning of a strong campus awareness program, the leadership and support of the officers and the adviser, and the involvement of members in chapter programs.

Pointing to an engraved plaque, Rodriguez noted this groups' efforts have not gone unnoticed.

"I feel such pride working with these students. They're leaders and they will make it," said Rodriguez.

Indigo Girls EVEN Return to CLOSER the Valley TO FINE

By Amy S. Burns
Collegian Staff

COURTESY EPIC RECORDS

Amy Ray and Emily Saliers, otherwise known as Indigo Girls are coming to Amherst; Amherst College, that is. The acclaimed folk duo will play at LeFrak Gymnasium this Saturday at 8 p.m.

Amy and Emily are known for their rich, full-bodied voices and their finely-tuned acoustic guitars. Their dynamic blend of alto and soprano, combined with their lusty guitar strumming produces such a vibrant sound that sometimes you forget there are any other instruments.

Indigo Girls will be here to promote the impending release of their latest album, Swamp Ophelia, due out in May. This will be the fifth full-length album for the folk acoustic duo from Athens, Georgia.

As on their last album, Rites of Passage, the Girls' rich vocal harmony is again backed up by the lush sounds of two violins and a cello. They are also joined by different guest singers on some of the tracks. The ethereal Jane Siberry, sings with the Girls on "Mystery," a song which Saliers says is about "an inexplicable attraction between two seemingly opposite people."

Since the Indigo Girls new album, Swamp Ophelia, doesn't come out until May 10th, you won't be able to buy it before the concert. However, you may have heard their version of "I don't want to talk about," originally recorded by Crazy Horse. The Indigo Girls' version appears on the soundtrack to the film Philadelphia.

You can also look forward to seeing Indigo Girls in an upcoming Whoopi Goldberg film, Boys on the Side, for which they just finished filming their scenes in March.

Indigo Girls recorded their first album for their current label, Epic Records, in 1988. The duo won the Grammy for "Best Contemporary Folk Recording" for the this album, simply titled Indigo Girls. Since then they have produced a new album approximately every two years: *Nomads*Indians*Saints* (1990); Rites of Passage (1992) and Swamp Ophelia (1994).

I was lucky enough to see Indigo girls in Paris in the fall of 1992, while they were on tour following the release of Rites of Passage, a tour which ended right here at UMass in December, 1992. Although the small club was packed with mostly Americans, the Girls came on stage speaking a little French. I was impressed with this benevolent gesture in a city where the word "American" is often synonymous with the word "obnoxious."

Then again, this is fitting for a group that has done benefit performances for such culturally aware organizations as the Indigenous Women's Network, the Children's Health Fund and Voters for Choice.

If you're going to the show, remember to listen to your Indigo Girls tapes beforehand. Everybody loves to sing along at their concerts. It's no fun to be the only one who doesn't know the words to "Closer To Fine." And if they play "Kid Fears," it's up to the audience to sing Michael Stipe's part, since as far as I know he won't be coming to the show.

Indigo Girls will play LeFrak Gymnasium on Saturday, April 23 at 8 p.m. Call 542-5773 for available ticket information.

The A.L. Interview: Indigo Girl Emily Saliers opens up

By Jon Lupo
Collegian Staff

Perhaps any of the true secrets, hidden revelations of Indigo Girls can be found in their music. Certainly, it's the most evocative way to say who they are, and besides, these interviews are so contrived anyway, the artist mechanically plugging away, right?

Not so in the case of my interview with one-half of the folk-pop duo, the golden-tressed Emily Saliers. She's the Indigo Girl who penned the group's signature song, the endlessly eloquent "Closer to Fine," and has proven, with each subsequent effort, to be the softer-edged Indigo — just think of the haunting "History of Us," or the orchestral pinings of "Ghost," and the bittersweet yearnings of "Love Will Come to You."

In many ways, the interview evolved into more of a conversation, with Saliers sounding just like you'd expect: earthy, funny and wise. Sure, we covered the standard stuff (their new album, Swamp Ophelia; an upcoming movie) as well as some interesting subjects (from fame to the futility of trying to define and Indigo Girls "sound"). Emily Saliers — like her music — has a way of removing barriers, opening doors, stirring thoughts.

Collegian: What does 'Swamp Ophelia' mean to you?

Emily Saliers: Well, it's very mutky. It's like a mish-mosh. The actual name came from a plant that Amy saw in a hotel in Florida and subsequently couldn't trace it in any zoology books or flora-fauna books or anything. So it's sort of become a mystery after the fact. But [Amy Ray] used the word in "Touch Me Fall." And to me it just evokes interesting images. I mean, Ophelia, her character [from Hamlet] is so fascinating. I just like the mood of it. It was something that we settled upon easily.

What does the whole album mean to you as a unit?

Oh boy. Well, it was a very joyful experience creating it. It was very home-grown. We used a lot of friends on the record and we didn't try to make it something. We just had people add their own parts. There were lots of surprises, like people who came in and we thought were going to play one instrument and they ended up coming up with a quirky part on another instrument just because they didn't play it well. So, it has a very fresh spirit to me, kind of "anything goes."

I know a lot of people who consider your self-titled Indigo Girls album as the one that changed their life. Without getting too mystical, where does that kind of music come from — the music that changes people's lives?

Well, I think the thing that people tapped into about that record was an honesty about basic human experience, and that's what we write about. Obviously, someone who lives in the ghetto and is trying to think about their next meal is not going to relate to Indigo Girls' music because a lot of times it's kind of heady stuff, with the luxury of thought, if you know what I mean.

But for a lot of other people, we do spend a lot of time contemplating things like death and how we relate to other people and what's going on in the world and things like that.

Arguably, each of Indigo Girls' albums have a different, even distinct voice. Did you feel any pressure to create an Indigo Girls' "sound," especially after the success of your self-titled effort?

No, because I'm not really even sure what our "sound" is. To be honest with you, Amy and I, we aren't very mental about when we make a record. We just go with the spirit of things, which sounds very cosmic [laughs] but it's true, it's true. We follow our hearts in the studio and with a producer like Peter Collins, who's very open to quirky ideas, it makes it easy.

Indigo Girls seem to me at least to be the kind of band that will always be on the cusp of mainstream stardom, with fans quietly piling up until you pass on into legend status. There seems to be a big push now, with Swamp Ophelia to make this the big mainstream crossover into pop territory. What are your feelings on this?

Well, the record company wants to sell records. Obviously, that's their mission. We actually have a very good relationship with Epic Records, they've been good to us. But they're a business and they want to sell records and ultimately, the only way they want to sell the records they want to sell is if we cross over. But Amy and I don't particularly want that. I mean we've never wanted to be mainstream pop stars. Our music is just not accessible in that way.

Basically, we just decide what songs we really want to release, which direction we want to take. We're gonna release "Touch Me Fall" as the first single. It's much more alternative that anything we've ever released. It's much more expressive of Amy's side of things. So, Top 40 radio — let's see what they think.

> "During the times that we're off, I even forget I'm an Indigo Girl. And there are other times when I'm out in public and I feel very self-conscious because I feel like I'm being watched. But you have to realize that goes along with what you're doing..."
> — Indigo Girl Emily Saliers

You and Amy are also doing a movie, Boys on the Side, which seems to be the ultimate in mainstream crossover. How did this come about?

Well, we got sent the script because the musical director, Mitchell Loeb, his wife works for Virgin Music, so that might have been an initial connection, I'm not sure. They decided that Amy and I would work well in the context of this movie.

The story is really beautiful. There's a lot of crossover — Whoopi Goldberg plays a gay lounge singer, Mary Louise Parker plays a heterosexual women who has AIDS and Drew Barrymore is this kind of tart-like figure with an abusive boyfriend — so the issues are very real. There's a lot of gender, race, sexual crossover which are great. I think people need to see more of that. So we were attracted to that, and to the story line.

Have you done it already?

Yeah, we finished two different segments.

How was it like on the set with the likes of Whoopi Goldberg and Drew Barrymore?

I can't tell you how great those guys are. Whoopi — she's just amazing. But they were all really nice to us, made us feel welcome. Herb Ross, the director, I mean give me a break, the guy's so talented. He's made so many great movies. [The Goodbye Girl, Steel Magnolias]

Also, you get close to people really quickly. It was very sad to leave. And the only down side of the whole thing was that you have a call time at seven o'clock in the morning and then you sit around for five hours.

There's the old adage that actors get paid all that money to wait.

It's true. But when they're shooting, they're serious about it.

Any notions of entertaining an acting career?

[Laughs] No! Not at all.

I'm going to give you a name and tell me the first thing that pops into your head. First one: Virginia Woolf.

The greatest female writer.

Bill Clinton.

We had high hopes — we're still wondering.

Joni Mitchell.

Absolutely brilliant. Complete artist.

Amy Ray.

My pal!

In many ways, one of the biggest of Indigo Girls' appealing qualities is that both you and Amy seem like regular folk and seem to evade all this celebrity baggage. How do you balance trying to maintain a somewhat sane private life with the kind of insanity that goes along with being in the public eye?

Well, it gets hard sometimes. There are times when I really don't think about it and I'm able to live my life. During the times that we're off, I even forget I'm an Indigo Girl. And there are other times when I'm out in public and I feel very self-conscious because I feel like I'm being watched. But you have to realize that goes along with what you're doing and if ever gets to the point where it's starting to destroy your life then you need to take a step back.

We keep a very close eye on those sort of things. We're very sensitive to how our lives are going, our personal lives, and we make amends where we can.

Okay, I'm starting to feel like Barbara Walters here, so this is the typical Barbara Walters closing question. Are you happy where you're at now?

I am happy. I mean, happiness is a fleeting thing. I feel very satisfied with how far we've come and how we've been able to retain creative freedom and those kinds of things. I think we have the greatest fans in the world, they're just wonderful, supportive people. Up to this point, I don't have too many negative thing to say about my life experience.

Facetious listing of no–shows makes for Spring Concert blues

By BRIAN BABINEAU
Collegian Staff

Maybe they were trying to be funny. Maybe they were trying to make a point. However, what the Union Program Council did do in putting up their list of Bands who are not coming to Spring Concert outside the coffee shop is make a mockery of themselves and perhaps the most important annual musical event in the Valley – our Spring Concert.

As I read the list, I wondered if this was some twisted ploy to tempt people into coming by listing all the popular acts that UPC failed to entice to a pond performance here at UMass. Here folks, we couldn't get anybody really cool, but come to our concert anyway? What is this, reverse psychology?

What makes it worse is that when they list the reasons that these bands aren't gracing us with their musical presences, they make fun of the bands, shredding both past concert players and bands we wish were here. These reasons range from just plain dumb to downright lack of taste.

When discussing Cypress Hill, they say, "Do we really care?" I hope UPC might care enough to bring such a high profile act here.

According to the list, Nine Inch Nails "can't play on the 8th, but would love to play the 12th." Ah, the one that got away. Nice tease... Really.

The UPC folks even attack one of the Valley's best, if not only, hip and homegrown musical export, Dinosaur Jr., stating, "J. Mascis couldn't find the happy valley." Well, he found it last year, but if he reads this, I'll be darned if he would return.

The list continues on, listing bands like The Clash, The Who, Pink Floyd, REM, and U2. Look, two things. 1) we know these people aren't coming here, and never would and, 2) thank you, for reminding us.

By far, the worst example of complete and utter bad taste is the reason listed for Nirvana's absence from the line–up. It was one word – "bang." I don't care if you don't like Nirvana's music. I don't care if Kurt Cobain slept with your girlfriend. The fact that anyone kills themselves, much less a popular public figure, is simply not funny. If you wanted to disgust the UMass concert–going public, it worked. We are disgusted.

I did get a chance to ask UPC what exactly they were trying to accomplish with such a display. General Committee member Jason Kleimola said, "A lot of people have unreal expectations of who we can get for the concert."

I can understand that you need to curb people's expectations, but is this the way to do it? With insults? You sounded more bitter about who wasn't coming than we students would ever be.

Now, maybe I am being a little hard on the UPC folks, but I see it this way. Those who run UPC usually want to try and drum up enthusiasm for what is arguably the University's biggest event.

They could do this by telling us who is coming. They could remind us of great spring concerts past, and tell us how good this year's will be.

Instead, they tease us, ridicule some of the bigger musical acts around, display horrid taste, and generally make themselves look bad. All in one little Campus Center display.

I know I am not the only one who feels this way, because every time I pass that display, I hear more pained groans from those who have stopped to read the list. Try something else next year, guys.

You haven't necessarily displeased us with concerts past, so relax and put on a fun concert.

Guild presents eloquent expression through song

By SHAWN McDONNELL
Collegian Staff

At the beginning of Company, the Stephen Sondheim musical being performed this week by the Theater Guild, Bobby is thirty–four, single, and happy. Two acts (and one stage year) later he is a desperate thirty–five year old bachelor in the midst of a crisis.

The change is brought about through the bungling intervention of a dozen married friends — with recipes for marital happiness and insinuating coos of "have I got a girl for you."

As an exploration of relationships, Company's themes are not very different from Bedroom Farce, the last Guild offering directed by undergraduate Benjamin Ware.

"When people ask me to describe Company," Ware smiles, "I say 'remember Bedroom Farce? Now it's got music.'"

Yet Ware is also quick to acknowledge that, as a musical, Company occupies very much its own space. How could it not? It is composed by America's resident genius Stephen Sondheim, a man who could write musical comedies about extraterritoriality, frogs, or assassins — and has. His thrilling soliloquy–songs (including the now–legendary "Ladies who Lunch") are tiny plays unto themselves, which startled Broadway audiences in the 1970s by defying the conventions which weave songs into dialogue or action.

"We realized," Sondheim explains, "that the kind of song that would not work in the show was the Rodgers and Hammerstein kind of song in which the characters reach a certain point and then sing their emotion because [these are] the kind of people who do not sing."

In many ways these soliloquies are really internal monologues — eloquent expressions of the emotion inside people lost for eloquence. The most familiar of these is Bobby's final song, "Being Alive." Although it has been subjected to treacly pop anthem recordings by singers such as Barbra Streisand and Michael Crawford, the song retains (like the similarly overworn Sondheim songs "Send in the Clowns" and "Everything's Coming Up Roses") an impact specific to the moment onstage.

Musical Director Nathan Smith has worked hard to remain faithful to Sondheim's original intent, and Ware and choreographer Lonette McWilliams have created a seamless blend between the director's blocking and the choreographic movement.

Despite the technical challenges of directing a musical, Ware finds that his directing process was much the same as that used in straight plays.

"I guess you could just call it a musical drama," Ware explains. "It's not a typical musical in any sense of the word."

Company will be performed through Saturday, April 23 at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. Tickets are available from Tix Unlimited or at the door.

Calendar of Events

THURSDAY

THEATER — The New WORLD Theater's final event of the 1993–94 season will be an original production: Florence and Mojo, an evening of one act plays in tribute to African American playwright Alice Childress. Both one–act sets are early works of Childress', examining the impact of a shifting society on the daily lives of ordinary people. The production marks the directing debut of New WORLD Theater veteran Celia Hilson. The performance will take place at the Hampden Theater, UMass, 8 p.m. Tickets are $5 for the general public and $3 for students, children and senior citizens. For tickets call 545–2511. This will also run 4/22, 23, 24.

THEATER — The UMass Theater Guild proudly presents Company, a musical comedy by William Sondheim. To be held in the Student Union Ballroom, UMass. Showtime is 8 p.m. Admission is $4 for students and $6 for the general public. Tickets are available at the door or TIX Unlimited, Student Union, UMass.

CONCERT — Warner Bros. Artist Bill Miller will perform his sharp songcraft and contemporary acoustic arrangements to the Iron Horse, Northampton. Examining the Indian experience in America, Miller often uses the language of a palmer to describe his songs. Opening the show will be Nashville based singer/songwriter Hunter Moore. Showtime is 7 p.m. Tickets are $6.50 in advance and can be purchased through 586–8686 or 1–800–THE–TICK.

THEATER — Hampshire College Theater will present Romulus Linney's Three Poets in Hampshire's Mainstage Theater, Emily Dickinson Hall. Three Poet is a series of passionate, sometimes playful pieces about three major women writers: Duo No Komachi, Hroswitha and Anna Akhmatova. These homages to the writers explore connections among desire, creativity and the ways that women negotiate their creativity. Showtime is 8 p.m. and admission is $3 general public, $2.50 for students and senior citizens. For tickets call 582–5351. Also 4/22 and 23.

THEATER — In it's second weekend of performance Late Bus to Mecca, by Pearl Cleage will be held in Theater 14, Smith College, 8 p.m. Cleage has become a resounding voice for African American sisterhood, and her literary imagery cuts directly to the bone with honesty and wit. Showtime is 8 p.m. Tickets are $5 for general public and $3 students and seniors. For tickets call 585–3220. Also 4/22, 23.

DANCE — The Smith College Department of Dance will present the undergraduate extravaganza, "Unbound," a night of original works of dance. To be held in the Scott Dance studio, 8 p.m. Admission is $3 general public, $2 for students, seniors and children. For more information call 585–3237.

CONCERT — The Boston–based Skamongers, Bim Skala Bim, will perform at Pearl Street, Northampton. Soup will open. Showtime is 7 p.m. This show is 18+. Admission is $6 in advance and $7 at the door. For more information call 584–7771.

FILM — Wings of Desire, a film by director Wim Wenders will be shown at the Campus Center Theater, Amherst College, 4 and 7:30 p.m.

LECTURE — As part of the series "Whose Family Values?," sponsored by the Program for GLB concerns and the GLB Graduate Student Organization, Margaret Cerullo will present "Divide and Conquer: The Right's 'Multicultural' Agenda." To be held in Campus Center Room 803, UMass, 7:30 p.m.

John Martyn, Saturday, 7 p.m., $14.50.

CONCERT — Borderland will play an array of blues, folk and rock at Michael's Billiards in Amherst tonight at 9 p.m. Call Michael's for ticket information.

FILM FESTIVAL — The first annual Five College Student Film and Video Festival will be held in Stirn Auditorium, Amherst College between 4 and 11 p.m. Student works will be presented and judged with prizes going to best of Narrative, Documentary and Experimental as well as best of Show. For more information call 549–5261.

DANCE — The dance students of Mount Holyoke College will present the Student Dance Concert which will present a diverse group of original works including tap, modern, jazz and ballet en pointe. To be held in Studio Theater, Kendall Hall at 8 p.m. Due to limited seating, reservations are needed and may be reserved at 538–2848. Tickets are $3 general public and $2 for students. Also 4/21, 23.

CONCERT — Combining hot musicianship, a great sense of fun, and variety Riverfront Jump will perform their energetic repertoire of Pop, Swing, Soul and R&B at the Iron Horse, Northampton. Riverfront will make you want to dance, so come ready to boogie. Show starts at 7 p.m. with admission $7 at the door or $5.50 in advance. For tickets call Michael's for ticket information.

FILM — Superstar: The Life and Times of Andy Warhol will be screened in Franklin Patterson, Hampshire College, 8 p.m.

DANCE — "The Earth Day Dance Blast: Come Dance Those Nukes Away" will be held at the Northampton Center for the Arts. The Equalities, Electric Noodle Factory and Zen Cats will play to benefit MASS A.L.E.R.T. Doors open at 7:30 p.m. and admission is $7. For tickets call 586–7282. This is a smoke and alcohol free event.

CONCERT — The Hadley Pub will present WhatUSee, performing a night of Classic Rock. Showtime is 9 p.m. and there is no cover charge.

FILM — The Good Fight, a film about the Abraham Lincoln Brigade in the Spanish Civil War will be shown at Hasbrouck 134, UMass. Director Sam Sills will present the film and a discussion afterwards. Screening to begin at 8 p.m. Sponsored by the Social Thought and Political Economy Program.

FRIDAY

The UMass Concert Band, Sunday, 4 p.m., $4.

Living it up at Hotel Massachusetts

COURTESY CHUNK RECORDS

The Hotel Massachusetts disc displays local, on-the-rise talent.

By MATT AUDETTE
Collegian Staff

Every great music scene has had its premiere club. Some small, little, out of the way "hole in the wall" that caters to local acts before they inevitably decide to pack up their bags and head out into the big time. New York has CBGB's, Boston has The Rat, and our very own Northampton has The Baystate Cabaret.

For quite some time now The Baystate has been thanklessly showcasing the plethora of local talent that the area has to offer, desperately trying to put Northampton on the musical map.

Now, for the first time, the area, as well as The Baystate itself, may receive its well-earned spot, as the Hotel Massachusetts compilation hits the shelves of record stores across the country.

Released on Baystate proprietor Mal Thursday's homegrown label Chunk Records, the compilation showcases 23 of the area's hottest acts, ranging from larger bands such as Sub Pop recording artists Sebadoh and the Pavement affiliated Silver Jews, to smaller acts such as Home and Lumber.

Thursday, who has been releasing 7" singles on Chunk Records off and on for the past eight years but put the project on hiatus during the early part of the nineties, resurrected the label in order to support what he felt was an overlooked music scene.

Unfortunately, as it is always the case, there were not enough funds to put out records for all the great acts that graced the Baystate floor regularly — hence the idea for Hotel Massachusetts was born.

"I wanted to do singles with so many of the local acts, but with limited resources it was difficult," said Thursday. "Basically, we came up with the idea to put out a compilation which would document some of the bands from Massachusetts that have played the Baystate."

The timing could not have been more perfect. With hip labels Dutch East India and Caroline Records distributing the album nationally, featuring appearances by area musicians Zeke Fiddler and New Radiant Storm King (both who have recently released albums on Spin Art and Homestead Records), the compilation may just garner enough attention to make a splash on the indie-circuit.

Thus far, advance copies have sold well in the area, but those involved are still keeping their fingers crossed.

"We are really excited about the compilation," said Julie Keller, singer/guitarist for The Maggies, one of the bands featured on the album. "Hopefully it will bring us, as well as the area, some attention."

Author takes a look inside porn industry

By TARA MK CONNELLY
Collegian Staff

Bottom Feeders
John Hubner
Dell Publishing

If you have ever wondered how and why the American porno industry has grown into a multi-million dollar business, look no further. Author John Hubner takes a look behind the scenes of the lives of the infamous Mitchell brothers, Artie and Jim. He follows the two brothers from their childhood to their initial involvement in the pornography industry, and finally to the fatal fratricide of Artie on February 27, 1991.

Hubner is into details, and writes as if the reader is actually present throughout the book. This little piece of voyeurism is interesting, but gets stale. The book tends to sensationalize events and may be a bit too in-depth to hold one's interest. The details are great and the coverage of the two brothers' lives is interesting, but not enough to keep the reader turning pages. The writing is easy to understand, but if you aren't into spending a lot of time reading a book, this definitely isn't for leisure.

Correction

The review of the Kai Chi restaurant which was printed in yesterday's Dining Out Guide contained inaccurate information. The Kai Chi offers a Fine Dining experience at the Mountain Farms Mall. Although the restaurant does not offer egg foo young, as was indicated, nor bar specials, they do offer elegant dishes, and can seat up to 140 patrons. After 9:30 p.m. appetizers are discounted up to 30 percent, not strictly 10 percent as was written. The Collegian regrets the error.

powers that can control its possessor's mind and to amass great quantities of wealth. It has also been linked with mythical powers of time traveling and resurrection.

Carter keeps the reader involved in her plot with a dozen twists and turns that only add to her concise writing style. She knows how to keep the reader's attention, but doesn't sacrifice the book's language or intricacy to do so. The characters are developed enough to like without getting over-bearing, and everything just flows together.

This book is easy enough reading, just pick it up and read through. The language is simple and direct, and the content is fascinating. I highly suggest that you check it out.

Even with all this going on plans for further volumes of Hotel Massachusetts are already on the drawing board. According to Thursday, future compilations will hopefully showcase bands who have played the Baystate, but are not from the area.

While Hotel Massachusetts may not land any of the bands featured on MTV anytime soon, it may just create the buzz that all blossoming music scenes need to generate. Keeping all that in mind, calling Northampton the next Seattle may not be that far-fetched of an idea. Only time will tell.

Extravaganja brings out sunshine

By JOSHUA BOYD
Collegian Staff

Rain and clouds dragged the UMass Cannabis Reform Coalition's third annual Extravaganja down to the Blue Wall Coffee House. This was an almost last minute revision of the original area of festivities which was planned for the basketball courts next to Van Meter Residence Hall.

Starting the show off was the quartet Electric Noodle Factory, playing an energized set to get things off the ground. Working happily through such songs as "Going To Gibraltar," possibly their experiment with calypso, and the indescribable cover of Frank Zappa's "More Trouble Everyday," the four musicians played on as the crowd moved in more and more.

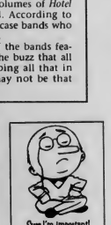
New with the Factory is drummer Dan McFatton, who replaces Loren Weisman behind the set. Keyboardist/Lead Vocalist Peter Fernandez cited the infamous "creative and personal differences" as the cause for the change.

Before the next band took to the stage, Libertarian party member and Mass Cann (the state of Massachusetts' cannabis reform organization) member, Stephen Levine spoke harshly against those who want to take cannabis users' rights away. He sounded off against the so-called "Drug War" of the 1980s and said it was founded by complete racial prejudice on the government's part.

The next entertainers to satisfy the crowd were the band Mocha Java. Consisting of percussionist Todd LaChance, vocalist/lead guitarist Rob Orciuch, lead guitarist Dave Smith, bassist Steve Sullivan and drummer Joe Berry, the band played with good movement and had a fair number of the audience gliding on their feet.

With a fiery cover of Hendrix's "Voodoo Child" and the sharp, original closer "Fungus," the band ended with a nearly-full Blue Wall cheering their set.

Speaker Maddy Webster, chairwoman of the board of directors of Mass Cann, and 1992 state representative contender Terry Franklin both spoke during the next intermission. At the core of both of the speakers' talks, they encouraged students to get into politics to change things.



Around this time, the sun came out and the Blue Wall was at its fullest. Yes, you could tell it was time for Synaesthesia, the six-man band that seems to be a favorite among many students at this school.

The band started to an already cheering crowd that strolled to the hem of the stage. They jumped right into one of their forceful jams, with BJ O'Reilly, keyboardist for the outfit, hopping his legs up under the instrument while his fingers slammed away harmonic organ sounds.

The two drummers of the band, Jason "J-Boy" Melsaac, and BJ Ray both held each other in sync, never falling to show the full force of their wrists as they and bassist Gus Serino poured out fantastic rhythm through an all-original set. "Backwards Man," a staple at most of their shows, led into a kind of experimental, well-uniformed new song, "Blue Line," which eventually led into "Days Of Leisure" with vocalist Jay Bain, guitarist/vocalist (and brother of drummer BJ) Darren Ray and O'Reilly all lending singing parts to make it a fully-treasured set.

After Synaesthesia, the veteran reggae band Loose Caboose played an eclectic set melding in all sorts of Jamaican music to make a portrait filling, polished and listener-friendly.

Ras Jahn, keyboardist and one of the singers of the group, had a low, brotherly voice that careened over the music, while Jonothan Dorr, guitarist/vocalist played his hooks and dancing chords, as if their final judge would be the sun. The rest of the group produced music that melted through the crowd's veins.

At the end of the show, those who attended were happy, delighted by the music itself, or by the herb for which the event was aimed at reforming, or, maybe in most cases, a combination of both.

Sociologists, economists should connect forces

By JUAN JOSE CHACON QUIROS
Collegian Staff

Emile Durkheim and Adam Smith, Homo-sociologicus and Homo-economicus, an oversocialized being and an undersocialized one.

Samuel Bowles, a professor at the Economics Department narrowed it down Wednesday with the title of his talk: "must sociologists and economists commune?"

Professor Bowles' reasoning centered around the viability of the rational actor model. According to Bowles, sociology and economics are different paradigms but "it shouldn't be a one way street." He said "recent developments in macroeconomic theory need sociological exploration."

Bowles criticized the view that homo-economicus only maximizes its utility when consuming, but not when working. He gave the example of people not working as hard as they could because they know they can get away with it and of salespeople lying about the quality of their products.

"Economics deals [with] solved political problems," Bowles said when explaining the issues of contractual relations that economists have long stayed away from.

He gave an economic model of labor markets in which the workers only do extra effort if there's compensation for it. According to Bowles, "this kind of market fails to implement efficient resource use, even under idealized competitive conditions."

Given these facts, Professor Bowles argued that in such a model, and in contradiction with pro-markets fundamentalists, "discrimination on the basis of race or gender can exist in competitive equilibrium."

In his view, there's a "monitoring problem," because the employer has to enforce the worker's activities by means of coertion and disciplinary acts. In the case of cooperatives, Bowles pointed out that in an economy with pronounced cycles, they don't do as well as capitalist companies because they don't fire their workers. He stated that if the economy was made solely of cooperatives, the economic recessions would be weaker because worker's consumption is not cut released out of concern for the Lincolns' son, Robert Todd Lincoln.

The diary was later published with the controversial entries omitted. But the Illinois Historic Preservation Society, which oversees the library, decided in March to release them.

Schwartz said the new entries probably will be published after several scholars examine them.

"Browning was relaying secondhand information in these entries," Schwartz said, "so there is a chance they could have been rumors. But they do help to confirm some suspicions."

Browning lists Thomas Stackpole, a watchman and later a steward of the White House, as his source for the alleged false billing scheme.

Browning writes that Stackpole told him that the gardener helped Mrs. Lincoln produce false bills "to such an extent that the president had to be informed of it, at which he was very indignant and refunded what had been thus flinched from the government out of his private purse."

The same diary entry says Mrs. Lincoln got a copy of the president's 1861 annual address to Congress and and gave it to a reporter for a Democratic newspaper who published excerpts before it was printed.

Another diary entry written in 1870 tells of a conversation between U.S. Supreme Court Justice David Davis and the executor of Lincoln's estate. According to Browning, Davis said Mrs. Lincoln stole several items from the White House when she left.

Kasbarian also insisted the audience remains vigilant in assuring another genocide does not take place in Karabagh.

The UMass Armenian Club will be coordinating a table on the Campus Center concourse to provide more information on the genocide of Armenians as well as sponsoring a silent vigil on the steps of the Student Union on April 22.

SGA Speaker Mercedes Betanco said the following people are no longer senators as of last night. These people have at least three unexcused senate meeting absences. They are: Josh Endler, Greek Area; Matt Katzen, Coolidge; Deanne Kimball, Mackimmie; Magalie LaMour, Johnson; Daniel Larson, Orchard Hill Area Government; Hani Mardini, Gorman and Tracy Zaccone, Commuters.

Betanco said she is angry that senators have not been coming to the meetings and that she will call each of them to ask why they did not show up last night

"I am very disappointed and I will be calling all of the senators who didn't show up today and talking to them," she said.

Teen may still face flogging

SINGAPORE (AP) — An American teen-ager sentenced to a flogging for vandalizing cars made a final plea for mercy Wednesday, but there was no sign Singapore's president would spare him.

Lawyers for Michael P. Fay delivered the 13-page petition for a pardon to the Istana palace residence of President Ong Teng Cheong. They did not reveal the contents of the document, but a decision is expected within days. The date of the flogging has not been scheduled.

President Clinton spoke out Tuesday on Fay's behalf.

"It's not entirely clear that his confession wasn't coerced from him," Clinton said in Washington. Clinton earlier sent a letter to Ong ask that he repeal the sentence.

The full Cabinet of Prime Minister Goh Chok Tong customarily reviews requests for a pardon, lawyers said, but both Goh and Senior Minister Lee Kuan Yew are out of the country. Goh is due back from a state visit to Britain on Friday. Regular Cabinet meetings are held on Thursdays.

Fay, 18, pleaded guilty last month to two charges of vandalism, two of mischief and one of possessing stolen property for spraying paint and tossing eggs on cars in September and other illegal acts. Plea bargaining reduced the original 53 counts against him. But Fay said in a letter to his father in Kettering, Ohio, that he had confessed only after a beating by police.

A spokesman for Singapore's Ministry of Home Affairs said the teen-ager's conviction was based on his guilty plea in open court, not on his confession to police. An internal investigation "revealed no evidence of police abuse," the spokesman said.

Fay was sentenced to six lashes with a four-foot rattan can, four months in jail and a $2,200 fine. Three lashes of a cane are mandatory for each vandalism charge a person is convicted of.

Caning in Singapore consists of lashing the bare buttocks with a water-soaked rattan rod wielded by a martial-arts expert. The lashes can tear the flesh, bloody the buttocks and leave scars.

His father said he advised his son to plead guilty to reduced charges, not realizing that the judge was going to order his son caned.

UHS: students still are unaware

By Mimi Fellner
Collegian Staff

Few people are lucky enough to have jobs that affect their lives on a daily basis, but health educators who work at the University Health Services Health Education division at the University of Massachusetts, with students, actually do.

Gloria Defobio and Sally Damon, who are health educators at UHS, said students on campus are responsive to their sex education programming and materials, but a good majority of students still believe they are invincible to sexually transmitted diseases and don't benefit from the programs.

The Health Education division is made up of a number of programs, individual outreach, referral, training and peer workshops. It also supplies pamphlets, brochures and matrials to educate students, faculty and staff on sexuality, alcohol and drugs, eating disorders, stress, prevention of breast and testicular cancer and AIDS.

The program is located on the second floor of Health Services and is available 8:30-5 p.m. weekdays by appointment.

Sally Damon is a staff health educator at Health Services with a sub-specialty in alcohol and drug education. She coordinates the drug and alcohol education programming, teaches several public health classes and is a counselor for antibody testing.

"I don't do counseling with people per say. I usually meet with people individually and then refer them out to Alcohol counseling or Mental Health Services," Damon said.

Gloria Defobio, also a health educator, is the coordinator of the contraception education program on campus. This program teaches students about STD's and the various forms of contraception.

Scholar says aliens mate with humans

By ANNE THOMPSON
Associated Press

CAMBRIDGE — Harvard psychiatrist Dr. John Mack has never had sex with a space alien, nor does he care to. It could compromise his objectivity.

Mack, a Pulitzer Prize winner and Harvard faculty member, firmly believes those people who claim to have had extremely close encounters with beings from other worlds.

And in his new book, "Abduction," he relates his findings after spending four years studying 120 "experiencers" - people who say they had sexual or reproductive experiences with aliens who abducted them and took them aboard spaceships.

The 13 case studies in his book include Ed, who remembers an alien woman taking a sperm sample from him when he was in high school; Jerry, who says she gave birth to a human-alien hybrid; and Peter, who tells Mack he had an "alien wife" in a "parallel universe."

"There is a consistent reproductive theme," Mack said. "Now, do I mean by that literally there are millions of babies being made? I don't know. I can't claim that this is occurring literally in our physical dimension of reality."

Your Horoscope

By Joann Dixon

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Unreliable information worries you and you will gain the respect and authorization you seek. A lesbian is a source of constant support and helpful advice.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Do a favor for someone who deserves better than what they have. Romantic banter helps you embark on a new adventure. Steer clear of rich foods. A simpler diet is much better for you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): The return of a former love could ignite the flames of passion. You know exactly what a business colleague is talking about and had better start acting like it.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your sense of style sets you apart from the crowd today. If you expect a child to strive for excellence, then you must do likewise.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Take on those new colored glasses and see someone as they really are. Put your trust in those who are more experienced and you will emerge stronger and wealthier.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Maximize your good luck by considering all options. The offer that is on the table may be the only one you get. Reward yourself as well as your friends.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The scope of an argument prevented by a young person will amaze and please you. Be open to new ideas. Pertaining a child could be the first step toward easing financial problems.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A family relationship needs nurturing. Once you soften your approach, a child will see the light. Discuss several ideas before deciding which is right to do.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Inside information could save you or a family member a bundle of cash. Be ready to act quickly when a good deal comes along. A romantic partner's words will set your heart dancing.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You could bind a pleasant way to fill a need. A parent child relationship is slowly changing. Reaffirm your goals and ask a lover. A friend will lend room for you if you ask.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your home could be a beehive of activity. Rumance soars when and your mate spend more time alone. Tradition dictates what should happen at a family function.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You needed greater intellectual stimulation in your work. A short business trip could bring lucrative results. You will soon have a chance to further your education.

Quote of the Day

"The only way to make sure people you agree with can speak is to support the rights of people you don't agree with."

Defobio also coordinates the peer health education phone line. This is a new service available for to call If they have questions about drugs, alcohol, sexuality, or eating disorders.

"The issues aren't so different from when I was in college in the 80's, but the resources are much greater , there's a lot more open communication especially around sex, drug use and drinking. I like to share my knowledge and experience with students to get everyone talking on the same level so that we can reach out," Damon said.

Defobio said working with students has affected her because she has learned new things from every student.

"I've been working with people on different jobs on alot of sensitive issues. It's all changed me because every day I come into contact with different p ople so I change in some way," she said.

Damon said the most important way to educate people on these vital issues is by bringing it into the classrooms and make It part of their daily schedule.

"Working with students challenges me as an Individual to be open-minded, frank, and able to talk about sensitive issues and work with people at their own level. The last thing I want as a person is to be up here telling someone down there what they should do," Damon said.

We should be able to talk together and connect and work things out one-on-one. The services are here, the staff is open and friendly and nonjudgemental. All you have to do is call and we'll help you out," she said.

Damon also said a lot of sexually transmitted diseases are prevalent on campus.

"There's a certain amount of belief that I'm in college, everyone else is like me...I'm clean, their clean...but you really can't go on with that as something for how you're going to choose to have sex or not to have sex with someone," she said.

"The bottom line is if you protect yourself every time all the time, it's generally not something you'll have to worry about. It's hard to do but it's generally what we work with people on-making safer sex fun. Making condoms easy to get, showing people how to use them-how to work them into sexualityand have them available as well..." Damon said.

Gorillas edge out the Crimson at The Hill

By ANDREW BRYCE
Collegian Staff

CHRIS RAGUSA/COLLEGIAN

The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team defeated Harvard 18–17 in a high–scoring battle at Richard F. Garber Field yesterday afternoon.

It was high–scoring. It was exciting. It was close.

And, fortunately for the No. 15 University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, it was a much–needed victory as the Gorillas edged out No. 19 Harvard, 18–17 at Richard F. Garber Field.

The Crimson scored the last four goals of the game to narrow the Gorilla lead to a point with 11 seconds to play, but failed to get another scoring opportunity after losing the faceoff.

Massachusetts scored three goals in a matter of 21 seconds, jumping out to a 5–2 lead in the first 6:16 of the opening quarter. Senior Wes Depp scored two of those goals in a 12 second span. The Crimson scored the last two goals of the quarter to make it 5–4.

The Gorillas managed to sandwich the two second quarter Harvard goals with four of their own, two at the beginning and at the end. Sophomore Eric Bailey (1 goal, 2 assists) and freshman Chris Grande (2 goals) scored the first two goals, while sophomores Eric Triolo (2 goals, 1 assist) and Buddy Hoffman (team–high four goals) put the other two second quarter goals in the net for the 9–6 halftime score.

Harvard came out strong in the third quarter, with two goals coming in the first 2:22, compliments of Mike Eckert (3 goals, 5 assists) and Spencer Rice. The Gorillas then answered with two goals, one by Hoffman and the other from junior Jeremy Murphy, his first point since his four– goal game before he went out with a knee–injury.

The Crimson then tied it up on two different occasions. Harvard tied it at 11 after three straight goals in the third quarter, and at 13 after two Gorilla goals.

The Gorillas then exploded for five unanswered goals in the first 7:55, the first one by junior Mike Valente (3 goals, 2 assists). It looked as if it was just about over. ..until the Crimson scored the last four of the game. Unfortunately for Harvard, it needed two more to win.

"We had some nice unsettled goals, we got out ahead," said Massachusetts Coach Ted Garber. "We made some good shots. Defensively, though, we didn't tighten up."

Backup sophomore goalie Kevin Ratkiewicz started in net for the Gorillas, but after letting 11 goals in the net, was replaced by junior Tom LoPresti at 9:52 of the third.

One standout was Gorilla face–off man Sam Joseph. While his teammates were racking up the goals, it was the senior midfielder who was initiating the attack each time, winning 33 of the 40 faceoffs.

"Sammy won the game (for us)," said Garber. "We won almost every faceoff. It gave us three or five more possessions of doing something."

An away game at Rutgers on Saturday (1 p.m.) is next for the Gorillas. Is Massachusetts expecting the same type of high–scoring game?

"Hopefully, we'll have something like a 10–8 game," said Joseph. "An 18–17 game is kinda scary."

Search narrowed to two

Strong, Donnelly finalists for field hockey position

By MATT VAUTOUR
Collegian Staff

As the search draws to a close, the choice for the interim field hockey coach has been narrowed to two UMass alumni.

The finalists are Megan Donnelly, who is currently the coach of the University of Rhode island, and Judy Strong, who has built the Smith College program into one of the top programs in Division III.

The position opened up when Coach Pam Hixon accepted the job as coach of the United States National Team. Hixon has stated that she plans on returning to UMass following the 1996 Olympics.

Strong and Donnelly both had spectacular careers at UMass. Strong was the 1981 Player of the Year and a three time All–American. She was a member of the U.S. National team in 1980 and 1984.

Donnelly was an All–American all four years of her college career and was on the 1988 Olympic team.

Donnelly was excited to be in the running for the job.

"It's exciting. It's my alma mater and that's special to any athlete," said Donnelly. "I haven't heard anything yet so it's business as usual until I hear."

Strong was unavailable for comment. Smith Athletic Director Lynn Oberbillig spoke on the prospects of losing Strong.

"I'm happy for Judy," said Oberbillig. "I know she has aspirations to coach at a Division I program. She'd do a great job. I can't say I'm excited, because it will leave a big void in our program."

The players are anxious to work with their new coach.

"I'm sure either one would do a good job," said senior forward Danielle Borges. "It's just a matter of which one."

Minutemen win streak at 13

The University of Massachusetts baseball team swept Rhode Island (8–3, 11–5) in a doubleheader.

The University of Massachusetts baseball team dominated Rhode Island, sweeping a doubleheader at Earl Lorden Field and tying a school record with a 13–game winning streak.

UMass (18–11, 12–2 in Atlantic 10) took 8–3 and 11–5 decisions over the Rams (2–26–1, 1–12 A–10). The Minutemen also took over first place with the sweep.

"This was real important for us, two good wins. We got the hitting when we needed it," Coach Mike Stone said.

In the first game, UMass jumped all over Rhode Island starting pitcher Steve Major. Second baseman Mark Pileski smacked a one–out double followed by a bloop single from Designated Hitter Justin Howard. Right Fielder Bill Knight plated both with a double.

After shortstop Greg LaRocca walked, first baseman Jeff January connected on a two–run double. Catcher Andy Pelis finished off the first with sacrifice fly, scoring January to make it 5–1 UMass.

Brad Gorrie led off the second with a single and promptly stole second and third. Left fielder Ryan Jette knocked Gorrie in with a single to left field. Jette then stole second, and came all the way around to score off an errant pick–off attempt by Major.

Adrian Softic (2–2) picked up the win for UMass, settling down after yielding a first–inning run. The Rams scored first on consecutive doubles from Jon Gould and Chris Rothemich.

The Minutemen scored again when Gorrie reached base on an infield single. He advanced to third on a two base error when Rhode Island second baseman Jeff Motta failed to cover on a steal attempt. A sacrifice fly from Pileski scored Gorrie to put UMass on top 8–1.

Rhode Island scratched out individual runs in the fourth and the fifth off Softic on RBI singles from Motta and Rothemich.

Softic went five innings, giving up three runs on six hits while walking two. Greg Dowd came on to pitch the final two innings to record his fourth save. The game was a seven–inning makeup of a April 13 rainout.

UMass had to come from behind to take the second game. Rhode Island once again scored first as UMass starting pitcher Chad Paronto walked the bases loaded in the first. The Rams' Steve Cote knocked home a run with a line drive single to center. Paronto got out of the jam, getting Motta to ground into a double–play.

In the second, after a walk to Rhode Island's Matt Olney, Gould and Steve Foster each followed with RBI doubles.

Pelis homered in the third inning to put UMass on the board. In the fourth, January blasted a 3–run HR, his fifth on the year, to right field with Howard and Knight aboard.

Jette, a sophomore transfer from URI, singled and stole second in the fifth, his 14th stolen base of the season. Jette, earlier thrown out on the bases for the very first time, scored on a Pileski sac fly.

Center fielder Nate Murphy added two more RBI as the Minutemen put three insurance runs on the board to finished off the sweep.

Chad Sullivan (3–2) relieved Paronto in the third for UMass and pitched the strong innings for the win. Dowd once again pitched the final two innings picking up his fifth save.

"We rallied together, and we have now put ourselves in a great position in the A–10," Knight said.

UMass looks to set the all–time winning streak record as it takes on Hartford tommorow at Lorden Field at 3 p.m.

Regional powers collide

The Massachusetts softball team hosts its arch–rival, Connecticut, today in a double–header at Totman Field.

Had the Universities of Massachusetts and Connecticut clashed in the NCAA basketball tournament, interest across New England would have known no limits.

Today's 3 p.m. softball double–header pitting the regional rivals will probably not inspire so much scrutiny, but that is no reason to ignore what is certain to be an intense twin–bill.

"This is no time to mess around," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "[UConn's] been winning, we've been winning, and this week coming up is a big one."

That it is. The Minutwomen (16–9) shall try to further ignite it presently blazing offense against a dynamic ace, sophomore Kara Chanasyk. The righthander is coming off a no–hitter she threw past Boston College Tuesday. Either Jen Wardwoll (4–0, 0.96 ERA) or Bridgett McCaffery (3–5, 1.83) will start in addition to Chanasyk, who anchors the 19–10 Huskies at 12–5, 1.79. Opponents have hit only .144 versus UConn.

While Chanasyk was tossing her second career no–no, UMass upped its mark to 16–9 by coming from behind twice against Central Connecticut State at New Britain, Conn., to win 4–3 and 6–4.

"CCSU can really hit," Sortino said. "They always give us trouble down there."

UMass has proved it can really hit, too. Remember the batting average comparison this space made a couple of weeks ago? The tides have since turned drastically, as UMass now leads its opponents by 40 points, .280–.240. Freshman left fielder–first baseman Chris Martens, last week's Atlantic 10 Player of the Week, paces the club at a .410 clip. Entering the CCSU contests, she ranked fourth in the conference in hitting. Her 21 RBI are also the most for a Minutewoman.

Freshman Dana Golla has added depth to the UMass rotation, picking up her second win in the nightcap at CCSU to go with a 1.51 ERA and only one walk in 22 innings pitched.

Recruiting class intact for next season

By MATT VAUTOUR
Collegian Staff

The 1994 University of Massachusetts hockey recruiting class is complete as the team prepares to enter Hockey East next season.

One forward, two defensemen and a goalie have been added to the mix that will include returning players and transfers as well.

"We made additions in three areas," said UMass Coach Joe Mallen.

The goalie is Brian Regan, who announced his commitment to UMass in early November. He is considered one of the best goaltenders coming out of high school in New England.

"We looked at all the goaltenders available in the area and we felt he was the best guy," said Mallen.

Mallen said at the close of the season that size and speed were priority in his recruiting and he has addressed both.

The Minutemen will add another Canadian to the mix with forward Chris Fawcette.

> "We'll be as competitive as we can night in and night out. We're the underdog, but we won't be the puppy dog."
> — Massachusetts hockey coach Joe Mallen

"He's a very speedy wing," said Mallen. "He plays a great two–way game. I think he's going to be a legitimate Hockey East player."

The class is rounded out by two professional prospects added to the Minuteman blue line. Brad Norton, who was drafted in the ninth round by the Edmonton Oilers and Mike Gaffney, who has been touted as a potential third round pick in this years draft, should be key additions.

Mallen touts the two as having a rare combination of size and good hands. Norton, at 6–foot–5, 230 pounds, and Gaffney at 6–foot–1, 210 pounds, are sound defensively and have some offensive skills as well.

Mallen said he expects the addition of the recruits and transfers to the mix will spark a healthy competition for roster spots and playing time.

"They have to accept the challenge to compete for a spot," said Mallen. "The increase in numbers will bring out the best in everybody."

Mallen said he is excited about the upcoming season.

"We'll be as competitive as we can night in and night out," said Mallen. "We're the underdog, but we won't be the puppy dog."

Holyfield wants Tyson in ring after prison

By TIM DAHLBERG
Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — Mike Tyson, still in prison, already is back in the heavyweight title picture.

Evander Holyfield put him there Tuesday, even as he wrapped up preparations for his defense of two parts of the heavyweight title against Michael Moorer.

"God meant for me to be in this thing until Mike Tyson comes out," Holyfield said. "It's predestined that I fight Tyson. Something about this world is that they just have to see that fight against Tyson."

Holyfield was in training to fight Tyson until Tyson pulled out of their scheduled November 1991 bout with an injury. Now, he wants to unify all portions of the heavyweight title and then fight the former champion, who is scheduled to be released from prison next spring.

The bout, he said, would probably take place in Atlanta in 1996, the same year the city is host to the Summer Olympics.

"I'm meant to fight until 1996 and the time I fight Tyson will be in 1996," Holyfield said. "Everything will come to Atlanta, Georgia, with a big bang."

Holyfield, who regained the IBF and WBA titles when he won his rematch against Riddick Bowe last November, defends the titles Friday night at Caesars Palace against Moorer, the No. 1–ranked contender.

If he beats the undefeated Moorer - and he's a 2–1 favorite to do so - Holyfield could fight Lennox Lewis, the WBC champion, for the undisputed title later this year.

Lewis also has to fulfill his part of the bargain by beating Phil Jackson on May 6 in Atlantic City, then Oliver McCall in a mandatory defense.

Isiah hurt, might retire

By HARRY ATKINS
Associated Press

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — To the very end, Isiah Thomas was tough. He took the pain the way he took the glory – as though he deserved it all.

Thomas tore his right Achilles tendon in what was almost certainly the last NBA game of his career, a 132–104 loss Tuesday night to the Orlando Magic.

The injury also will prevent him from playing for the U.S. team in the World Championships this summer in Toronto. Yet he refused to feel sorry for himself.

"I don't believe a basketball player should lay on the floor and cry when he's hurt," Thomas said. "I know guys growing up in my (Chicago) neighborhood today. If you're a basketball player, or a hooper, you take the pain."

Thomas has taken his share this season. He has been bothered with a hyperextended knee, a broken rib, a broken hand, a strained arch, a calf injury and a cut left hand. He has missed 20 games this season with injuries.

He limped off the court for the last time with 1:37 left in the third quarter Tuesday. He scored 12 points in 26 minutes and waged a losing battle against Magic rookie Anfernee Hardaway, who finished with 25 points.

"It felt like I got shot with a cannon," Thomas said. "When I did it, I thought it was my Achilles. I had no control of my foot. I don't know exactly what happened."

Really, it didn't matter. He will undergo surgery in the next day or two and recovery will take about six months, team physician Dr. Ben Paolucci said.

Zulus enter race, right wing out

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A pro–apartheid leader quashed hopes Thursday that he would bring the white right wing into South Africa's elections, and Zulu nationalist Mangosuthu Buthelezi made his campaign debut after ending his election boycott.

Buthelezi said he dropped his opposition to the election to end the violence. Fighting between supporters of the African National Congress and his inkatha Freedom Party has killed more than 700 people since the beginning of March.

Israel may uproot citizens

JERUSALEM (AP) - Israel is willing to uproot jewish settlements in the Golan Heights to achieve peace with Syria, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin said Thursday.

"For me, peace is a more important value for the future of Israel's security than one group of settlements or another," Rabin told leaders of Israel's kibbutz movement, some of whom heckled him.

Rabin's statement, his most clear–cut on the subject, responds to a key Syrian demand. It comes in advance of Secretary of State Warren Christopher's Mideast visit next week that is expected to focus on breaking the Syria–Israel impasse in negotiations.

House passes crime bill

WASHINGTON (AP) - The House passed a $28 billion get–tough–on–crime bill Thursday demanding life imprisonment of three–time violent and drug offenders and greatly expanding the federal crimes subject to the death penalty.

The bill passed 285–141. Negotiators from the Senate and House will now attempt to work out a compromise with a $22 billion version approved by the Senate last November. "This is a historic moment," said Rep. Charles Schumer, D–N.Y., chairman of the Judiciary Committee's crime panel. "For the first time, this body is recognizing the anguish on the streets that calls out to us to do something tough on crime."

Judiciary Committee Chairman Jack Brooks, D–Texas, said the bill broke the mold of past efforts by "ensuring that hardened repeat offenders will be put out of commission for good while not giving up on a whole new generation of young people who can be helped to avoid taking the wrong path."

Flynn won't run for governor

BOSTON (AP) — Former Mayor Raymond Flynn reportedly has decided against running for governor of Massachusetts this fall.

Flynn has told President Clinton and Sen. Edward Kennedy, D–Mass., that he will continue serving as U.S. ambassador to the Vatican, the Boston Globe and the Boston Herald reported Thursday. But Kennedy spokeswoman Pam Hughes said the senator had no such conversation with Flynn.

Flynn told Clinton of his decision during a meeting Wednesday in Washington, where the ambassador was conveying Pope John Paul II's wishes on United States and United Nations policy on population control, the newspapers were told by unnamed sources.

Top adminstrators forced out of jobs

By CATHERINE B. PULLEY

Chancellor David K. Scott announced yesterday that Provost Glen Gordon, and vice–chancellors Samuel Conti and Daniel Melley will be leaving their positions at the end of this academic year.

Melley, the chancellor for University Advancement, will step down from his position on June 1, and Gordon and Conti will be leaving their posts by July 1.

"This is a shabby was to treat three people who have given long years to the university," said Jeremiah Allen, a professor in the English department and a former University provost. "This is not civilized. Chancellor Scott is a decent human being, and I don't think he is responsible for this."

"I feel very fortunate to have worked with all three administrators through my first year," said Chancellor Scott. "I appreciate their service, especially in light of the very difficult times the campus has been through over the last few years."

Both the President's office and the UMass news office declined comment.

Efforts to reach Gordon, Melley and Conti were unsuccessful.

Provost Gordon joined the University in 1964 as a faculty member in political science, member and was named acting provost since July 1991.

Daniel Melley joined the staff in 1961 as assistant news and publications editor. He later served as new director, and was eventually named vice–chancellor for University Advancement. Melley received a bachelor's degree in English from UMass–Amherst and a master's degree in public relations from Boston University.

Samuel Conti joined UMass as dean of graduate students and research in 1980. From 1984–94 he has served as vice– chancellor for research, graduate education and economic development. Conti received his bachelor's degree in biology and chemistry from Brooklyn College in 1952, his master's degree in microbiology from University of Connecticut, and his doctorate in microbiology from Cornell University in 1959.

Today in the wake of a press release, Chancellor Scott met with all the academic deans, the Faculty Rules Committee, student representatives, and the President of the Faculty Union. A full faculty meeting is being called for Wednesday, with a time to be announced later.

BOG against SGA proposal for Commission

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: This is the last in a series of stories concerning the Board of Governors.

The Board of Governors at the University of Massachusetts has come under recent attack from the student governments. Dan Gordon, the Vice Chairman of the BOG, responded to recent statements made by the Student Government Association and the Graduate Student Senate, and talked about why the BOG doesn't support the proposal to create a Campus Center/ Student Union Commission.

The Undergraduate Student Senate passed a proposal to reconstruct the BOG by creating the Campus Center/ Student Union Commission, an 18–member board whose members will be appointed. The proposal now needs a two–thirds vote by the GSS in order for it to be enacted. But, according to Gordon, the Commission is unneeded.

"The majority of the board does not support the SGA's Campus Center/ Student Union Commission for a number of reasons," Gordon said. "First, there is nothing wrong with the current BOG constitution and by–laws. Second, their Commission does not reflect the efforts of the BOG's Review and Restructuring Committee."

The Board feels that the new Commission is too much a product of the SGA, according to Gordon.

"What they have done is eliminated elected seats all together and designed a body that is an arm of the SGA," Gordon said. "They attempt to get politics out of the BOG while they try to combine it with the SGA that is political."

The proposal will also slash the BOG's budget from $80,000 to $15,160. Gordon said he believes that the new Commission will not have the money to work well for the students because of the budget cuts.

"The Commission is way under– funded," Gordon said "The BOG's administrative budget used to be just

This concrete canoe isn't but the civil engineers have built a new canoe in its place with intensions of racing it this weekend

By GAYLE DOUGHERTY
Collegian Correspondent

The Minuteman Marching Band Drum Corps and a small crowd of intrigued students gathered at the campus pond to see the christening of "Foggy Bottom" Wednesday afternoon.

Civil engineering professor Don DeGroot and his students took advantage of the sunny weather to launch their specially designed concrete canoe. Students tested its maneuverability and their rowing skills for this weekend's regional competition for the American Society of Civil Engineers at the University of Maine–Orono.

Since September, these students have been researching, planning, designing and building the full–size canoe to compete with the other 19 registered chapters in the competition.

In general, canoes are not made of concrete but, since it is the most widely used material in civil engineering, DeGroot and his crew decided to take advantage of it. According to DeGroot, however, using concrete made the project an incredible challenge.

The group's ideal goal was to design a light, swift canoe with high structural integrity. DeGroot said. To do so, the students had to experiment with several prototype concrete mixes. After testing various aggregates, the students discovered an effective and unique mix.

"We used an expanded shale product called Norlite instead of a normal concrete aggregate, and a fiberglass material called Fibermesh to increase the strength of the canoe," said Shawn Kelley, a senior engineering major. Kelley is leading the group participating in the project and is in charge of rais–

Students to bus to Boston

Lobby for lower cost of public education on Monday

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

Students will have the chance to tell state senators and representatives exactly how much they have to pay to attend the University of Massachusetts on Monday, April 25, when the Save Our Schools Coalition travels to the State House in Boston.

The SOS Coalition is encouraging students to join them in Boston on Monday to participate in UMass State House Day. The Coalition is sponsoring a trip to the State House to meet with state representatives and senators to discuss the increasing costs of attending the University.

"UMass State House Day was organized by President Michael K Hooker's office," said Amy Lloyd, legislative coordinator of the Student Center for Educational Advocacy and Research.

Because of the work done by the Student Government Association and SCERA, students' tuition will not increase next year. As of today, students' overall costs will increase by two percent.

If the state legislature approves a seven percent increase in state appropriations to the UMass system, there will be a rollback to a zero percent increase in overall costs. UMass is hoping for an increase of approximately $22 million.

The objective of the trip to the State House is to lobby for an increase in funding to allow costs to be rolled back. Students are being bussed to Boston so that politicians will be able to put faces with the decisions they make and better understand who they are affecting, Lloyd said.

"Students will meet with representatives and senators to show them that, every time they make cuts, these are the people they are cutting," Lloyd said. "Students will tell them stories about the financial problems they are facing at this University."

Students will be boarding buses at Haigis Mall Monday morning. The buses will leave for Boston at 7 a.m., and will arrive at the Parker House Ballroom where they will be welcomed by Ken Lemanski.

College newspapers across the country have been distributing the "She's a child, not a choice" anti–abortion advertisement. Overall, the responses from students have been varied.

So far, the supplement has been, or is going to be, in 97 college newspapers.

In September 1993, the advertisement was in The Daily Bruin at the University of California in Los Angeles. Eric Yang, national advertising manager of the paper, said several letters were published by students who were offended, but nothing was done against the paper itself. He also said the ad was run the year before.

Brad Coevering, advertising manager of the Stanford Daily at Stanford University, said the ad was printed in October, and it was the third time the advertisement has been in their paper.

"One advertiser was upset because she felt it was an editorial advertisement. But it laids out of the paper and it says "paid advertisement" on every page," Coevering said.

The University of Miami's paper, The Hurricane, also had the advertisement. Julio Fernandez, the business manager, said they had the insert a week before they were supposed to go out, but someone came and destroyed them by throwing red paint all over 10,000

NEW YORK — Richard Nixon fell into a deep coma Thursday, three days after suffering a major stroke, and doctors said the former president's condition appeared to be life–threatening. Nixon's family was at his side as his condition deteriorated, according to a statement from New York Hospital, where he was brought after suffering the stroke Monday night.

The hospital gave no other details and Nixon's doctors and aides declined to discuss his treatment or condition in detail. But other doctors said the coma sharply reduced Nixon's chances of survival and virtually guaranteed he would never recover his formidable powers of expression.

What event includes over 285 basketball teams, a craft gallery, four bands, a Basketball Hall of Fame multi–media exhibit, media personalities, Dorothy and Toto and a free car? Haigis Hoopla

Over 285 teams of three or four have registered to play in Saturday's preliminary rounds and Sunday's final rounds, with teams coming from as far away as Maine, New Jersey, New York and Pennsylvania. A media division features local television and newspaper personalities including players from the Daily Hampshire Gazette.

About 30 Sports Management students taking an Event Management course have put together Haigis Hoopla, an annual event that has grown larger and more community– orientated this year. Haigis Hoopla is a three–day basketball event, beginning tonight with a registration party in the Curry Hicks Cage.

This year nobody was turned away because the Event Management class has access to more basketball hoops. Sixteen games will be played at once.

Student Jason Govostes said this year's Hoopla will be "different because it's more community orientated."

"It's been fantastic in terms of getting hands–on experience planning a major sports event," said Rebecca Songer, one of the students organizing the event.

Du Bois' efforts still felt

Speaker gives testimony to civil rights leader's legacy

By CATHY CHANG
Collegian Staff

The legacy of W.E.B. Du Bois and his fight against socio-economic injustices is one that is felt today in the upcoming South African elections and the self-identity of the African- Americans, as well as all people of color in the world, said Dr. Anthony Monteiro who spoke last night at Campus Center.

Monteiro, the head of the African American Equality Commission of the Communist Party USA, of which Du Bois was once a member, was sponsored by The W.E.B. Du Bois Petition Coalition, among other organizations.

"What is wrong with naming a library after a revolutionary intellectual?" Monteiro said about the University's reluctance to rename the Tower Library in Du Bois' honor. "They named the nation's capital after another revolutionary — Washington."

Monteiro criticized the "racist double-standard" that Du Bois and other intellectual blacks have recognized struggled against, in which white liberals support racial equality, yet hold that black achievements are inferior to European ones.

Monteiro said that Du Bois recognized that communism was the only solution to racism. "Racism and colonialism is essential in capitalism," Monteiro said in reference to the exploitation of working classes, which are often made up by blacks and people of color.

"The world can't change without altering them," he said.

Quoting Du Bois from his autobiography, Monteiro said: "I believe in communism."

Du Bois has been praised by many world leaders and written and edited numerous journals, including the NAACP's publication, The Crisis, Monteiro said. Du Bois had also attended the University of Berlin and taught at several colleges and was the first African-American to receive a doctorate degree from Harvard University.

JESSICA TAVERNA / COLLEGIAN
Anthony Monteiro

At times, Du Bois clashed with other leaders of the Black movement at turn of the century, including Booker T. Washington and Marcus Garvey. Monteiro said that Du Bois was one of the few who challenged the belief that the Black movement could be forwarded only by complying and compromising with the White-dominated status quo.

"He opposed the Black fear and love of the White race," he said. Yet Du Bois could also appreciate Shakespeare and Milton, he said.

"'How far can my love for the oppressed race accord with love for the oppressing country?'" Monteiro said, quoting Du Bois. "'And when do the loyalties diverge?'"

When asked about the fall of the Soviet Union, Monteiro said that the perceived failure of communism is "wishful thinking."

"It is a moment to get their breath," he said about capitalist countries. He pointed out the rise of fascism in European countries, as well as the ethnic conflict in Eastern Europe that happened soon after communist governments were removed.

In South Africa, he said, the interest is towards socialism, and that the western media has failed to recognize that the upcoming election is the transition towards this.

ing funds for the Maine trip.

Friday morning DeGroot and nine students will haul "Foggy Bottom" to Maine. Judging on the academic aspects of the project will begin that afternoon. A 10-page report outlining the concrete mix, project management plan, hull design, construction and innovative features of the canoe will be presented to a four-judge panel of professional engineers. An oral presentation and display board will also be reviewed by the judges.

Saturday, the students will participate in a series of canoe races. Prizes will be awarded to winners of sprint and distance canoe races in the co-ed, women's, men's and faculty categories. The team with the highest overall score will advance to the national competition.

"Last year we didn't make it to the regionals... and the University of New Hampshire advanced to the nationals. This year it will be at UMass," DeGroot said.

Celebration in honor of Earth Day

By BEN GEMAN
Collegian Staff

The struggle for environmental and social justice will continue on the University of Massachusetts campus tomorrow. For a day, the struggle will be set to music.

In celebration of Earth Day on Saturday, several bands, as well as humanitarian and environmental organizations, will gather in the quadrangle between the Greenough and Baker residence halls starting at noon.

The free day-long event, sponsored by Students Acknowledging Kinetic Energy and the Central Area Government, will function as both a concert and an educational forum.

Present at the event will be organizations such as Earth First!, an environmental group, and Food Not Bombs, an organization providing aid to the homeless.

Earthfoods Cafe and Arise, an organization seeking to encourage the disadvantaged and homeless to find alternatives to the welfare bureaucracy, will also be on hand.

"They're not large groups with massive hierarchies. They're collective groups that have a responsibility to the individual to make them empowered," said SAKE member Aaron Piziali.

Bands ranging from hardcore acts to folk musicians will be playing throughout the day.

The bands playing will be Gypsy, Tree, Hell No, Chameleon's Colours and Shades Apart.

Representatives from the organizations present will speak throughout the day, as will Meg Rayne, the lead singer of Gypsy, who is also an anti-nuclear activist.

SAKE, the event's co-sponsor, is "a student action group whose main focus is trying to empower the individual through group acknowledgement and group understanding," said Piziali.

Throughout the semester, the organization has hosted bands to play benefit concerts in the basement of Greenough residence hall in support of a number of different groups, such as Necessities/Necessidades, a battered women's shelter in Northampton and the Western Shoshone Defense Fund.

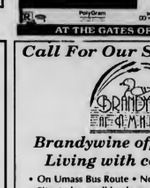
"The faculty is trying to figure out why these three people, and why now," said Frank Hugus, a professor in Germanic Languages and Literature. "I find this a troublesome development."

"I have not spoken with he chancellor yet, but my reaction is one of dismay," said Barbara Partee, the chair of the Research council and the Graduate Council and a distinguished professor of linguistics.

"Universities are not exactly democracies, but they are not corporations either," said Partee. "This was done too abruptly with no consultation."

Scott said he will conduct a nationwide two year search to fill the positions created by the two year departures and interim appointments will be made after consultation with groups on campus.



Chancellor Scott will recommend to President Hooker that Melley be replaced on a interim basis by Ronald Story, who is now vice president for academic affairs in the UMass president's office and a tenured professor of history at UMass Amherst.

"I support the effort of the Chancellor to restructure the university," said Al Lizana, the Student Trustee. "I am really happy with the changes."

Provost calls for participation

The following letter was written to University of Massachusetts faculty by Provost Glen Gordon. Due to circumstances beyond our control, the Collegian has been unable to print it until today.

As you may have read in the newspapers, the campus is embarked on a major campaign to influence the legislature regarding our FY95 budget. Ongoing budget shortfalls have placed the campus at great risk. It is essential that we do all we can to obtain the $11 million in new monies that we have requested for FY95, the campus share of the $22 million request for the system.

This coming Monday, April 25, is State House Day. It is a day when members of our coalition — students, faculty, staff, alumni and other friends of the University — will converge on Beacon Hill to make the strongest possible case to our legislators. We expect that many busloads of our students will participate in this activity.

I encourage you to give every consideration to participating students in terms of class attendance, quizzes and the like. I am encouraging those students to see you in advance of the event so you may plan accordingly. This is a very important activity and one in which the role of students and their parents is crucial. I thank you in advance for your cooperation.

Top ten times to remember

Two weeks ago, I wrote about the great times and people I met outside the Collegian offices, and I promised to give everyone a glimpse at some of the crazy stuff I did with Collegian staffers. Here is part two of my wild and crazy times.

10) Last fall, I travelled to Storrs, Conn., with my friends Andrew and Greg to cover a UMass–UConn football game. That was only the beginning of our wild weekend.

So (as we usually do) we made our own party. Thanks to the generosity of a stranger, we had beer. I drank four beers in 14 minutes and we were off and running. We set the record for number of times at Captain Nemo's pizza and i started a joke that we all repeat to this day. Remember Andrew Dice Clay's routine?

"I'll call ya in an hour. BACK! Get it? Hourback."

Imagine hearing that over and over at 120 decibels resonating off every building at UConn. You get the idea.

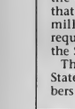
9) My friend Matt got tickets to the Bruins playoff series against Buffalo (obstructed view) last year. Remember when the B's got smoked four straight?

We paid $22 to get a seat looking straight at an air conditioning vent, paid $12 for parking and lost a muffler along the way.

8) I'll never forget last year's West Virginia basketball trip. Not only did we drive 12 hours to Morgantown, but we stayed in one of the worst Holiday Inns ever. My friend Art and Brian and Dave from WMUA were around, although Brian and Dave were 21 (is this a current theme or what?) and were drinking most of the time.

We had to drink Keystone Light in the hotel room and an attempt to get some of the ballplayers to party with us was unsuccessful. The fun began when we got drunk. We ordered Unforgiven on SpectraVision and I passed out before the finish. To this day i do not know what happened.

I woke up in the middle of the night and had some business to take care of on the john. As it turned out, i also had to vomit. The only available porcelain receptacle was the bathtub, so i did what any person would do. I emptied the contents of my stomach into the tub.



The problem was the next day when we had to take showers. I tried to drain the tub but it got clogged. Nobody could shower. Everyone was pissed at me. Then UMass lost by 22.

7) i travelled to Philadelphia to cover the Atlantic 10 hoop tournament last spring and I had one of the best hotel rooms I've ever been in. I also experienced a media hospitality suite for the first time.

I was drinking with a girl from West Virginia who is one of the more uncomplicated.

I paid her cabfare across town and when we got to her hotel, her roommate was there. I knew I'd struck out and wanted to go home, but this guy (we'll call him Ben) I was with was standing in the tub and wouldn't leave. He was so drunk he couldn't even talk.

Yup, you guessed it. Ben had a nice spot next to Miss W. Va. for the night and I passed out alone in a strange city.

6) Did you ever lose a tire and drive 750 miles on a toy tire in a rental car? Last fall's trip to Maine tested the limits of the amount of abuse you can put a rental car through. Let's just say we all said our prayers the night before we came home, and we made it 20 hours on a tire the size of a donut.

5) The 1992 Collegian takeover was a lowlight. I remember Alex Delgado (since sentenced to prison) threatening to take the paper down and bring the Latin Kings up from Hartford. I remember two photo guys having to crawl out of a locked darkroom by crawling above the ceiling and another photographer getting beat up because he took pictures of the takeover. The best was when Jose Belliard came after Josh Reynolds with a baseball bat.

4) The Los Angeles trip two months ago was all business but there was time for pleasure after it took 20 hours to get there. Darienne, our highly esteemed managing editor, wanted to sightsee so we rented a car, which she was kind enough to get in an accident with. My highlight was sitting at a bar downing a pitcher by myself while talking to two LA cops about Ronald Reagan.

3) I was finally 21 for a good basketball trip. Granted it was Wichita, Kansas, but beggars can't be choosers. For St. Patrick's Day we drank green beer and I got a chance to talk to Anheiser-Busch representatives.

"You gotta get going with that Zima–type stuff. They're kicking your ass with that."

We went to Hooters, which had opened a few nights ago, and got great service from our waitress. We also asked politely if we could get the O'Douis "Welcome to Wichita, UMass" sign hanging outside the establishment. When management said no, we did a drive–by and stole seven of the eight signs.

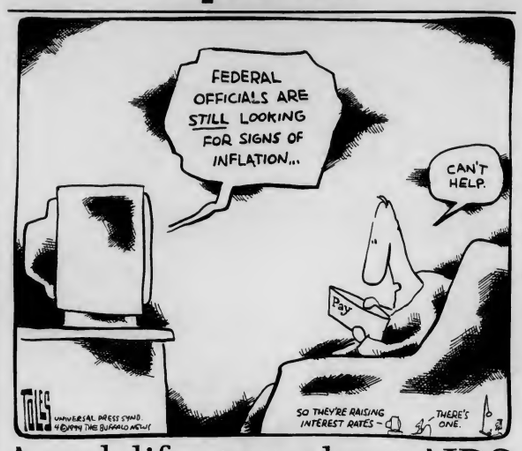
2) Embassy Suites was one of the first trips I've ever taken for the Collegian, and the finest hotel I've ever been in. Two TVs, a fridge, a coffee pot, a blow dryer and two queen beds. A room for four kings.

Our buddy Caleb was not a *Collegian*ite at the time, but we brought him on the trip provided he paid for all the tolls on the way down. To our delight, he came with a roll of quarters the length of a billy club.

We shot at lights with a BB gun, got drunk in the room and watched our friend Jeff converse with the maid in his underwear. I never thought I could have so much fun so close to Rutgers.

1) The greatest time with my Collegian pals came with a trip to the greatest football school in the country to see the greatest game of the season: Notre Dame–Florida State. It began when we lied to the rental car place and said we were going to Maine. Hey, the round trip was only 1,300 miles.

We got to South Bend Thursday morning and spent the next two days running amok. The locals and students there didn't much appreciate us; in fact, they were downright ornery.



I took out my anger by stealing wide receiver Mike Miller's mouthpiece when I visited the locker room on the eve of the game. We watched the game across the street from the field in the basketball arena and stormed the stadium when the Irish won. I actually enjoyed the 16–hour ride home. It was bringing the rental car back that was a problem.

A real–life story about AIDS

This is a story about my friend Phil and me. This is a story about every person living on this planet, in this country and at this University.

I met Phil through a man named Francis who I was lovers with about five years ago. We're friends now, and I must admit to some envy when I met Phil. He is a very good-looking guy, he's got a nice body and he is a kind and fun person. He was in the Navy for six years at one point, but that doesn't mean he's this weird macho control nut. Not at all.

How this story unfolds is that Phil is sick. For the year and a half that I knew him, I couldn't tell. I only found out after Francis told me that Phil had some reddish purple marks on his legs, and asked him about them. Francis is studying to be a nurse and has worked in AIDS–care hospices. He knows what Karposi's sarcoma looks like, and that is what it looked like to him.

Phil told Francis that he has HIV, and that he hadn't told him earlier because he really likes Francis and didn't want to scare him away. That must be one of the hardest things about living with HIV, the isolation that can happen when people find out and don't want to see you anymore.

Francis thought about it for a while, and he really likes and cares for Phil as well, so he's staying with him.

Over January, Phil took a turn for the worse. He has developed a bad infection in his right foot and lower leg. They are now swollen up to twice their normal size. They are all red and infected and look very painful, though Phil says his leg really doesn't hurt him. I can't imagine what it would be like to have my foot and leg swollen up and raw like that, all the time, and to know it will probably be like that for the rest of my life.

AIDS is a horrible way to die. HIV kills white blood cells in the immune system, and when those are gone the rest of the immune system can't pick the slack. White blood cells do the things the other parts of the immune system can't, and so all sorts of viruses, bacteria and such have free reign in your body when they're low or gone. HIV doesn't kill you by itself, but some other pathogen does, once HIV has knocked out your immune system.

The main reason I am writing this is to tell as many people as possible that HIV/AIDS is not limited to San Francisco and Africa, it is here at UMass.

The town of Hoiyoke has the highest infection rate for HIV per capita in the country. And most of those people aren't gay.

AIDS has never been a gay disease. Worldwide it is 60 to 70 percent heterosexual people who are infected. For some reason gay men in this country were infected at a much higher rate than the heterosexual population originally, but that has turned around. The fastest growing newly infected peoples are heterosexual women of color. AIDS is now the number one killer of young men between the ages of 18 to 34. If someone has AIDS when they're 18, they may have been infected when they were in their early teens. You don't have to have AIDS to transmit the virus, and you may not even know you are infected. Phil looked just fine the first few years I knew him, and I never would have known. Hell, I didn't know.

So, please be aware that no one is immune to HIV, and it isn't transmitted by who you are, but by what you do. Sharing needles to use drugs is maybe the best way to pass on the virus, but unprotected penetrative sex involving a penis comes in a close second. HIV is in the blood, semen, menstrual blood and vaginal fluids. Though woman to woman sex is probably the least risky, there are two lesbians I know about who couldn't have been infected any other way, and they both have AIDS.

When you have sex and will be inserting a penis into a vagina or anus, always use latex condoms. Though catching HIV through your mouth is less likely, the virus is so incredibly tiny that all it takes is the littlest scratch in your mouth or throat and there you are, HIV for life — however long it lasts.

I have another old boyfriend named Michael who has AIDS. I was with him seven years ago. He's not into anal sex, but he has really bad gums. That was probably how he was infected, by giving some infected man a fellatio, and the virus got into his body through his sore gums.

You don't have to have bad gums, though, because after flossing you can have little rips in your gums, or if you've eaten something hard and sharp that scrapes your mouth or throat a little, like bread or a fish bone.

As a young person myself I know how silly it may seem to worry about this, but if you don't want AIDS, you must. One night of sex, fantastic or not, is not worth dying of AIDS for. Take care, especially if you are drinking or otherwise drugging. Too many people have already died. The World Health Organization estimates that over one million people are already infected worldwide, and most of them have no idea they carry HIV.

Afterword: Phil died March 12, 1994 at 7:50 a.m. He died in Francis's arms. He and Francis shared a deep love, and this is another one of the many costs of AIDS, the wounds it leaves behind, as well as the people it takes away.

You can get a free anonymous HIV antibody test from Clinic Four at Health Services. After I found out about Michael, I got tested myself. I am HIV negative, which means the test did not detect any antibodies in my blood. That does not mean I do not have HIV, just that my body isn't making antibodies to fight it. Most people's bodies start making antibodies within two weeks to six months.

This is complicated by the fact that AIDS comes in a few different forms, so you could have a form that the test isn't designed to detect. The number for Clinic Four is 549–2627 ext. 126. The national number for HIV/AIDS info is 800– 342–2437. The number for the World Health Organization for global HIV/AIDS statistics is (202) 861–4346.

Please take care. AIDS is a terrible way to die.

John Beck is a junior majoring in English.

Letters to the Editor

'He said' column wasn't funny at all

To the editor:

Ordinarily I wouldn't take the time to read a column as moronic and infantile as Cutter Garcia's in "Sexual healing, '90s style" (April 20). On this day, however, I thought I'd give the writer the benefit of the doubt — perhaps I would be humored. The humor was not forthcoming.

I was amazed by Garcia's ability to denigrate the female gender with his adolescent responses to "the babes." It appears as if Garcia is as gullible as a 13–year old boy when he quoted one "babe" as saying "New Jersey girls love to [perform oral sex]."

If you do choose to move to New Jersey, Cutter, rest assured that your ill–humored columns will not be missed. One would think you target audience is junior high kids engrossed in Penthouse.

Frankly, I was not surprised that the Collegian lends support to such shoddy "journalism."

Thanks Prof. Denny for speaking out

To the editor:

in reference to Professor Denny's one–man crusade to inform parents and students of the deplorable conditions here at UMass ["'Outspoken' professor gains support," April 14], I have but one comment:

It's about time someone had the guts to publicly denounce the inadequate classroom conditions on this campus.

I have personally watched cockroaches the size of Brazil nuts crawl over the seats in Thompson Hall, sat in broken chairs in room 329N Morrill and watched large pieces of the ceiling in Goessman fall down around me while I tried to concentrate on the lecturer.

However, what I find even more inexcusable are the moldy carpets in classrooms like the New Africa House and the lack of teacher podiums or desks in these rooms. In my freshman year I had to watch as a professor struggled with a circa–1930s wooden desk balancing on four broken legs.

I truly feel that this University needs to address the physical part of the facility (and I do not mean a few more flower beds) and allocate monies for the repair and maintenance of the campus.

A call for more speech, not less

Censorship should be abhorrent to an academic community where freedom of inquiry and expression are at the heart of the institution's purpose. But this freedom has a price. The price is exposure to ideas we hate, as well as those we endorse.

Freedom of the press means that a newspaper can act freely without imposition of edicts from government censors. It was reflective of the highest traditions of the First Amendment for The Daily Collegian to accept an advertisement from an anti–abortion group — particularly in conjunction with the paper's simultaneous editorial condemnation of the ad.

The ACLU, which for years prior and subsequent to Roe v. Wade has been the leading legal proponent of a woman's right to reproductive freedom, deplores the content of the ad. But we support the paper's right to accept the advertisement.

Censorship of those with whom we most adamantly disagree is an invitation to authoritarianism. We believe that the antidote to bad speech, abhorrent speech and hate speech is not censorship but more speech and good speech. It is a simple construct, but it works.

Some years ago various censors at the University attempted to censor a speech by an anti–gay speaker. The rationale was the same as that which had been proposed to attempt to keep Angela Davis off the campus a decade before. When the anti–gay speaker came to the University, the campus responded with the largest gay rights demonstration in the history of western Massachusetts. The censors were defeated, as was the speaker's message of hate.

The ad was included under a policy which, with narrow exceptions, accepts paid advertisements, particularly political ads. A different policy, one which allowed or required exclusion of paid advertisements whose content was opposed by particular groups or various editors, would be an affront to the intelligence and sophistication of the University community and to the freedom of thought, debate and expression which that community should espouse.

William C. Newman is the Director of the Western Regional Office of the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts.

POWER condemns decision

The Progressive Organization for Women's Rights (POWER) condemns the Collegian for allowing their wallets and personal beliefs to compromise journalistic standards of accuracy and for condoning a politic which is based on denying women their human right to self–determination. Through accepting the recent "pro–life" advertisement, the Collegian has shown its readers just whose life it deems important.

Indeed, it is clear that the Collegian believes that the right of men to control women's bodies through patriarchal regulation is more important than a woman's right to define herself and control her own life. By printing this ad, the Collegian is engaging in and promoting the kind of misinformation and psychological terrorism which the right– wing utilizes to scare women and garner support for women– hatred.

Yet, even more disturbing is the fact that, last semester, the Collegian refused to print an advertisement planned and assembled by six UMass women which protested the Collegian's acceptance of strip bar ads. It was rejected on the grounds that the Collegian supposedly had a policy which prohibited ads with editorial content from being printed. Isn't the "pro–life" ad an editorial? Clearly, the Collegian is engaged in a double standard.

The Collegian claimed in its recent policy editorial which defended the ad that they only seek to foster debate on the issue. If that's true, then why was only one side of the issue represented? Doesn't debate inherently entail the presence of more than one side?

UMass POWER

The "pro–life" ad itself is filled with horrible misinformation, blatant lies and misogyny which are presented to readers as truth. Most of the articles within the ad are not referenced, and the one that is shows that most of its information was obtained from "research" performed 20 years ago.

The ad states that medical abortions are dangerous despite the fact that abortion, when performed in the first trimester, is one of the safest of all surgical procedures — safer than a tonsillectomy — especially if it is performed by women who have been rigorously trained by other women to use a procedure known as menstrual extraction which can be even safer than suction abortions.

In addition, the ad suggests that women who have been victims of rape and incest should not get an abortion and should instead recognize that there "is an intrinsic meaning or purpose in having the child," suggesting that there was an intrinsic meaning or purpose as to why they were raped. This hatred, these lies are simply unacceptable.

The Collegian claimed in its recent policy editorial which defended the ad that they only seek to foster debate on the issue. If that's true, then why was only one side of the issue represented? Doesn't debate inherently entail the presence of more than one side?

In addition, the Collegian must recognize that this is not about a simple debate in which ideas can be carelessly tossed to and fro without any impact on the ..ves of women. This is a real issue that impacts women, that kills women every day and the Collegian must understand that every time they publish something racist, homophobic, classist or misogynist, they are, whether intentionally or not, promoting hate, tacitly approving the oppression of millions of people.

We are calling on all students, faculty and most importantly businesses to boycott the Collegian, pull their advertising support and show the Collegian that we refuse to tolerate this anymore.

Stop the propaganda

To the editor:

I disagree with your stand in helping to spread anti– abortion propaganda throughout this University.

I would like to see the school paper used to help people unlearn the untruths we are fed by the dominant society.

Stop with the propaganda. We get enough of it without your color inserts.

Disappointed with ad

To the editor:

I am a first–year student here at UMass and have enjoyed your paper since i've been here. i felt you were fair and responsible with your coverage of Louis Farrakhan, giving all sides of the issue equal voice. Perhaps it was my expectation of that kind of responsible journalism that made me so disappointed with your April 20 issue.

Abortion is a sensitive, highly debated issue. Even though I consider myself pro–choice, i agree that anti–abortionists should be able to voice their opinions in a public forum. However, if your objective — as you stated — was to educate people on different viewpoints and encourage discussion, the appropriate action to take would have been to interview spokespeople of both sides of the issue and produce an article. The insert in your paper was a paid advertisement requiring no reporting by the Collegian.

I feel it was a poor decision to include that insert, and even poorer judgement was shown when you tried to pass it off as educating the community. Where's the opposing view? Where's the open dialogue? Let's face it, there was no journalism involved on the part of the Collegian. You just endorsed a check and lost integrity. In the future, save the sensationalism for the Minuteman.

Ad was a poor choice

To the editor:

I am appalled and disgusted with the Collegian's poor choice of advertisement. i sat down to eat lunch and read the Collegian as i normally do, and was sickened to see the 12–page pro–life insert. i could not believe that a paper that is supposed to represent a large and "diverse" campus was "bought out" by such a one–sided advertisement.

Didn't the Collegian even think about how this would affect women who had abortions or plan on having one? Obviously not. They can't be naive enough to have thought this advertisement would only bring about debates. Deciding to have an abortion and actually going through it is very emotionally traumatic.

The Collegian claimed to take the advertisement because "A responsible newspaper does not shy away from controversial subject matter, but presents issues to its readers in order to encourage debate." Well, I feel that a "responsible" newspaper doesn't betray its readers by presenting only one side of such an emotional issue. Nor does it recreate or add to the pain of women who have had abortions.

More than encourage debate, I feel it has angered, hurt, offended and betrayed many of its readers who, like me, are pro–choice and know a number of women who have had abortions.

In an attempt to present both sides of the issue, they failed miserably to include the other side, pro–choice. Alternatives to abortion are to keep the baby or to give it up for adoption. Neither the Collegian nor the advertisement mentioned the cons of the alternatives. Many women experience post–traumatic depression after they give up their babies for adoption.

The advertisement tries to convince its readers that "abortion reinforces women's powerlessness." I feel that pro–lifers who tell women what they can and can't do with their own bodies "reinforces women's powerlessness." The alternative neglects many realities.

Single mothers represent the largest population of poor in this country. Women are paid, at most, 71 percent of what men make. They can't afford to pay for day care or other expenses that having children incurs. They barely make enough money to support themselves.

I feel that too much time is wasted on the abortion issue as a whole. There are so many children who are physically, emotionally and sexually abused, neglected, homeless, living in poverty and unwanted in this world. Why argue about children who aren't even born yet?

If you don't want an abortion, don't have one. But don't infringe on my beliefs!

Protest missed point

To the editor:

This letter is in response to the rally that was held on Wednesday. That afternoon I stood and listened to many women speak passionately about their disgust with the pro–life insert that was included in the Collegian that day. They brought up many excellent points about sexism and the oppression of women in our society. I wholeheartedly agreed with their pro–choice views and with the falsehood and hypocrisy they saw in the pro–life arguments.

But when I left the Student Union, I was agitated and upset over what I had just witnessed.

To my dismay, the rally was not about exerting the strengths of the pro–choice movement, it was about condemning the Collegian for printing a point of view that was not popular among many. One woman went so far as to tear the newspaper up and encourage others to do the same. How could the liberal movement I associated myself with be advocating destruction and censorship of an opinion with which they did not agree?

I always thought we stood for supporting free expression and the exchange of ideas, not censorship and the suppression of thought. If everyone on this campus held all of the same opinions, we would live in a monotonous and dreary place. Furthermore, there would not be any new ideas or progress, and individuality would be stifled.

So, be angry and protest the views that were stated in the pro–life magazine, but do not be upset over its publication. Contrary to what many believe, that insert has caused a more positive impact than negative. The Collegian has started a creative tension among students about the abortion issue.

People are now thinking, discussing, debating and writing about the many different sides of abortion. Through this search for knowledge, students and faculty alike will be able to reach a higher truth within themselves. It will be a tragic day for our community if we ever succeed in censoring opinions that are different from our own. Keep free expression alive.

Decision applauded

To the editor:

I would like to take the time to applaud you for printing the pro–life advertisement on April 20th. Controversy abounds over your decision, with pro–choicers in the forefront. It's ironic that this group that is so adamant about freedom of choice would like to restrict mine as a reader of the Collegian.

So many students on this campus claim to vehemently support civil rights. Whereas I do not want to say they exclude the First Amendment in their crusade, some tend to alter it to expose only one side of every issue — the liberal side.

Every voice deserves to be heard. And those who are passionate about an issue should be confident enough about their convictions that they do not feel threatened through exposure of the opposing view.

Again, I commend you for printing the pro–life advertisement and demonstrating sincere support of civil liberties, and I advise those who become exasperated at this thought to pre–reg for a course in Constitutional law.

Don't water it down

To the editor:

I would like to thank the Collegian for printing the most informative, realistic description of abortion I have ever seen.

It must be tough to see a fetus in your morning paper if you killed one. The ad's photos were definitely graphic, and the pro–life agency had an agenda. But i never knew exactly what happened to an aborted fetus, what a fetus really looks like, how painful an abortion is. i don't want the watered– down version of the "issue" geared for those who can't bear to think about it. What good is having a choice if you don't know what you're choosing?

Honestly, I applauded Stacy Malone when she expressed anger over the publication of ads (see Anthony's strip bar. Usually, all I get out of anti–abortion or right–to–choose arguments is the type of anger displayed at yesterday's rally.

i wonder how many protesters read the ad. How could anyone read the descriptions of abortion techniques (page 9 of the ad) and still see the Collegian as denying women by printing that information? it's obvious who is denied when a pregnancy is aborted.

Insert tells the truth

To the editor:

Why are the "pro–choice" activists on this campus so angry? The reason is because the Collegian printed the truth about abortion. "Pro–choice" activists are afraid of the truth, because they know if the truth is told about abortion their movement will be defeated. That is why they are so willing to destroy freedom of speech in the name of some mythical "freedom of choice."

They are afraid to hear the truth, which is that abortion kills children.

Collegian not pro–life

To the editor:

After being at this University for three years and reading the Collegian daily, I don't understand how people can say that the Collegian is degrading to women and unequal with their choice of advertisements. I am pro–life and at least once every two weeks I read articles regarding pro–choice, feminism and other women's issues.

i read an article a couple weeks ago regarding the death of Dr. Gunnwhich basically labeled all pro–lifers as ignorant and violent. It went on to encourage every medical student to "learn how to perform abortions."

Not all pro–life advocates condone the actions of the activist who killed Dr. Gunn, yet we are all put into the same category. I am not a violent person who stands in front of clinics, but I do have my beliefs. I may not agree with the pro–choice view, but I understand that everyone has a right to their opinion and I respect that right.

These women who claim that their view is liberal seem to be extremely closed–minded by demanding that the Collegian not run a pro–life insert. They conveniently forget every article that has ever been printed by the Collegian regarding their issues, and threaten to have the board of executives fired. How ridiculous!

It's only fair that, if an issue is to be debated, all sides should be fairly represented. There are people out there who are pro–life and we do deserve the same freedom of speech as everyone else. I'm not here to say that our opinion is the only one, but at least let us present our side.

Maybe these people are afraid that when people see that the fetus on the cover is not just a "mass of tissue," they might change their minds. Abortion is not the only answer, and I was happy that the insert gave alternatives and places to go for help. Even if one person were to read this advertisement and benefit from it, it is worthwhile.

Everywhere i go I see bumper stickers saying, "If you don't like abortion, don't have one." Well, "if you don't like the insert, then don't read it!"

Credibility damaged

To the editor:

The "advertisement" which you accepted was a political polemic. ignoring the spirit of equal–time that the media grants political candidates, you have chosen a very lopsided way to present this issue. While it is heartening that the Collegian seems to be interested in encouraging debate, the irresponsible and reckless way the paper has tried to initiate this process has damaged its own credibility.

In the interest of equal time and in the interest of the Collegian genuinely serving as a vessel for community debate, take the money you took to run the ad and use it to run a 12– page insert where the other side of the story can be told.

Only then can you begin to restore your conipromised journalistic principles that were so celebrated in your editorial defending your decision. Act now to correct the mistake and begin to restore the integrity of the Collegian.

Geoff Weed

Reject use of labels

To the editor:

"Anti–abortion agenda" aside, i am glad that the Collegian supports free speech on the issue of abortion. I have been greatly dismayed to see the response of the pro–abortion community to a paid advertisement in the paper. But beyond this, and beyond the issue of abortion itself, there have been many stereotypes of pro–life men and women appearing in the discussion, stereotypes that are unfair and only serve to raise emotions and exacerbate the divisiveness of this issue.

Some have compared pro–lifers to those who would try to deny the historicity of the Jewish Holocaust. Just what facts are they disputing? The fundamental disagreement is whether a woman has a right to "terminate her pregnancy," or "kill her baby in the womb," depending on where you stand. To compare the two groups is in itself a political statement, defaming the pro–life camp.

There are extremists in the anti–abortion movement, but that doesn't mean that all pro–lifers are bigots or oppose feminist or progressive values.

Here at UMass the shrill voices of the pro–abortion activists seem to deny us any real choice on where to stand on this issue.

Peer pressure doesn't end in high school. The pressure here is: if you are a woman, then you must be pro–choice. If you are a Republican, you must be anti–choice (and, no self–respecting woman would ever be a Republican).

I'm sorry, but I choose to refuse your labels.

Whose 'free speech?'

To the editor:

Sometimes "free speech" is only free if it's paid for.

The Collegian editorial from the mentions that they want "to expose the campus community to all sides of controversial issues," and that "everyone has a right to their own opinion."

What they don't recognize is that, while in this country everyone has the right to state their opinion, their right to have it heard is usually governed by access to money and other resources traditionally denied to oppressed groups and monopolized by white, owning– class heterosexual men and their corporations.

As a man, I call on all men who read this to stand up for women's right to choose abortion, and to stand up against all sexism and violence against women. And I would urge the Collegian not to hide behind the banner of "free speech" unless they make their paper accessible to those of us who do not have $900 to buy an ad.

SGA President clarifies her rally remarks

To the Editor:

I do not waver from both my testimony at Wednesday's rally or my firm stance on choice issues. However, I would like to take this opportunity to clear up any misunderstandings that may have resulted from my statement regarding a petition that was distributed by the crowd.

On April 19, several members of the student body informed me of the Collegian executive committee's decision to accept a paid advertisement from the Human Life Alliance of Minnesota, Inc., and asked me to attend a rally which protested the advertisement.

An open microphone was provided and I was asked to speak. As I was standing in line, a person requested that I read a petition that was being circulated, which I did.

The petition called for the dismissal of the executive committee of the Collegian. I In no way endorsed the petition or encouraged anyone to sign it. I simply read it and explained that the petition was available to those who wanted to sign it.

I further explained to students, rally goers, press and the Collegian executive committee that it was not within the jurisdiction of the SGA, nor was it my intention, to dismiss anyone at the Collegian.

I did not expect my actions to be perceived as an endorsement of the petition. I regret any misunderstandings.

Mirran Raphaely

Pro–choice, pro–free speech, pro–Collegian

To the editor:

I am a woman who is proud to be 100 percent pro–choice, but I am also a woman who is fully supportive of the Collegian's decision to run the pro–life advertisement.

No newspaper should be in the business of avoiding controversial subjects; rather, the role of a newspaper is to provide their communities with information so that individuals may make informed decisions for themselves.

I value dearly my pride and intrepidness as a woman, and my freedom to make choices that affect my life in the most profound way, but I also value just as greatly freedom of speech and unhindered, robust debate.

Several weeks ago I was present at a meeting of POWER when the members were first informed by Melanie DeSilva of the Collegian's intentions of running the pro–life ad. Members immediately discussed ideas of stealing or burning the newspapers and/or the advertisements and taking over the paper's offices. While fortunately none of those reactions occured (they were dismissed then as too risky politically), I found it abhorrent that these ideas would even be entertained. I suggest that the women at POWER, as well as other members of the community who fail to recognize the value in this advertisement, take a look at the broader implications of such actions and such disdain for opposing viewpoints. The more you suppress someone else's speech, you make it that much easier for others to suppress yours.

The women's movement and the pro–choice movement have succeeded in large part because women and their supporters have had the opportunity to express themselves. Some may find the pro–life ad offensive, yet there is a great chance that these same people have ideas to express that others would find equally offensive.

Offense is an incredibly relative and subjective measure, and for the benefit of us all we should encourage more and more speech, more and more discourse, regardless of how we feel about the particular opinions expressed.

Ultimately, inferior ideas will not withstand the scrutiny of critical analysis. Likewise, we can all strengthen our own opinions and arguments by looking at those of the opposing side. For this reason I welcome the opportunity to hear or read viewpoints with which I disagree.

Armenian genocide remembered

By CATHERINE B. PULLEY
Collegian Staff

Armenian students Chris Adanalian and Henry Theriault, along with the members of the Armenian Club, have a story that they want everyone to hear.

April is Armenian heritage month and the Armenian Students Club is holding a week-long remembrance of the Armenian Genocide.

The club is sponsoring a multi-media information program this week on the Campus Center concourse by distributing pamphlets and information. Also, the club is offering a cultural table at the International Fair on April 30 in the Student Union Ballroom.

The Armenian Genocide has been called by scholars as one of the first major genocides of the 20th century, in which 1.5 million Armenians were killed in Turkey between 1915 and 1923.

According to information from the Armenian National Committee, there are fewer than 100,000 Armenians that remain in Turkey where there was once 2,500,000 declared Armenian peoples.

The fact sheet from the Armenian National Committee that was distributed by the club on the campus center concourse said that Armenian men were sent on "death marches" into the deserts and executed. The women and children were raped, tortured and mutilated. The majority of the people died due to forced starvation, disease and wide spread massacres.

Approximately 500,000 refugees escaped to Russia, Europe and the United States. Both Adanalian and Theriault are descendants from Armenians who survived the genocide.

Adanalian said that his grandmother told him of the genocide when he was a small boy, and Theriault said that his great-grandfather was buried alive.

According to Adanalian, most of the Armenian families in the United States immigrated in 1915 at the time of the genocide. Theriault also said that 100,000 Armenian women were forced into "sexual slavery," and that people were deported from their villages and tortured.

"It is very important that we remember the people who were killed 79 years ago. We cannot forget. There are still many problems between Armenians and Turks today," said Adanalian, a senior English major and the president of the Armenian Club.

"The Armenians were a minority group who were an unarmed civilian population. They were the scapegoats for the problems in Turkey," said Adanalian.

Theriault cited a dire need to remember the Armenian genocide because it holds a contemporary significance. Theriault and Adanalian related the massacre to the problems in Bosnia and said that the Holocaust against the Jewish people during World War II was directly related to the Armenian genocide.

"People say that if the Turks had been brought to justice then maybe the Holocaust would not have happened," said Theriault, a graduate student.

According to Theriault and literature from the Armenian National Committee, Adolf Hitler studied the torture techniques used by the Turks and justified the killings during World War II by asking, "After all, who remembers today the extermination of the Armenians?"

Food drive a total success

By CAROLINE KIRTON
Collegian Correspondent

Five hundred pounds worth of canned and dry goods were gathered at a food drive held by the Founding Father's New Member Class of the Phi Kappa Sigma Colony here at UMass on April 12. It was one of two such drives organized for the Amherst Survival Center by students in the Greek system.

The Amherst Survival Center in North Amherst gives out emergency boxes of food to those in need. The president of the New Member Class, Mike Ciak pointed out, "For some people in the community, the Amherst Survival Center is one of their few sources for food, and since donations haven't been able to keep up with demand, it feels good that we've been able to help a worthy cause."

All 10 members of the New Member Class participated in shifts during the early and late afternoon of April 12. The students went door to door, asking for donations which consisted mainly of canned, but also some dry goods. The goods were then dropped off at the shelter the following day by the New Member Class Vice President Thomas Schnorrenberg.

The drive went into the planning stages in early February as a philanthropy, an event organized by the fraternity group to help a group that is in some way in need. The members seem to feel that this philanthropy is one of the most important events for the program.

"It's important for all student organizations, especially fraternities, to support charitable organizations such as the Amherst Survival Center," Ciak said.

Organization appears to be the key and the actual carrying out of the plan is easier than you might expect, according to New Member Dave Schneider.

"It takes so little to make a difference. My group took only about an hour to get more than 100 items. It's important to know that we've been able to help people through our efforts," Schneider said.

The drive was very successful, gathering nearly 500 pounds of food. The volunteers at the Survival Center were very appreciative and supportive of the students' efforts, saying they can always make use of such donations.

Any group or student organization that would like to conduct such a charity drive is encouraged to contact the Amherst Survival Center, located at 1200 North Pleasant Street, at (413) 549-3968.

City unhappy about breakers

By JOAN KIRCHNER
Associated Press

ATLANTA — The complaints follow the students to Fort Lauderdale, Fla., South Padre Island, Texas, Palm Springs, Calif. And to Atlanta.

Up to 150,000 college students will pack central Atlanta this weekend for spring break festivities that some residents have come to dread.

In the past, city government has tried to discourage "Freaknik," billed as a spring break festival for black college students.

But this year, officials are reluctantly working with organizers on events that include concerts and a parade, but mostly just cruising. This year's headliners include rappers Snoop Doggy Dogg, Digable Planets and Queen Latifah.

"You maybe see a pretty young lady and you want to stop and talk to her, so you just leave the car running," explained Joseph Greene, 21, of Philadelphia, who drove into town Wednesday evening with three buddies to attend his third Freaknik.

The traffic jams made it impossible for some residents to use their cars last year, and some reported vandalism and harassment. Linda Rodrigues said she found a man urinating on her front door last year. She sprayed him with her garden hose.

"I remember what it was like to be in college and want to have fun, but there needs to be more control," said Ms. Rodrigues, who lives a block from Piedmont Park near downtown, where the students blocked traffic for three days. She'll be staying with a friend in another neighborhood this weekend.

Organizers say the festival pumps $20 million into the area's economy.

After years of trying to discourage it, the City Council agreed this year to pay $175,000 in police overtime and for sanitation and parks services.

barely over $50,000. And it had a full staff of coordinators getting in all the different parts of the Campus Center/ Student Union."

"Because of our budget cuts we don't have that," Gordon said. "I can't imagine what $17,000 will do, it's just way off."

The Student Senate also decided to stop funding for the BOG's classified staff person, Judy Harris, much to the dismay of the board.

"[SGA] suggests that the BOG should not be spending money on a two-thirds time classified employee," Gordon said. "This person is extremely helpful to the BOG."

Harris assists all of the non-paid governors.

"So, basically, we have one person, two-thirds time to take care of administrative tasks for what could be 30 members of the body," Gordon said.

According to Gordon, the problems between the student governments and the BOG are the cause of the proposed Commission. The BOG feels that both governments have shown that they do not understand what the board does.

"What they are trying to do now is come on over and say we are changing the whole thing before finding out what the BOG is," Gordon said. "They don't know anything about the BOG and what we do."

Gordon added that the problems the BOG experienced involving the removal of the Lesbian Bisexual Gay Association appointed seats on the BOG took place three years ago.

"There are no members from that body on this body right now," Gordon said. "You can't say there is something wrong with the system when those people already graduated."

lyzed on the right side and unable to speak even before he slipped into the coma.

"The fact he's in a coma suggests his chances of dying are much greater, and his chance of surviving without a major deficit (in speech and movement) is very, very small," said Dr. Gregory Albers, director of the Stanford Stroke Center at Stanford University Medical Center in Palo Alto, Calif.

"This (coma) suggests the man suffered a devastating stroke," said Dr. Paul Katz, a stroke specialist at the Montefiore Medical Center in New York. "It sounds like this could be his terminal event."

After he was stricken, Nixon had been taking a common anticoagulant drug to reduce the risk of stroke, and doctors at the hospital have added another anticoagulant.

Doctors sometimes try to reduce brain swelling after a stroke by using a respirator to speed up breathing. But Nixon was not put on a respirator in deference to his explicit wishes, The New York Times and CBS reported Thursday.

The newspaper quoted an unidentified health worker as saying Nixon had in the past expressed "some fairly strong intentions about the kind of treatment he wishes." NBC reported Thursday that Nixon left instructions that he didn't want to be resuscitated.

Speakers scheduled to speak to students at the State House include Gov. William Weld, Lt. Gov. A. Paul Cellucci, Senate President William M. Bulger, House Speaker Charles F. Flaherty and President of the UMass campuses Michael K. Hooker.

"In the middle of the day, there will be a luncheon and program at the Great Hall in the State House," said Lloyd. "Gov. Weld will be speaking about the accomplishments of the University."

Members of the SOS Coalition will present the State House with flowers to symbolize a "new era of student empowerment," according to Lloyd.

In 1989, students traveled to the State House to protest decreases in funding to state higher education, but media attention focused on damage done to flowers on the front lawn of the building. Little was done to change the increases, and the trampling of the flowers became a symbol of students' inability to get the Legislature to listen to their needs.

"We are not going to trample flowers, we are going to the State House to try and fix things, not destroy them," said Jeremy Hathaway, chair of the SGA Budgets Committee.

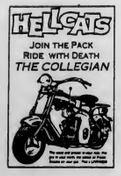
"It is the responsibility of a good newspaper to let students know what is out there," Fernandez said.

The students at the University of Pennsylvania, West Virginia University and University of Texas did not protest against the paper. A few people from each paper wrote in letters.

Besides the rally held on Wednesday, the Massachusetts Daily Collegian has been faced with a great deal of controversy for running the ad.



A petition to fire the board of executives was being passed around during the protest. The board of executives made the decision to run the advertisement.

Also, Sean Ramsey, a social thought and political economy major, a former employee of the graphics department at the Collegian, quit the night before the ad was run without having seen it. Ramsey said the advertisement conflicts with his beliefs.

"This was a personal decision. A right wing organization sponsored this. Also, the consistency of [The Collegian's] policy is wrong," Ramsey said.

"People are used to it because they have seen it before. The only people who are a little shocked were the freshmen," Coevering said.

Film Festival displays Five College talent

By CHRISTINA ORWICZ
Collegian Staff

The first annual Five College Student Film Festival is being held this evening at Stirn Auditorium, Amherst College.

Sponsored by a host of organizations, including the Interdepartmental Program in Film Studies at UMass and the Five College Film Council, the Student Festival is part of the Multicultural Film Festival, which is running until May 5. The Student Film Festival is organized by five college students as well as the colleges' Film Societies.

This past fall was the first semester of the Film Society's operation as an RSO. Matt Flugger, president of the UMass Film Society, said that, "Joyce Lannin wrote the constitution, got the signatures, held the first meeting and got us started as an RSO."

Some should just quit

After much thought, I decided to utilize this space to get some musical grievances off my chest. For some time now I have been forming a little "club" of some of today's most popular recording artists, who have the most ill-conceived notions.

These are (ahem!) musicians by the mere sight of who make my body begin to spasm in convulsions and break out into a cold sweat.

Without further ado I give you The (Wish They Were) Dead Musicians Society.

Sting, Bryan Adams and Rod Stewart — I would first like to thank this illustrious trio for recording that god-awful song "All For Love." Now I can lump these guys into one/convenient category, saving space as well as time. As of late, all three have desperately tried to cash in on their prior success during the eighties with half-baked solo albums, or even worse the dreaded Unplugged efforts. Please go away. At one time in my life I actually enjoyed your music, why must you persist in beating a dead horse?

Boyz-II-Men-N-Town-Silk-Shai — I think that there is a great conspiracy going on in the music world. It seems that there is one R&B/Hip-hop group masquerading as many different acts. Rumors have not been confirmed yet. We will keep you posted.

Vanilla Ice — Enough said.

Bono — I fully enjoy most of U2's music. What really gets my goat is the over-inflated ego that lead-singer Bono has somehow acquired over the years. After carefully chronicling this bizarre transformation, I have come to the conclusion that he has unfortunately developed a chronic disease that inflicts many "rock" stars who remain in the spotlight, Rockegoitis. While the cause of this dreaded sickness is still unknown, we do know that Axi Rose also suffers from an acute case.

Stone Temple Pilots — I can see it now. A bunch of suit- clad A&R people sitting around the record company table discussing how to market this new band they have. "Now the kids seem to really be into this whole "grunge" thing. If we take this average metal band, have them wear shorts, cut the lead singers hair short, and maybe dye it red..." These guys are a rock promoters' wet dream. Unfortunately, they lack in one important category: originality.

Hammer — See Vanilla Ice.

Pink Floyd, The Rolling Stones and The Eagles — I can admit that at one time (a long, long time ago) these three groups were great as well as highly influential. So why can't they be happy with that? Hell, they probably already have more money than they know what to do with, so why do they insist on going on a "reunion" tour every few summers? They are way past their rock n' roll prime, and charging $75 to $90 for a ticket isn't about music, it's about highway robbery.

SOUNDS FROM THE VALLEY
Compiled by Brian Bobinecki & Matt Audette

Ah, it is spring, and among other things like birds and flowers and stuff, this means the coming of the summer concert season. It also means time to reflect on some of the better live shows I have been privileged to experience over the past decade or so.

Now, I have seen U2 plug Foxboro into Zoo TV, I watched Nine Inch Nails and Jane's Addiction tear up Lollapalooza 1. I've seen Sting and INXS put on bland, boring two-hour sets, and watched Depeche Mode, the ultimate non-live band, whip Great Woods into a massive frenzy. But of all these people, one show, one show sticks out as the most incredible and overwhelming live show that I have ever seen: Peter Gabriel.

This was the first concert I ever attended, and it happened in the summer of 1987. Never before have I felt so close to the other thousands of people who were experiencing the music. Before stage dives were hip, he led the crowd in chanting, "Lay your hands on me," as they carried him around the entire pavilion. The 20-minute version of "In Your Eyes" transcended normal concert jams, and turned the gorgeous love song into something otherworldly. Thanks, Peter.

Scott shows his style

April 20, 1994

This last Wednesday evening at the Bezanson Recital Hall on campus, guitarist Robert Scott, Jr. performed his style of classical music to a small, yet appreciative, audience.

Drawing from compositions by composers spanning the last five centuries, Scott premiered his repertoire for his upcoming Brazilian concert tour.

A graduate of Colby College in Maine, and currently enrolled in the master's program at the University of Massachusetts, Scott's list of credentials encompasses both work in the Leningrad Chamber Ensemble and independent study at the Music Academy in Vienna.

What seemed to be a hint of hesitance in his opening piece of the night, John Dowland's Lachrimae Pavanne, slowly faded away as his superior finger-picking technique began to show through. In Isaac Albeniz' piece Mallorca, Opus 202, the lilting melody and driving rhythm intermingled with budget, so our RSO status exists, but we basically work through the [UMass] Film Studies Department," said Flugger. He explained that funding for the festival came through a grant from the Film Studies Department.

"Right now we're doing a real good job of getting an info center for people," Flugger said, regarding the role of the Film Society. "The opportunities are hidden, and that's why we exist."

"[Our] next appeal, we hope, besides just information and theory, is going to be for the makers," Flugger said. The Film Society is hoping this year's Student Film festival will provide a new forum for local student film. He also hopes that the Society will eventually have "our own equipment, so people can come to us when they want to make things."

"We are lucky to have some of the best film theory faculty around here," said Flugger about the Film Studies Department. "We have people coming from the other four colleges to study their film theory here."

The Student Film Festival was initially proposed by the Five College Film Council, which is comprised of faculty members. Catherine Portuges, the film festival organizer, then proposed the production of the student festival to Flugger. Although each of the Five College film societies did internal organization of their members' works, the main coordination of the student festival was done by Flugger and the Film Society.

If Flugger's hope for the UMass Film Society is to establish a place where people interested in film theory, as well as filmmakers can go, then the student festival is the ideal.

"There are a lot of people in the area who are interested or involved in filmmaking or film theory who don't have a place to go, and that's what we hope to do," said Flugger.

When speaking about the organization of the festival, Flugger said, "we hope [the festival] will be held next year early so that we have everyone knowing about it."

"What we want most as a legacy is a strong executive board, because that makes or breaks the transition period for any RSO," Flugger said, in terms of the Society as an organization. Flugger also encouraged new members or old to move into currently held board positions.

Tonight's event will judged by a panel of faculty from the five colleges who will award cash prizes. The division of awards will be best of Narrative, Avant Garde, Documentary and Festival. With entries from all of the five colleges, Stirn Auditorium should be packed with many film enthusiasts.

It should come as no surprise that the industrious students at UMass coordinated such an important event, both for a sprouting film society and the film community at large in the five college area.

The Five College Student Film Festival is being held tonight at Stirn Auditorium, Amherst College from 7 to 11 p.m. Admission is free.

2–1 loss to Pittsburgh. Haven't we seen this before? Schoenfeld's claim to fame is calling referee Don Koharski a fat pig following a playoff game in his coaching days in New Jersey. Wise up, Jim, because officiating isn't perfect at any level. Get used to it. Blasting them isn't going to help and it is an embarrassment to your team and yourself.

Boston 1, Montreal 1. It will be Ron Tugnett not Patrick "Pele" Roy in net for game three as the superstar will watch from a hospital bed. If Roy is out, it could spell disaster for the Habs, but Tugnett is a notorious Bruin killer. Stay tuned. This could be a key break for the Bruins.

New Jersey 1, Buffalo 1. This is shaping up as a good one. There have only been five goals scored thus far. Hasek and Brodeur have been fantastic. If these two keep this up, this could the one of the best series in the first round.

Western Conference

San Jose 1, Detroit 1. Game one was a wake up call for the Red Wings, and it convinced Scotty Bowman that Bob Essensa was not the man "between the pipes" for the favored Wings. The one loss could prove to be a plus for the Wings who learned in a hurry that you can't take anyone lightly in April.

Toronto 2, Chicago 0. Felix the Cat triumphed over Eddie the Eagle in the first two games in the battle of the goalies as Potvin turned in two terrific performances. Belfour gave up five goals in game one, but rebounded with a strong game two performance, before losing in overtime 1–0. Chicago is on the verge of their third straight playoff sweep. Kiss The Stadium goodbye because it won't make it past round one.

Minnesota 2, St. Louis 0. Every year it seems one of these two teams goes further than they should in the playoffs on the shoulders of a hot goalie. Last year the Blues went deep into the playoffs on the shoulders of the stellar play of Curtis Joseph. Jon Casey took the Stars deep not long ago.

Journeyman turned hero Darcy Wakaluk has been stellar and could make the Stars the surprise of the playoffs. The Blues should be golfing by the time this column runs next.

Vancouver 1, Calgary 1. Regardless of who wins this series, neither team will make it past the second round. You can't win with defense this weak in the playoffs. Ask the Blues, they know all about it.

Respect for Celtics earned by Big Three

Art Stapleton's Notes from the Hardwood

"The core objective of the New York Knicks has been, is and always will be team first and team last. The greatest challenge for a player, who is part of a team, is to voluntarily get out of himself and get with the program."— Pat Riley.

Since I promised one of my colleagues that I won't go off on anything but the Boston Celtics to open, I'll save comment on the quote until later.

Hats off to the Spleef, who will probably be playing his final game in the Green and White this evening. Parish was one of the best centers to ever play the game. How can you argue with the rings, the play-off games and the class he has shown throughout this hellish season the C's have endured?

No. 00 should hang from the rafters in the Gahhhden before too long; yet maybe they'll wait to put the jersey up until the Shawmut Center is torn down.

Don't the Celtics understand that they are supposed to lose in the last week of the season to improve their chances at the first pick in the draft? I guess a 42–point blowout at the hands of Washington wasn't easy to swallow.

The long reign of the Boston Celtics in the playoffs will end later tonight. No more Bird. No more McHale. No more Parish. The Big Three has left the building. I know these last three years have been tough for the hometown fans. Throughout all of the hateful speeches I've given about the Celtics and their tradition, I have always respected them.

Now that I've gotten that off my chest — break out the ping–pong balls!

This season seems to be the year of retirement. However, in order to leave the game, you need a nickname. Say goodbye to Air Jordan, Magic the Coach, the Chief, Isiah and Sir Charles (I know the last two aren't gone yet, but Thomas' injury could finalize things and Barkley's always talking about quitting).

It is a trend for the NBA that has been bantied about — get a nickname. Like they say in Bull Durham, you need a nickname to be famous. Let's play Romper Room.

I see Zo, IJ, DC and Kenny A. The Admiral, the Dream. I see Scottie and the Worm, the Mailman and Shaq Diesel.

Alright, enough with the joke and on to the playoffs.

Here's the bit about the quote: the best coach in the game put his foot down again, suspending reserve forward Anthony Mason indefinitely for spouting off about his playing time, or lack thereof. Riley is the first in a short line of coaches who believes in the team aspect of basketball.

That is the reason the Knicks are the front–runners in the Eastern Conference to dethrone the Bulls as champions. Mason is one of the keys to New York winning the title and the suspension means Mr. Disappointment, Charles Smith, is back from knee surgery and into the starting line–up.

Mason can hit lay–ups, and judging by Smith's performance in Game 5 of the series with the Bulls last year, he can't. Smith can't hit the broad side of a barn.

Speaking of players who have to get out of themselves for the benefit of their team... Oh, those New Jersey Nets and the biggest puzzle of the league, Derrick Coleman. If Coleman plays within the team, the Nets have a great chance at advancing in the playoffs.

When Coleman is an enigma, and plays like one, Chuck Daly's squad has little chance in the playoffs. Entering the final weekend, New Jersey is on a hot streak.

I'll make a prediction right now — if they play the Knicks or the Hawks, check out Kenny A, DC and the boys in the second round.

Why they call me the master of the obvious — watch out for Phoenix in the playoffs. MJ's not around to stop 'em, Paxson won't hit that three again, Jafrate.

the assertiveness of his chord and single note progressions.

What lost me in the course of the program was Scott's rendition of the relatively unknown Oistein Sommerfeldt's Fra et Norsk Landskap, Opus 61.

The unfamiliarity with the feeling of this piece, however, quickly gave way to the omnipresent tones of the legendary Johann Sebastian Bach, and his piece Prelude in D major.

With the peaks and valleys pretty much canceling themselves out as the evening went on, the performance and skill of Scott definitely took me in a different direction than some of the three chord wonder–bands that I have been hearing so much of lately.

Hard rock guitar virtuosos like the late Randy Rhoads and Yngwie Malmsteen have pointed to their classical training as bringing a new light to their playing. This could be something that might catch on. Hopefully.

Daut key for softball split

By SEAN P. HAYDEN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts softball team, aided by a clutch sixth-inning triple by Michelle Methot and an outstanding return by junior ace Kelly Daut, worked a split in its doubleheader with regional rival Connecticut yesterday, winning the first 2–0 before dropping the nightcap 7–0.

The Minutewomen ran their winning streak to seven games and broke a five–game losing streak to the Lady Huskies with a two–run sixth inning.

With Daut and Connecticut ace Kara Chanasyk locked up in a pitcher's duel, the first game had all the earmarks of a Massachusetts–Connecticut game — strong pitching, solid defense and next–to–no scoring.

The Minutewomen would break through in the sixth when, with one out and freshman Sam Cardenas on first via a walk, Coach Elaine Sortino had Methot swinging away instead of bunting Cardenas into scoring position for freshman Chris Martens, the team's leading hitter.

The decision was a wise one as it turned out Cardenas was in scoring position — for Methot, who sliced a line drive triple down the left field line out of the grasp of diving leftfielder Sandy Sanfo..l.

"Because she's [Methot] a lefty, I felt at minimum we'd be at second base anyway with a swing which a bunt would accomplish," Sortino said. "It was a no–brainer. She had been up three times and had seen the ball well all three times. Bunting never even occurred to me."

Martens followed suit with a single, plating Methot and giving Daut all the cushion she would need to pick up her ninth win of the year and sixth in a row.

Pitching for the first time in over a week, Daut dominated the Lady Huskies, scattering three hits over seven innings while striking out seven and walking four. She also hit a batsman.

"It was wonderful to have Kelly back on the hill," Sortino said. "We had gone all week without her and I thought she had a great performance having not thrown in a week. Today was the first day she's thrown and she just did a great job for us."

Connecticut scored two in the third and three in the fifth off Game 2 starter Dani Ortega, and added two more in the sixth against reliever Dana Colla to exact revenge against the Minutewomen.

The Lady Huskies singled Massachusetts to death with 11 safeties and no extra base hits. Senior first baseman Donna Fagan had the game–winning hit with a second–and–third single that scored Shari Blackman and Stephanie Mason.

Ortega suffered the loss — her first in her last four decisions — as she allowed five runs on six hits in five innings of work. Her record now stands at 6–6, while Connecticut freshman Jennifer Wardwell ran her record to a perfect 5–0 with the five–hit shutout performance.

Massachusetts, the No. 7 team in the Northeast Region, travels to Princeton for a Saturday doubleheader. The Tigers are the No. 2 team in the region and feature strong pitching, according to Sortino.

"It'll be more of the same. The pitching will be the same as today," Sortino said. "We're into the upper tier of the region now and we've got to perform."

Martens continued her torrid pace at the plate, going 5–for– 6 in the two games, and extending her hitting streak to 20 games.

All five were singles and she had one RBI to raise her batting average to a team–leading .438.

"She's a franchise player," Sortino said.

• • • •

Around the horn: The loss was Massachusetts' first at home this season.

The loss was also Chanasyk's first in six outings.

The Minutewomen will meet the Lady Huskies again the weekend of May 7–8 when they travel to Storrs to participate in the Diamond Classic, which Massachusetts hosted last year.

Men set an all-time record

Huge series ahead vs. West Virginia for first place

By ANTHONY GUIDO
Collegian Staff

With a huge match–up looming against West Virginia this weekend for first place in the Atlantic 10, looking ahead would have been easy.

Instead, the University of Massachusetts baseball team hammered Hartford 18–5 yesterday at Earl Lorden Field and in the process set the all–time school record for consecutive wins at 14.

"It's great to have the winning streak, to be winning this match is important with the big weekend coming up," Coach Mike Stone said.

UMass (19–11) took advantage of six Hartford (8–19) errors, batting around in two different innings. Pitcher David Dart (3–0) went seven innings in only his second start to notch the victory.

Designated hitter Justin Howard led the onslaught with three RBI while going 3–for–4. Freshman David Giglio got his first start at shortstop and went 4–for–6 with three runs scored.

"The winning streak is beautiful, it's amazing how well we've been hitting and scoring runs," Howard said.

The Minutemen struck first in the third inning when Howard lined a single to center field with the bases loaded, scoring Giglio and Nelson Ubaldo. Brad Gorrie then stole third base and scored on a wild pitch by Hartford's Brian Wood, whose record fell to 0–7.

The floodgates opened in the fifth inning as UMass sent 13 men to the plate. Justin Kelly and Nate Murphy hit consecutive RBI singles off reliever Ryan Donahue.

From there, Ubaldo and Gorrie hit back–to–back triples off the fences in right and center field. Howard finished the inning with a run–scoring single, making it 12–0. Seven of the eight runs in the inning were unearned after three Hawk errors.

The seventh was another defensive disaster for Hartford. With the bases full, Bill Knight connected on an RBI single. Kelly followed with a base hit and two more runs came around to score on a Hartford throwing error.

Another Hawk error led to Kelly and Murphy scoring as well to give UMass 18 runs on the day. At this point, Hartford Coach Moe Morhardt inserted shortstop Dave Tober at pitcher for the final two innings.

Dart worked seven innings, yielding two runs — one earned — on five hits. Dart struck out six, while walking four before giving way to Steve Levy for the final two innings.

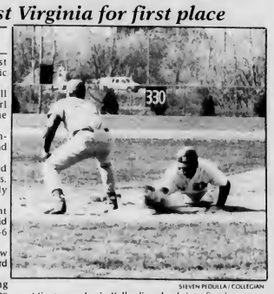
"Dart hurled a good game, he gave us all we needed today," Stone said.

Stone fielded a line–up with only three starters, giving rest to shortstop Greg LaRocca and left fielder Ryan Jette among others.

"We have a lot of guys who are banged up, I gave them a rest, plus a chance for the others to get a shot," Stone said. Next up for UMass is West Virginia in a battle for A–10 supremacy. The Minutemen have a 12–2 record in the conference with the Mountaineers at 8–1. The three–game series will go a long way in deciding first place in the A–10.

"I'm real confident about our chances going into the weekend. We are one of the hottest teams in all of college baseball," said Howard. "Who else has won 14 in a row?"

Stone said senior right hander Peter Ferrari to start the first game of tomorrow's doubleheader. Right–hander Jay Murphy will start the second game with Sunday's starter undetermined.



"It's a long bus ride for them to come up here. We haven't lost at home all season and our hitting has become so contagious. Those are all advantages for us," Stone said.

No UMass team has ever won the A–10 regular season title. Armed with their 13–0 home record, taking this series would be pivotal with only match–ups with Duquesne and St. Bonaventure remaining on the A–10 schedule.

"Right now, winning the regular season crown is our goal, we are going to be so tough to beat," Howard said.

The doubleheader starts at noon tomorrow at Lorden Field with Sunday's finale also at noon.

"I don't think they are better than us. We will beat West Virginia this weekend," Ubaldo said.

Minuteman Justin Kelly dives back into first in yesterday's rout of Hartford, and the Minutemen hope to dive into first this weekend when they host league leaders West Virginia for Saturday and Sunday games.

Lax tries to find rhythm at RU

By ANDREW BRYCE
Collegian Staff

Looking at Rutgers' 3–8 record, there is no doubt that the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team will have an easy time. Right? Wrong.

"This is one of those classic Massachusetts–Rutgers games where if we take advantage of the situation, we should do well," said Gorilla Coach Ted Garber. "It's their Parents' Night, and it's an 8 p.m. game. They'll do anything to bust our rhythm."

The rhythm is something that the Gorillas (6–3) need for a victory, not only on the offensive side, but on defense as well.

The offense was immense on Wednesday, as 18 balls found their way into the net for Massachusetts.

Nine players scored goals, the most in Massachusetts lacrosse history. Sophomore Buddy Hoffman led the way with four goals. Garber was obviously pleased with the offensive output.

"Usually it's two or three guys adding to the goal–scoring," said Garber. "I was happy with that. And the only guy that really didn't score was (freshman) Brendan (Glass). It just goes to show that we have a balanced scoring attack even without one of our high scorers."

While the explosive Gorilla offense had that necessary rhythm, the defensive unit didn't. While the offense racked up the 18 goals, the defense gave up 17. Even though Massachusetts came away with the one–point victory, the defense must be tighter.

Between the posts, the Gorillas went through two goalies. Sophomore Kevin Ratkiewicz started in net for the second time this season, before being replaced late in the third quarter by junior Tom LoPresti. The starting goalie for Massachusetts tomorrow night — who knows?

"It's one of those things where they both did well in warmups last night, they just got out of sync during the game," said Garber. "As for who's going to start against Rutgers, it could be either of them. Both are capable."

With his three goals and one assist against Harvard on Wednesday, senior All–America candidate Wes Depp took over the scoring lead for the Gorillas.

He has 30 points (21 goals, 9 assists), one ahead of Glass' 29 (23 goals, 6 assists). Another All–America candidate, junior Mike Valente (24 points), leads the team in assists with 15 and has 9 goals.

Adding to the depth against Rutgers will be junior Jeremy Murphy, who played in his first game at Richard F. Garber Field in the Harvard game and scored a goal.

Murphy has had three reconstructive knee surgeries in the past two years and reinjured it in the Fleet Invitational Tournament game against Syracuse earlier in the season.

"(Jeremy) played his first game at Garber Field, and he scored," said Garber. "He gives us more depth, and he adds to the scoring punch."

The Scarlet Knights have three 20–goal scorers. Ryan O'Shea has 43 points (24 goals, 19 assists) on the season, and Matt Elzer has accounted for 38 points (21 points, 17 assists). Dan Spillett has 24 goals (9 assists).

"(Rutgers) has a strong defense, and they have a great player in O'Shea," said Garber. "They are traditionally one of the top national teams. Their record doesn't indicate how good they are."

Garber is pleased with the way his Gorillas have played...not totally, though.

"I'd like to be 7–2 (referring to the 14–13 loss at Delaware), but, hey, it happens. North Carolina is 6–4, and Maryland is 5–4. Those are two top teams, and they have four losses already," said Garber.

Every game is important from here on in. Garber said he believes his team needs at least10 victories and the New England title to make the postseason tournament. What does that spell out?

Every game is crucial. And that includes Rutgers.

CHRISTOPHER RAGUSA / COLLEGIAN

The Gorillas travel to Piscataway, N.J., tomorrow to take on the Scarlet Knights of Rutgers looking to find a rhythm — both offensively and defensively — for themselves.

Minutewomen blank URI

By BILL BALFOUR
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's tennis team didn't need occasional gusting winds to blow the University of Rhode Island out of town. They took care of that all by themselves.

The Minutewomen defeated Rhode Island yesterday 9–0 to run their season record to 6–1. UMass was coming off a convincing 9–0 over Springfield College on Wednesday.

"This is a season beyond my wildest dreams," Assistant Coach Dan Rosenberg said. "We're way ahead of schedule."

Liesl Sitton was dominant again in the No. 1 singles spot. Sitton used a strong forehand to keep Tiffany O'Brien on her heels all afternoon, winning 6–0, 6–0.

The match–up between Elizabeth Durant and Jill Estes proved to be the best of the day. Durant won easily in the first set 6–1, but had to battle back in the second set.

Down 5–4, Durant held serve, then broke Estes to take a 6–5 advantage. Durant kept Estes off balance in the final game to take the set and match 7–5.

Sonnybelle Martinez was strong in the No. 3 spot defeating Beth Last 6–1, 6–3. Stacey Scheckner won at No. 4 with a 6–3, 6–1 victory over Katie Palacio.

At last weekend's Atlantic 10 Championship, Lesley Watts played well all weekend and continued the trend yesterday defeating Liz Tuohy 6–0, 6–0. In the No. 6 singles spot, Mary Edwards won over Laura Pietro 6–2, 6–0, using a well balanced game.

UMass continues to get strong performances from the No. 4, 5 and 6 singles spots. The Minutewomen will need to continue that play if they hope to do well at next weekend's Fairfield–ITA Tournament.

"It's critical for us," Rosenberg said. "That's where we need to win on a consistent basis. We've got to win in those spots if we're going to do well."

The Minutewomen were just as dominating in the doubles. The No. 1 team of Sitton and Watts dispatched O'Brien and Estes 6–1, 6–0 and Durant and Scheckner beat Last and Pietro 6–3, 6–1 in the No. 2 doubles. In the third doubles, Pam Levine and Kathy Schmidt defeated Palacio and Tuohy 7–5, 6–2.

"I'm very pleased," Rosenberg said. "We played real doubles, not up–and–back doubles. It was decisive."

Rosenberg said yesterday's victory was a credit to the team as it prepares for next weekend.

Top Virginia recruit signs letter to play for UMass

By MATT VAUTOUR
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's basketball team has announced that high school standout Inus Norville has committed to attend UMass next year.

Norville is a 6–foot–9–inch, 225–pound power forward out of Hargrave Military Academy in Chatham, Va. He averaged 18.5 points, 12.1 rebounds and three blocks per game in his senior season at Hargrave. Norville played two seasons for 71st High School in Fayetville, N.C., before transferring to Hargrave.

USA Today named Norville to its All–State team and Hoop Scoop Magazine placed him in the top 65 high school players nationally.

"We are pleased to bring a player and a person of the quality of Inus to UMass," said UMass Coach John Calipari. "We expect Inus to make an impact on our program. He is a big strong player, a great rebounder and a good scorer who will add depth to our front line."

Although Norville will be joining a team with one of the youngest and deepest front lines in the nation, Assistant Coach James "Bruiser" Flint doesn't rule out the possibility of Norville making an immediate impact.

"He's a good rebounder and shot blocker," said Flint. "It he comes in and plays hard and beats somebody out, who knows. He's a good player."

It was Flint who originally discovered Norville, when he saw him play at a Nike basketball camp in Indianapolis last summer. Flint got in touch with Norville's coach, Mike Byrnes, a former Minuteman, and began recruiting Norville.

Norville was originally going to the University of Virginia, but he has not yet achieved a 700 score on his SATs. The NCAA's Proposition 48 requires athletes

Well, I learned two things from last week's prediction column: 1) I am not Nostradamus and 2) More people read this column than I thought and some of them took my predictions pretty seriously.

With last night's games not included, here's a recap of the early playoff action.

New York Rangers 2, New York Islanders 0. I had no idea how many Islanders fans there were on this campus. My best friend is a Washington Redskin fan, and I didn't think anything could compare to the blind devotion that Redskins' fans possess. I was wrong.

Islanders fans are every bit as demented. And by picking the Islanders last week, I made a lot of friends in a hurry. Sorry to rain on your parade guys, but if the Isles don't get it together quick, they're going to be hitting the golf courses next week.

If the Rangers really want to break the jinx, I have a suggestion. They should hire my partner, Mike DiLorenzo, who interviewed for a media relations job with them. The boy has the got the Midas touch and could be the missing piece they need for dynasty status.

Washington 1, Pittsburgh 1. Credit this deadlock to the Capital defense that played well in the first two games — limiting the mighty Pens to only five goals in two games. It'll take a lot more heroics from the defense and others to complete this upset.

Downtown bombing in Johannesburg

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A car bomb exploded in downtown Johannesburg Sunday, killing at least nine people, damaging the headquarters of the African National Congress, and terrorizing South Africans just two days before the first all–race election.

No one claimed responsibility for the blast, which also wounded about 100 people. Suspicions fell on white extremists - the last, stubborn holdouts to the election that will usher in black–majority rule.

Political leaders from several parties appealed for calm. "I don't want you to concentrate on the violent action of those people who want to disrupt the process," ANC President Nelson Mandela said at a huge rally in Durban that culminated his campaign for the nation's highest office.

National

Nixon remembered

(AP) – Richard Nixon, vilified by foes as a Red–baiter and a crook, was remembered in death as a loyal friend, respected statesman and world visionary, friends and colleagues said.

"Everybody who has lived in the White House and served in the presidency feels a stab when a member of that fraternity dies. I also feel a personal sadness because President Nixon was always so kind and considerate to me and my family," said Lady Bird Johnson, the widow of the president who preceded Nixon.

"The Kennedy family extends its sympathy to the family of President Nixon, with whom we shared so much history," said Sen. Edward Kennedy, whose brother defeated Nixon in his first run for the White House.

Former adversaries reacted with respect to the death Friday night of the only U.S. president to resign.

"He left many deeds uncorrected and unatoned for," said Alger Hiss, the State Department employee Nixon accused of spying for the Soviets in 1948. "I naturally feel sympathy for the members of Mr. Nixon's family."

Student Humans Rights Day celebrated

BOSTON (AP) — Music from local bands billowed out the windows of Quincy Market's Great Hall and into the Sunday sunshine, but inside the talk among teen–agers and college students was about human rights across the globe.

Hundreds of student members of Amnesty International signed petitions and listened to students from other countries talk about human rights violations in their homelands for the state's first official Student Human Rights Day.

"Young people have a very heartfelt reaction to persecution. They know it's wrong, it's black and white - there's no politics," said Syndey Huynh, a junior at Boston University who came to the United States on her sixth birthday after her family fled Vietnam.

It was the sixth annual Students for Students rally organized by Amnesty International chapters in middle schools, high schools and colleges.

Armenian memorial denounces genocide

BOSTON (AP) — Speakers at a memorial service for Armenian genocide urged world leaders to stand up against ethnic killing today.

"The ill winds of genocide persist," said Diran Apelian, provost of Worcester Polytechnic institute.

Apelian spoke Friday at an annual service remembering the extermination of Armenians in Turkey, a mass killing that began in April 1915 and led to the death of 1.5 million people.

Apelian said world powers didn't stop the slaughter then, "paving the way for future genocides to occur." He counted the Holocaust during World War II among them.

Despite the horror of those killings, ethnic strife continues today in places such as Bosnia, where Serbs have been condemned for attacks on Muslims, speakers said.

Activities promote Earth awareness

Earth Day is not only a time to celebrate the environment and the mother planet, but it is also a time to reflect on the abuse heaped on it daily and how we can go about preventing it.

By BEN GEMAN

More than 200 people demonstrating solidarity with the fight for environmental and social justice gathered for an Earth Day concert and educational forum in the quadrangle between the Baker and Greenough residence halls on Saturday.

Several rock bands, and environmental and humanitarian organizations were present, including the Boston–based hardcore act Tree and representatives from the nationwide grassroots group Earth First!.

The event, sponsored by Souls Acknowledging Kinetic Energy and the Central Area Governments, was to "give groups that don't have a chance to speak directly to the public a chance to do so," said event organizer Brian Conley.

"Any kind of social movement or struggle needs a mass base of support," Conley said. "We're trying to create an energy source to activate people."

Earth First!, which advocates a "no compromise" stance on environmental preservation through participation in direct action events, such as forming human chains to prevent access to forests slated to be logged, provided copies of its newsletters as well as t–shirts and bumper stickers.

"In part of the environmental movement I see a greater participation in the grassroots aspect of environmentalism," said Earth First! representative Andy Buckley.

"Some of the more radical groups are good in that they broaden the spectrum of what's politically acceptable. They're pushing the more mainstream groups to take a stronger stance."

"I think that Clinton used Gore because he was an environmentalist, but basically there hasn't been a big change. It's been a cosmetic change," Buckley said.

Also providing informational tables at the event were Food Not Bombs, the University of Massachusetts Animal Rights Coalition, the Radical Student Union and the Dr. Josephine White Eagle cultural center.

Representatives of Food Not Bombs, a nationwide organization which provides meals for the homeless, said that environmentalism and homelessness are related problems.

"Our environment includes our people," said Food Not Bombs member Noah Salomon. "I think people are beginning to see that everything's connected. Our environment and our people."

Speakers also addressed the event's participants between musical sets.

Mike Diskin, who lives at the Grove Street inn homeless shelter in Northampton, asked the crowd to ride up the East coast and collect money from sponsors. They started their ride in Georgia and they will make it to UMass on May 3, where they will accept the donation from the Greek Area. The Greek Area is paying for the bikers' hotel rooms in the Campus Center Hotel and for their meals.

Mehl, a member of the Sigma Alpha Mu Fraternity, said AIDS is a problem that hits home.

"I feel that AIDS awareness is very important," Mehl said. "When I went to my fraternity's national convention I heard of a brother that has AIDS and I realized that it can hit home and that AIDS is real and it is killing people."

Steve Ziolkowski of the Alpha Tau Gamma fraternity said another way Greeks will promote AIDS awareness is each fraternity and sorority house on

The University of Massachusetts Greek Area will raise approximately $1,000 to donate to AIDS awareness and research all of this week during its annual "Greek Week" functions.

Interfraternity Council Philanthropy Chair Adam Mehl said Greek Area members will sit at a table on the Campus Center Concourse all of this week to distribute pamphlets about AIDS, to give out ribbons and to sell raffle tickets for $1. for a Raleigh racing bike. They will also raise money by having a volleyball tournament and charging each of the 65 Greek Area teams $5 to compete.

The money will be donated to the West to East Foundation. The West to East Foundation raises money for AIDS awareness by sending three bikers to

Charity prevails at casino night

By TROY L. MERRICK
Collegian Staff

Gamblers came out of the woodwork for the fifth annual "Campuses Against Cancer" casino night and helped raise over $5,000 for Boston's Brain Tumor Society.

The Board of Governors sponsored the highly–attended event, which took place in the Campus Center Auditorium at 8 p.m. Thursday night and featured such staple attractions as blackjack, craps and roulette, as well as the music of Jeff Holmes & Jazz Ensemble 1. Winnings were awarded in cash; some lucky gamesters came away $100 richer.

"We got about a hundred volunteers for this night, so you can see it's something people like to take part in," said Sean Linnane, BOG's program coordinator. "The casino provides an element of competition, which is always a draw for people. We also wanted it to be entirely student–run, and we have students as dealers, cashiers, serving the drinks, working the door, everything. There's a lot involved."

Linnane said reasons for choosing the Brain Tumor Society as the benefactor were a personal matter for Jeff Glassman, former program coordinator back in 1989, the casino's debut year. A friend, Seth Feldman, died of a brain tumor that year and since then the focal point of BOG's mission with the casino endeavor was to assist the non–profit Society in allocating funds to research the cancer and support its victims and their families.

"Brain tumors are one of the most overlooked and underfunded types of cancer," said Linnane. "We do what we can to help, and i think this system is working."

He added that the University of Massachusetts is the leader in contributions among the 17 campuses in the fight against the disease; some others are Syracuse University, George Washington University and Tufts University. Most involved are on the eastern seaboard.

Hotel–restaurant–travel administration majors staffed the refreshment table, and senior Scott Hartford, who participated last

Weld's welfare reform receives little praise from Rep. Ellen Story

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts Gov. William F. Weld's plan to force welfare recipients to get a job after two years on the welfare rolls is a costly and ineffective plan, according to a local legislator.

State Rep. Ellen Story spoke out against Weld's plan at a welfare forum at the Jones Library in Amherst last Thursday night.

Weld's plan to reform the state welfare system is to introduce a program called "workfare." This would force people on welfare to find a job after they have been on the rolls for two years.

The company who hires a person on welfare would not have to pay that person, because the only pay that worker would get is his/her regular welfare check. The workfare plan also calls for free child care for the single mothers who would be forced to work.

Story said Weld's plan cannot work because there are not enough jobs for all of the people who would be forced to work. She also said Weld has been silent on how he would pay for the child care.

Weld has already ruled out raising taxes as an option and Story said his plan is just political rhetoric.

"Weld's plan is not well thought out. No one is talking about what is going to happen after two years if you can't find one of those non–existent jobs. This is an election year and you're going to see a lot of political posturing," Story said. "I would support a graduated income tax and a one cent raise in the state sales tax. The money raised

Faculty members upset at firings

By CATHERINE B. PULLEY
Collegian Staff

In the aftermath of the removal of Provost Glen Gordon, and Vice Chancellors Samuel Conti and Daniel Melley, many faculty members are left in shock.

And most of them want some answers from Chancellor David K. Scott.

Javier Cevallos, the secretary for the Faculty Senate, told the Associated Press that Scott called a meeting with faculty leaders and said that the administration changes were, "for a lot of personnel reasons he couldn't discuss in public."

There will be an emergency staff meeting on Tuesday at 4 p.m. in which the entire faculty will have a chance to hear from the chancellor.

"What is disturbing about the termination is the way it was done," said Leonard Richards, the head of the Faculty Union. "It was done in a way that was almost designed to embarrass the three men."

"I want to hear why it was done in such haste," said Marios Philippides, a professor of classics and a member of the Faculty Senate. "I don't like this style at all. The suddenness is an overnight massacre."

When questioned about the rumors of an impending vote of no confidence for Scott, Philippides said, "It is long overdue."

Gordon, Melley and Conti were still unavailable for comment.

Melley, the chancellor for University advancement will step down from his position on June 1. Gordon and Conti will be leaving their posts by July 1.

Gordon was replaced with Ronald Story, the husband of State Rep. Ellen Story, D–Amherst. Story is an aide to University of Massachusetts President Michael Hooker and a tenured professor of history at UMass.

"Sudden changes of administration are irresponsible," said Arlyn Diamond, a professor of English and the former head of the Faculty Union. "To replace them with no warning means to create mistrust and chaos."

Cape Verdean Alliance plans a myriad of events

By MALKES GOMES
Collegian Staff

Today in the United States, there are more than 350,000 Cape Verdean emigrants and their descendants. Here at the University, there are more than 60 Cape Verdean students.

One of the main support mechanisms for Cape Verdeans on campus has been the Cape Verdean Student Alliance. The Alliance was established in 1982 to unite the Cape Verdean students.

The main purpose of the Alliance is to maintain and promote the Cape Verdean culture on campus and throughout the five–college area. The Alliance provides both social and academic support for its members.

The Cape Verdean Islands are an archipelago of 10 islands in the Atlantic Ocean located 360 kilometers from Senegal, Dakar, West Africa. These small islands equal the size of Rhode Island and were discovered in 1460 by Diogo Gomes and Antonio da Noli under the Portugese crown.

Shortly after the Portugese settled on the islands, slaves from Guinea–Bissau which included the Fula, the Bantu, the Mandinka and other groups were brought to the Islands. The fusions of the two races created the Cape Verdean

"I would like to ask all of you as a group to try and understand how difficult it is for people who find themselves in this kind of situation," Diskin said.

Charles Lenchner, president of the Radical Student Union, also spoke to the crowd, urging people to make the trip to Boston for State House Day to lobby the state legislature for increased funding for the University.

Lenchner also said the University should be collectively owned to better serve the people, noting that "the root of the problem is that we live in an undemocratic society."

SAKE member Aaron Pizlali asked the crowd to get involved with homelessness and environmental advocacy.

"The point is that time is running out. Right now is what's important," Pizlali said.

Two of the bands playing, Gypsy and Tree, promoted messages of environmental awareness to the audience.

Tree had previously contributed a song called "Don't Chop Me Down" to a benefit compact disc called Rock for Wood which raised money for the Walden Woods preservation project in 1992.

The UMass Animal Rights Coalition offered information about medical testing on animals and the environmental effects, such as topsoil erosion and water pollution, of converting forests into grazing areas for livestock.

"The iink between caring for animals and caring for the earth is a strong one," said coalition member Maura Lout.

"Our point is not to criticize . . . but to make people think about what they're doing," Lout said.

"We really enjoy ourselves, it creates a good rapport with students," he said. "But if I had my way, we'd serve alcoholic drinks. Sad to admit, but it'd draw that much more business."

She didn't gamble, but State Representative Ellen Story attended the event and said she was rather impressed by its organization and the principles it serves.

"I came here last year and enjoyed the way it functioned so well, and it's the same this year," she said. "I think the way they arranged the dealers, relieving them if they were getting stressed out or losing money, was nice. It was particularly well-structured and thought-out."

Although many went home empty-handed, the turn of a card or roll of the dice elicited cheers from many a table. One BOG member had made sure the BayBank and Shawmut machines were well-stocked beforehand.

North Pleasant Street will put a banner on its house that promotes the fight against AIDS. He said the banners will be up Tuesday.

Ziolkowski also said they will sponsor a program called "Mother's Voices," which is a nationwide effort to send the United States Congress Mother's Day cards with one million signatures on them. The cards demand that Congress gives more money to AiDS research. He said Greeks will attempt to collect 900 signatures from UMass students this week.

I.F.C. President Joseph Vozza said this Greek Week philanthropy is a chance for the Greek Area to show how they are a benefit to the UMass community.

"Promoting AIDS awareness is probably the best thing that could happen on a college campus because our age group is affected by it so much," said Vozza. "Greek Week is a chance for the rest of the campus to see all of the good things that we can do for the college community."

Humanity chapters volley to benefit families

By GINA LARSON
Collegian Correspondent

The Five College and Pioneer Chapters of Habitat for Humanity sponsored their first annual volleyball tournament on Saturday to raise $30,000 in order to house two low- income families.

The two chapters of Habitat for Humanity have been actively fundraising for their latest project, building a duplex located behind the Victory Shopping Plaza, for the two families.

Ten teams showed up in support for their cause, including a team from Lambda Chi, a Boston College team, church groups and many University of Massachusetts student teams.

Habitat for Humanity is a non-profit group which hopes to eliminate poverty housing by building and renovating houses to make decent, affordable housing available to those in need.

The houses that are built are sold to families at no profit and with no interest charged. The FCCHH tries to build more for the community than just houses.

Mark Preston, the director of public affairs for the chapter said, "Habitat for Humanity tries to build self esteem and community spirit by restoring a sense of pride and hope in the people."

The building of the duplex in the Amherst area is being constructed solely by donations from the community and fund-raisers, such as the volleyball tournament contractor that works exclusively for Habitat for Humanity.

The $30,000 being raised will only cover the cost of the land. The projected cost of the entire proposal is estimated at $90,000.

The costs of the project is able to remain low because land is frequently sold to Habitat at below-market prices. The construction itself is done with the help of few hired hands and many volunteer workers.

Donations or discounts on many of the supplies that go into the construction are also offered to the job. Work is expected to begin on Sept. 1, 1994.

Candidates for the housing plan are already in the process of being reviewed. The family does not need to be a resident of Amherst, but the candidates are judged on the basis of housing need, ability to repay the loan, family size, character and willingness to volunteer time into the project.

The volunteer time required of the family is 500 hours of "sweat equity" labor put into the construction of new home as part of the payment for the house. The rest is paid in a 15-25 year, no interest mortgage.

No government funding is provided for the housing projects and the money received from family mortgage payments is recycled into new housing and community developments.

Since their affiliation in June 1993, the two local chapters of Habitat for Humanity have already accomplished success in many of their undertakings.

The group has worked closely with the Amherst Conservation Commission to construct bridges across wetland areas and they assisted in the completion of the Springfield Chapter's current affordable housing project.

from the sales tax would go to public education and it would also go to pay for welfare reform."

The welfare reform bill is now in the House Ways and Means Committee. Story said because of the state budget crisis, House Ways and Means Chair Tom Finneran does not want welfare reform if it means the cost of welfare would go up.

But Story said there is no cheap way to bring about proper welfare reform. She said what Massachusetts needs is health care, child care and job training programs that are expensive, but necessary.

"We need real welfare reform with job training for real jobs. Not jobs at McDonald's, but jobs that pay enough money to support yourself and your family," she said.

Patti Prunhuber, an attorney for Western Massachusetts Legal Services, also spoke at the forum. Western Massachusetts Legal Services is a group that gives legal assistance to poor people. She said welfare reform is often misunderstood.

"Welfare reform is a subject that is one of the most talked about but least understood," Prunhuber said. "Two-thirds of the people on welfare are children and 70 percent of the adults are single mothers. About 50 percent of the adults on welfare have worked in the past couple of years, and 70 percent of those who leave welfare will be forced back on it in the next two years."

Prunhuber also said education and training are key elements in getting people off of the welfare rolls. She said a big part of the problem is child care, not only is it expensive, but it is also an undeveloped profession.

"People don't understand that child care is a real profession and it takes special skills and training," she said. "It is also a very underpaid profession which means that new people are not being attracted to it."

Prunhuber said now, people on welfare are eligible for a government subsidy to help cover the child care costs, but people lose those benefits after they are off of welfare for one year. She said this makes affordable child care out of reach for many peopie

Clintons ignoring the people

The comparison is hardly new. Critical commentators have called Bill and Hillary Rodham Clinton America's Juan and Evita Peron, two populists who rose to power on a highly effective, highly emotional propaganda campaign that promised a rebirth of their respective nations in the image of the masses. Peron had his descamisados, and Clinton had his new covenant of hope.

The Clintons have now proven that they are like the Perons in one more way. Upon arriving at the top, they quickly forgot all they had promised. The hope they created now curdles into cynicism.

Both Clintons have disregarded their connections with common folks, even Bill Clinton, with his hard, lower– middle–class upbringing. Acting on a promise to eliminate 25 percent of the White House staff early in his administration, Clinton promptly dismissed life–long White House help in favor of his pack of twentysomething yes– men. Apparently he prefers the fawning praise of his advisors to the years of experience of those in now–eliminated clerical staff positions.

One of those who was fired was the White House barber, a regular guy who gave regular haircuts to men who just happened to rule the Western world. He was replaced by the infamous $200 haircut. What kind of nouveau–riche, "leave that to the little people, darling," action is that, from a president who claims to be a man of the people?

Even Hillary Rodham Clinton has gotten in on the act. A White House usher was fired by Ms. Clinton for helping Barbara Bush figure out how to use a computer he'd programmed for her. Higher ranking staff consults with former presidents all the time.

In Argentina, the Perons forsook their public and instead drained the country's economy for their own pleasure. In the United States, the Clintons are starting to do the same thing.

We believed in Bill Clinton because of what he was able to do on our television screens. When he got into office, he did act swiftly and boldly at first, lifting bans on abortion counseling and gays in the military. The backlash shocked him into submission, and a wave of failures followed.

Peter J. Orvetti

The imagery and excitement of the Clinton–Gore '92 campaign excited and entranced all but the most die–hard Republicans. We believed in Bill Clinton because of what he was able to do on our television screens. When he got into office, he did act swiftly and boldly at first, lifting bans on abortion counseling and gays in the military. The backlash shocked him into submission, and a wave of failures followed. While all this was going on, Clinton decided it would be easier — and more fun –to use his rank for personal pleasure. He schmoozed with movie stars and dined in ritzy restaurants.

Presenting himself as a populist, when during his "middle class" years as Arkansas's governor he made $300,000 in today's real dollars one year, is just one of Clinton's deceptions. He has lied about his positions on the military budget, health care and "family values." He has taken a right–wing view on crime. And now, the man who joined in the 1960's chants of, "Hey, hey, LBJ, how many kids did you kill today?" wants to take on a foolish and strategically impossible war in Bosnia and Serbia. How many kids will Bill kill before he is through?

It is not going too far to suggest that this is not the man whom the nation elected a year and a half ago. He is William Jefferson Reagan.

Populism and social progress have been abandoned to a policy of military spending and reactionary politics. The administration that promised to look like America has become the White House that looks like Beverly Hills.

Near the end of Andrew Lloyd Webber's story of the reign of the Perons, a despondent Juan Peron laments, "When you think about it, why not do one or two of the things we promised to do?" In his most secret thoughts, Bill Clinton might have this same question. He has only himself to ask.

Discussing plate techtonics

This will be a random, hodge–podge collection of thoughts and opinions. I have been told that this style is popular among readers. Basically, it means I'm not coherent enough to talk about only one topic. I figure if I take enough shots, maybe one or two will hit.

Shot one: Mark April 27th on your calendar. The Distinguished Visitors program is presenting author Kurt Vonnegut. His lecture is titled "How to get a job like mine." It will be held at 8:00 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center and admission is free.

Vonnegut is by far the funniest man gracing this planet, penning masterpieces Slaughter house 5, Deadeye Dick, Cat's Cradle and the truly hysterical Breakfast of Champions. Vonnegut is my answer to the question, "If you were stranded on an island, who would you want to be with?" At least while Kathy Ireland is pregnant, that is.

A. J. Stewart

If you read this Kurt, please drop me a line. I'd love to come to the dinner before the lecture and watch you slurp soup.

I do have a question for Mr. Vonnegut. In the upcoming movie adaptation of your book, Breakfast of Champions, why is Bruce Willis playing Kilgore Trout? He couldn't act his way out of detention.

Shot two: Southwest Week has been a miserable failure. The acts have been uninspired and many people have ignored the event altogether. The blustery wind hasn't helped things, but organizers have done a poor job putting the week together.

Shot three: A happy 21st birthday to Bill Taylor, the classiest man on campus.

"Hey, Bill, can I borrow thirty bucks?"

"No." Bam, bam, bam.

Shot three: Sean, admit it. You're an insane bitch, too.

Shot four: Spring Concert rumor update. The word is Counting Crows, Cypress Hill and, believe it or not, Wynona. Sounds like an interesting show. Don't miss it. Really, I didn't mean to sound like Jay Leno.

Shot five: The Red Sox. My friends and I were discussing Game Six of the '86 World Series. We concluded that all of us know exactly where we were when that fateful game occurred. It has become our generation's moment, similar to the assassination of JFK.

Personally, I was on my knees in tears when Bob Stanley was brought out of the bullpen.

Well boys and girls (and you too, Mr. Vonnegut), that about does it for today. For those of you looking for the frank discussion of plate techtonics, you fell for my poor attempt at getting a cheap laugh. I only hope i didn't break your hearts.

Dear Rafters: Sorry about the sink. Those death threats can make you thirsty.

UPC explains reasoning behind Spring Concert "no–shows"

To the editor:

This is in response to Brian Babineau's article "Facetious listing of no–shows makes for Spring Concert blues" [April 21]. I am a member of UPC and am writing to explain the motives behind posting in our showcase the list of bands unable to play this year's Spring Concert.

What must be recognized is that the list is, for the most part, one sarcastic (not bitter) joke to blow off some steam and intrigue people with the remaining possibilities. If UPC has made a mockery of itself through the list, then we accomplished part of what we set out to do.

We realize how ridiculously tedious the Spring Concert talent issue is, and wished to express our frustrations with ourselves, the music industry and with being bombarded daily with questions from our fellow students. But the list seems to have been misconstrued.

Mr. Babineau, if you could only be a fly on the wall at a UPC staff meeting, then you could understand the amount of planning that goes into this show. You would also witness the talent coordinators' frustration at trying to get acts that will satisfy the majority of the campus' tastes.

However, you have no way of knowing any of this, as no member of UPC was contacted or interviewed to provide background for the article, nor do you have personal experience with the organization.

UPC's approach to this show has been anything but flippant. We are not lazy. We are not incompetent. We are not insensitive to the musical tastes and wishes of the students at UMass. We are students working in a professional capacity — UPC is one of the few college concert promotion companies in the nation that can purchase its own talent without assistance from middle agents.

UPC employs two talent coordinators who have been working furiously for the past two months to secure talent for the Spring Concert. Many more bids have been sent out than have been accepted. We cannot afford $80,000 for Pearl Jam. The $35,000 bid we offered Stone Temple Pilots was refused, as the band never intended to tour at all.

Many popular acts refuse to play college dates, or just are not available on the date for Spring Concert. Some bands just don't want to play our show. With over 350 outdoor college shows nationwide happening over two weekends, it is very difficult to secure a popular headliner. But we do it every year.

UPC does not wish to offend. Our business is entertainment. We realize that we are accountable to the UMass community, as undergraduate students provide UPC's funding and comprise the audience at our shows. Our priority is to obtain quality talent that will be appreciated — we are trying to satisfy everyone's tastes and points of view.

It seems that year after year, students complain about Spring Concert — it's not announced soon enough, the bands suck, etc. What is not needed is continued infighting within the student population here at UMass. I'm sorry that Mr. Babineau is so frustrated that he had to attack UPC without prior knowledge of the situation. However, there is a way to remedy this — through involvement.

As for Spring Concert, it is going to happen this year (on Mother's Day). It is going to be great (as it is every year), and it is going to be sunny. We've got talent lined up, but can't say anything yet because UPC cannot announce the bill until the contracts have been processed — it's the law.

Even if your favorite band isn't performing, come anyway — it's free (if you're a UMass undergrad), you'll get a tan and maybe you'll hear some music you've never heard before. And like it.

So–called liberals calling for unconstitutional censorship

To the editor;

I am having a difficult time understanding the uproar about Wednesday's pro–life advertisement in the Collegian. These people are claiming that the Collegian hates women and has no right to print things that are "a blatant disregard for the public interest."

Well, correct me if I'm wrong, but who's to say that all the public have the same interests and ideas? It appears to me that the majority of the media we receive today presents a fairly liberal point of view. It is very rare to hear a conservative view. If we do hear one, people go crazy as they did on Wednesday. This is what I don't understand.

Those with more liberal views that are angered over this advertisement are generally the same ones that claim that people with more conservative ideas are close–minded to diverse views.

You want to be able to speak your mind freely and you want people to be open–minded and listen to you. You don't want your views suppressed. Yet, once someone with an opposing view tries to speak freely, you say it is unfair. You try to suppress, censor and shut them up. These are all things you are adamantly against yourself.

If you want to be able to speak your mind freely and not be suppressed, then you need to be able to let others do the same, even if you don't agree with it. Don't be hypocritical. If you want the right to be heard then let others have that same right.

Insert has hurt campus speech

To the editor:

The Collegian's executive board ["Listen to both sides of the issue," April 20] and "First Amendment expert" Floyd Abrams ["First Amendment expert supports Collegian," April 21] have both over–simplified the issue of the recent pro–life/anti–choice insert. The issue is more complex than freedom of speech or of the press.

The Collegian has a forum by which anyone, whether they are from UMass or from as far away as Minnesota, can express their views to the UMass community. The Opinion page of this newspaper gives equal voice to all. It also places the same limitation on everyone: 400 words or less.

The Human Life Alliance was allowed more than the right to express a dissenting opinion, it was allowed to buy 12 solid pages. For $935, the Alliance was allowed to out–shout every member of this community.

Today, freedom of speech requires more than the right to stand on a milk crate and shout "down with the King!" It should include the right to express an opinion by a method that will affect enough people to be politically effective.

Federal law is determined by politics which spans 50 states and involves an enormous and diverse population. Many of the methods by which this population is informed about political issues could not possibly have been imagined by those who created the Constitution.

Television, the source of information most people are exposed to most of the time, is locked up tight by corporate interests and federal regulations. Check out the punishments for operating a pirate TV station. Radio is also largely controlled by corporations and regulations. Today, speech is dispensed by those with money and power.

It was money, not a moral or ethical stand, that allowed the Alliance to say their thing. The distribution of the Alliance's insert was an act which undermined true freedom of speech in this campus community.

Take off your 'P.C. blinders'

To the editor;

Do the words 'choice,' 'diversity,' 'UMass,' and 'POWER' belong on the same line? I think not after reading "POWER condemns decision" in Friday's Collegian. I am pro–choice, thus I disagree with much of what the "pro–life" advertisement had to say. However, this world is full of views that contradict our own. This will be the case as long as there are at least two people living on this planet (which at least the pro–life movement will ensure).

What i find most disturbing about the "POWER" article, and those demands set forward by many other feminist groups, is that they are guilty of the same crimes that they are accusing others of committing.

I think that POWER has moved beyond pro–choice and into the realm of pro–abortion, meaning that abortion is the action that deserves the most consideration when confronted with the news that one is pregnant. It seems that the concept of abortion has taken over and replaced all traces of sane thought within the minds of POWER. They are asking us to boycott (abort) the Collegian because they simply will not tolerate anyone having views other than the views they promote.

My question to POWER and to all over "loving, caring, peaceful, feminist, pro–abortion women's rights groups" is this: What about your "right wing, terrorizing, hatred– supporting, pro–life" sisters — you know, the ladies that would rather see someone have a baby rather than abort it. Should we, as open–minded, diverse UMass students, men and women alike boycott (abort) women with these views as you demand us to do with the Collegian?

By placing politically correct blinders over your eyes, you are losing the support of other women who have goals similar to your own. Future CEOs, future editors–in–chief, maybe even future Presidents of the United States. Educated females who are pro–life or even those that are pro–choice (but prefer the concept of giving birth rather than taking it away) are losing your support. POWER is guilty of being prejudiced towards these women and they are not alone when it comes to this tactic.

We're supposed to be going to a "multicultural" and "diverse" University. It's high time that some of the groups like POWER and the SGA come out from hiding behind these labels that they so falsely represent. Take some communications classes, ladies, and learn to accept the fact that people just might think differently than you do.

Go ahead and tell me not to agree with something, but present it to me before you tell me to disagree with it. By demanding that the Executive Board be terminated (aborted) you are very much supporting censorship. This, ladies and gentlemen, is the scariest concept to arise out of this whole saga.

Just think, ladies, if your mother had the same views that you do, I might not have had to bother writing this.

Made–for–TV flicks on slate

This weekend, a made–for–TV movie called Tonya and Nancy will chronicle the lives of the two skaters and the events that led up to the attack on Nancy Kerrigan. When I heard this, I decided to do some research. I called up all of the networks to see what other movies we can look forward to this summer. Here's what I found.

On the Tube By Caleb Cochran

• Beantown's Biggest Goat: The Bill Buckner Story. Ideally, this one would air in October, just prior to the World Series, but it is tentatively scheduled for mid–July. This stirring saga will detail the life of the outcast first baseman from his Little League years right up to the night of his fatal blunder in the 1986 World Series. John Ratzenberger of "Cheers" will play the title role.

• Unhappy Days: The Troubled Career of Henry Winkler. Things have been tough for Winkler since his days as the Fonz, and there's a lot more to this story than you might think, including bitter jealousy concerning the success of co–star Ron Howard. This movie also stars Anson Williams as himself, the one man who helped Winkler through his hardest days.

My advice to Winkler is to stick to what he knows best. How's this idea: A new sit–com in which Winkler plays the Fonz as a divorced dad trying to raise his son with cousin Chachi at his side. Not convinced? How about this for a twist: Fonzie's son would be a little nerd who gives Winkler fits because he has no interest in motorcycles or leather.

• No More Games: Inside the Pat Sajak/Alex Trebeck Rivalry. Few people know about the animosity that exists between the hosts of "Wheel of Fortune" and "Jeopardy." Viewers will be shocked to learn about the various attempts on Sajak's life, as well as the well–masked kidnapping of Vanna White in the Student filmmakers merited at festival

By JON LUPO
& CHRISTINA ORWICZ
Collegian Staff

A new tradition was ushered in Friday evening as the first annual Five–College Student Film and Video Festival graced the screening room of Stirn Auditorium a'. Amherst College. Nineteen student projects submitted from the five area colleges were shown, with six winning prizes.

Letter To Tennessee, a 25–minute experimental film fusing clips from films of Tennessee Williams' plays, gay pornographic videos and original footage in a study of gay desire, homoeroticism and romanticism won the Best of the Festival award for its creator, Amherst College junior Christophe Johnson.

Johnson also shared Best Narrative honors for In All My Dreams with Hampshire College student B. Goldman's I Was Still Here. Best Documentary and Best Experimental kudos went to UMass senior John Renaud's The Architecture of a Lost River, and Sunday, respectively.

The Selby Eddy Memorial Award, a prize given in honor of Selby Eddy, a promising Hampshire College filmmaker who died last summer, was presented to University of Massachusetts senior Tony Cohutt's experimental short, Loss. The award is given to a filmmaker who demonstrates visionary potential in experimental film.

The judges for the festival were Nina Fonerough, a professor at Hampshire College; Carolyn Anderson, director of graduate studies in Communications at UMass; Don Levine, professor of Comparative Literature at UMass; and Tim Shary, a graduate student in communications at UMass.

"I couldn't be more pleased with the festival," said Matt Flugger, president of the UMass Film Society and coordinator of the festival.

"The support from the community has been tremendous," said Flugger. "This is part of something larger, judging by the support displayed. Something twice as large could happen next year."

Miller evokes images of nature with guitar

By MONICA MALDARI
Collegian Correspondent

Bill Miller
The Iron Horse
April 21, 1994

The show began without any words. The only sound was that of a lone flute playing, evoking images of sun-drenched, open plains with birds flying overhead in a clear blue sky. Slowly the sound of the acoustic guitar picked up the melody.

The solo guitar was then joined by the sounds of an electric guitar accompaniment. Both instruments followed different paths before they met up to produce a strong sound and beat that seemed to reach right to your heart.

This was how Warner Bros. artist Bill Miller opened his song "Reservation Road" at the Iron Horse last Thursday.

Miller is a Native American who grew up on the Stockbridge–Munsee Indian Reservation in central Wisconsin. He is a member of the Mohican (Nook) Tribe which translates to "People from where the water is never still."

Miller draws upon his American Indian heritage as a base for his lyrics and music. Not only do his lyrics express what it is like to grow up as an American Indian, but he also incorporates traditional Native American instruments and chants into his songs.

For example, in the song "Praises," he used the Indian language Menominee to thank the father for all that is good on Earth. In "Two Hawks," Miller showed his musical versatility by playing a variety of harmonicas that have different pitches to summon images of hawks flying in the open sky.

Miller seemed to harness a certain power as he performed on stage. His strong, passionate voice carried throughout the Iron Horse as he moved through his set. You could see that the songs touched deeply upon his soul as he sang with intensity and focus on the Indian experience in America.

Having just recently made his name known by the release of his new album The Red Road, Miller has found himself touring with all kinds of unexpected groups. About halfway through the show, he paused to tell the audience about how he was asked to open for Pearl Jam and The Butthole Surfers in a gig to raise awareness for the environment.

Combining Bill Miller and these two bands probably represented one of the widest ranges of musical genres that could be scheduled together, but Miller was able to humor the audience at the Horse with his account of the experience.

Miller also took time to explain the significance of the eagle feathers that hang from his guitar. The feathers were given to him by Indian tribes across the United States in honor of his contributions to Native Americans. He uses the feathers in prayer and to ward off evil spirits.

Miller shows great promise as a contemporary acoustic musician. The crowd at the Iron Horse loved him, and called him back for a second encore in which he played his interpretation of "Melissa" by the Allman Brothers.

As Miller is a member of the "People from where the water is never still," hopefully his career will provide him with the opportunity to be constantly moving and sharing his music.

Hunter Moore opened the show. He is not new to the Iron Horse after opening there for greats like Greg Brown. I was pleasantly surprised to find quality acoustic folk music inspired by different writers such as Peter Taylor and the beauty of Missouri.

Inaugural film festival wraps up

Cheers, jeers and summaries

Cheers to:

Ideology (I. Har–Even, Amherst), an experimental film that exemplified the difficulties of making a street–wise documentary and how ideologies are inextricable in film. Kudos to dealing with the one woman who quipped: "Your questions aren't too intelligent, are they?"

Together and Apart (D. Holzman, Mt. Holyoke), an affectionate and all–too true experimental riff on love, friendship and that other thing, sex. Refreshing lesbian eye that transcends easy labels.

The Dance (C. Adanalian, UMass), whose cast contains the winner of our unofficial Holly Hunter look–a–like contest, Kimberly Small.

Dog Days (G. Coakley, Hampshire), which contains the festival's best use of a phallic symbol — a recurring image of a man pulling a gun from his pants and firing away. Paging Dr. Freud . . .

Frank's Body Disposal (R. Bernstein, Amherst), for its goofy charm. This delightful spoof on service–oriented businesses and those corpses that just won't go away!

Together and Apart: an affectionate and all–too true experimental riff on love, friendship and that other thing, sex.

Jeers to:

Dolly Dingle Travels Around the World (C. Bass, Hampshire). Where is she going? Who cares?

Basinoate/Basenote (E. Nycx, Smith). One word: Huh?

Medaplay (D. Wilson, Hampshire). A modern–day Dr. Caligari turned sour. Do we really need the exploding womb to demonstrate your bubble gum expressionism?

Expiry Date (L. Kelliher, Amherst). The middle of this interesting talking–head documentary on death and mourning was marred by a dopey framing device usually found in your average Res–Ed video.

Untitled (J. Langford, UMass). A stellar mid–section undercut by aimless juxtapositions and endless warbling of "Old Man River." Wake me when you get to the point.

Dirty Baby (A. Jonquil, Hampshire) A baby doll gets kicked by its mother and then run over. 'Nuff said.

Winners explain their inspiration

By JON LUPO
& CHRISTINA ORWICZ
Collegian Staff

While all of the entrants should see Friday's film festival events as an accomplishment for the local film community, these three filmmakers — all winners — have even more to be proud of.

Christopher Johnson, a junior at Amherst College, winner of the Best of Festival and sharing Best Experimental, said of his Letter to Tennessee, made over a year ago, that it was a very personal work.

"It's the first video I made," said Johnson. "It's sort of like an old snapshot from a photo album."

"It's the first video I made. It's sort of like an old snapshot from a photo album."
— Christopher Johnson

Tony Cohutt, a University of Massachusetts senior, won the Selby Eddy Award for his experimental work Loss. Using film for the first time, this work was a personal account of childhood remembrance and the construction of those memories.

John Renaud, maker of The Architecture of a Lost River (with Jason Danziger) and Sunday, won for Best Documentary and Best Experimental.

Architecture develops a rhythm of intercutting between maps and live footage which was not found in other works and which shows a serious understanding of how film works as an art form.

"I had them scripted in my mind beforehand but didn't get the equipment before I was in class," said Renaud about his work. Renaud commented on the lack of accessibility of filmmaking and production equipment, saying that he could not produce anything before he was registered in the classes which would lend him the materials.

Likewise, Cohutt said that he was not able to produce any film work before taking production classes because of the dearth of usable equipment at UMass. Both Cohutt and Renaud feel that interdepartmental cooperation is vital for providing the necessary tools for student filmmakers in the future.

late '80s. This should be the thriller of the summer.

• David Letterman: The Bad Hair Years. This one will be aired on NBC, apparently in an attempt to sabotage Letterman's huge success on CBS. The movie will show Letterman as a crazed control freak who would rough up writers and occasionally even vent his rage on band leader Paul Shaffer. CBS is said to be working on a retaliation piece entitled Pelican Face: The Jay Leno Story.

• Young M.C.: Voice of a Generation. Many listeners have lost track of the young rapper since the release of "Bust a Move" a few years back, but he has since released two albums, Brainstorm and What's the Flavor? This is more of a documentary than the other films, and supposedly includes rare studio footage as well as some unreleased tracks left over from the recording of his albums. Look for the soundtrack at a record store near you.

The Muthy Marilen Spare Pattrol did not take kindly to young folks... That's why it was no surprise when little Max, Brad, and tiny tot Andrew were thrown in the Intergalactic Slime Pen. "Why is it always the good ones that suffer?" whined Andy. "Shaddap!" replied Maximillian and Brad. Andy ignored the older boys, as he scavenged another twist-tie. He had plans. BIG plans. He didn't plan on sticking around.

The Far Side By Gary Larson

"So let's go over it again: You're about a mile up, you see something dying below you, you circle until it's dead, and down you go. Lenny, you stick close to your brothers and do what they do."

Your Horoscope
By Jeane Dixon

ARIES (March 21–April 19): The arguments against a project may be more numerous than those for it. The right social and professional connections will benefit both your image and your pocketbook.

TAURUS (April 20–May 20): By holding firmly to your principles, you encourage key associates to follow your example. Financial newcomers will produce even better results than planned.

GEMINI (May 21–June 20): You can retain the upper hand at work even if you do not relent. Complete essential tasks without further delay. The cost of doing business may be more expensive than ever.

CANCER (June 21–July 22): An agreement is easier to obtain if you and the other party click. A tax, phone call or letter bring immediate results. New social contacts could lead to lucrative business alliances.

LEO (July 23–Aug. 22): All important matters should be attended to before noon. Keep you possessions safely under lock and key. Guard your reputation and physical well-being at work.

VIRGO (Aug. 23–Sept. 22): Break away from your routine and plunge into a humanitarian project. Community service or charitable work fills an important need. Turn your home into a gallery by rearranging the furniture and buying a few plants.

LIBRA (Sept. 23–Oct. 22): Storm clouds linger over office or home. Let poise and patience prevail and you will stay on top of things. Offer a sympathetic shoulder to people under pressure.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23–Nov. 21): Look before you leap. Refuse to sign anything without consulting legal or financial experts. A social event will rejuvenate your interest in a member of the opposite sex.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22–Dec. 21): Business profits should increase if you are in the right place at the right time. You gain new insight into a difficult problem. The more people you tackle, the more success you will have.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22–Jan. 19): It pays to let your hair down occasionally. Loved ones draw near. Terrific business prospects surround you. You get to pick and choose! Play for all the marbles.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20–Feb. 18): Uncertainty has no place in today's scenario. The future looks golden. Do your best to be happy and productive. Loved ones are your assurance tips.

PISCES (Feb. 19–March 20): This is no time to be influenced by platitudes from suspect people. Refuse to let your enterprising ideas fall into oblivion; they have real merit. Plug financial leaks and save where you can.

Criouolo culture.

The official language in Cape Verde is Portugese and the national language is Criouolo. The population is predominantly Catholic. Fishing and agriculture are two of the main industries on the island.

Beginning in 1860, the first Cape Verdeans immigrated to the United States. Many left the islands because of the severe droughts and famines which have occurred throughout the history of Cape Verde.

Many men also left to work on the whaling ships which stopped in the islands to fuel up. Others left on small packet ships to America to find work on the Cape Cod cranberry bogs and the factories in New Bedford, Mass.

The Cape Verdean Student Alliance has sponsored many activities which include Cape Verdean Night, Awareness Day and week, book scholarship fund–raisers, auctions, an army/navy sale, a trip to Cape Verde and different community service actions. The Alliance is open to both Cape Verdeans and non–Cape Verdeans and has included West Indians, Native Americans, African Americans and European Americans.

This year the Alliance is proud to sponsor the ninth annual Cape Verdean Awareness Day and the fifth annual Awareness Week.

Each year the Alliance tries to build stronger bridges between the Alliance and the general campus community. As a way of doing this, they outreach to the many student organizations, academic departments and offices on campus. Each night for the next week at 6:45 p.m. in Campus Center 174–176, the Alliance will hold different presentations.

On Monday, there will be a history of the Cape Verdean islands, on Tuesday a film entitled Urban Villages of Santiago which explores the lives of Cape Verdeans in the urban environments.

Wednesday, another film will be shown. Entitled Songs of the Badius, it explores the African culture on the island of Santiago. A panel discussion on Thursday will cover issues concerning people of African descent. On Friday, Claire Andrade–Watkins, an associate film professor at Emerson College, will show her film The Spirit of Cape Verde.

Saturday begins the Cape Verde Awareness Day. There will be workshops on racial prejudice, health care, politics and the Criouolo language. The keynote speaker will be Joseph Moniz, chairman of the foundation of Cape Verde.

There will be a fashion show and a dinner in the Blue Wall. The dinner will be accompanied by two dance troupes and a Cape Verdean Folkloric group.

There will be a dance from 9 p.m. to 2 a.m. in the Bluewall, with a band from the Cape Verdean islands called Wings.

The conference and events during the week and free and open to the public. The dinner and dance are $3 for students with a valid identification card and $6 for general public.

In our last episode Thing Ten Andy had overpowered Xstatic, the overlord of the slime people, with his degreaser/can red box (which he built with scrounged twist ties and bottlecaps.) Today: "Controlling the evil dictator's mind with the dairy, Andy frees himself and the older boys, Max and Brad. "Quickly," cries Andy, "To the spaceport!" With Xstatic under his control, Andy quickly visits through the heavily gaurded battle compound. The boys enter the T-9 Imperial Space Shuttle and blast off to their freedom. "What an escape!" exclaimed Max as he hit the jettison button, thrusting the gasping Xstatic into the great vacuum of space. "What revenge!" gelled Brad, for he was proud of Andy. "Aww... it was nuthin! Nuthin me and the Collagian couldn't handle!!!"

Minutemen now first–rate

By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR.
Collegian Staff

After playing first–place caliber baseball for nearly a month, the second–place University of Massachusetts Minutemen wanted to prove a point this past weekend against conference leader West Virginia.

The point was made, as the Minutemen (21–12, 14–3 Atlantic 10) won two of three games against the Mountaineers (25–13, 11–3 A–10) and moved into first place in the A–10 with two weekends of conference play remaining.

Massachusetts swept the doubleheader on Saturday (6–1 and 12–3) behind two three–hit gems by senior ace Peter Ferrari and junior Jay Murphy; the two victories extended the Minuteman win streak to a school–record 15 games.

The Massachusetts unbeaten streak came to an end on Sunday as the Mountaineers salvaged the series finale, 14–5.

Ferrari, who has been nearly unhittable this season, was just that again in the first game of the double–dip, hurling a masterpiece, allowing only one run while striking out five. He said that he wanted to start in the opener in order to set the tone for the series.

"I wanted to get the series started off right. When I'm out there, I have the feeling like no one is going to beat us. I think our team then plays well because they have confidence in me," Ferrari said.

The Mountaineers got to Ferrari in the top of the second, though, when a two–out single by left fielder Lee Salin drove in shortstop Andy Srebroski from second, giving West Virginia a 1–0 lead. Ferrari was rattled and hit the next batter, right fielder Marvin Randall, putting two Mountaineers on base, keeping the two–out rally alive.

Massachusetts catcher Andy Pelis, who was cut in a collision with Srebroski at the plate and granted time out by the umpires to stop the bleeding before play resumed, went to the mound hoping to do the same for Ferrari.

The next batter, West Virginia centerfielder Josh Williamson, grounded out to end the inning and Ferrari was out of the jam; he settled down from there and received all the run support he needed in the home half of the inning when second baseman Mark Pileski blasted his second home run of the year, a two–run shot, putting Massachusetts ahead 2–1.

Pileski was the offensive star all weekend for the Minutemen, collecting eight hits, five RBI, five runs scored, two doubles, a triple and two HRs.

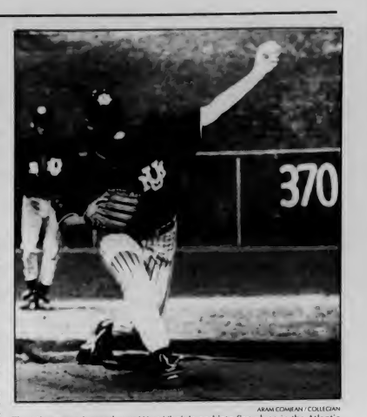
The Minutemen added to their advantage in the fourth. After consecutive singles by right fielder Bill Knight and shortstop Greg LaRocca, and a sacrifice grouder by first baseman Jeff January which moved the runners into scoring position, Pelis gave his battery mate more than enough run support with a two–run double. Center fielder Nate Murphy chased Pelis home with a single to center which gave the Minutemen an insurmountable 5–1 lead.

Massachusetts would tack on one final run in the fifth on an RBI single by designated hitter Justin Howard.

Ferrari went the distance, upping his record to a team–best 5–1.

In the night–cap, it was more of the same from the mound for Massachusetts; yet, at the plate for the Minutemen, there was much more. Massachusetts pounded out eight runs on 10 base hits in the first three innings.

The Minutemen started quickly in the first; Howard (six hits, four RBI, two HRs, four runs scored in the series) hammered his first of two HR in the game, which put Massachusetts up 2–0.



West Virginia cut the lead in half when catcher Brett Caruso deposited one over the fence in center, his sixth of the season.

Massachusetts tallied three runs in each of the next two innings, along with four more in the bottom of the sixth to seal the victory for Murphy (complete game, six strikeouts, no walks).

On Sunday, five Massachusetts errors lead to seven unearned Mountaineer runs, including a five–run fourth inning which knocked out starter Adrian Softic (2–3) and broke the game wide–open. West Virginia's Ryan Williams (9–1) picked up the victory.

"When you come out flying for 16 games in a row, you're bound to come out flat at least once," said Howard. "We have 12 games left, so maybe we can win 12 in a row."

"West Virginia came in thinking they were tops in the A– 10. We stuck a claim to that top spot by winning two of three," Ferrari said.

Softball splits with Tigers

By TED KOTTLER
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts softball team split a doubleheader with the Princeton University Tigers, winning the opener 3–2 in 14 innings and dropping the five inning, mercy rule–shortened second game, 14–6, at Princeton on Saturday.

The contests were as varied as they could be. UMass' Kelly Daut, who last Thursday against UConn erased any doubts she might be injury–plagued, matched goose eggs with Princeton starter Karen Drill through the first four frames.

Trailing 1–0 in the top of the sixth, Rachel Lawson plated Sam Cardenas and Michelle Methot to give the Minutewomen their first lead. The Tigers tied it 2–2 in their half of the sixth, and again the opposing hurlers traded blanks until UMass (18–11) batted in the 14th inning.

Sophomore catcher Michele Shaw set the table with a leadoff double, and after Amy Powell was retired, senior shortstop Tracey DuEst singled Shaw home with the game– winning run.

Freshman Dani Ortega (7–6) earned the victory for her three scoreless innings in relief of Daut, who gave new meaning to the term "quality start" with her 11–inning effort.

Drill fell to 14–7 after taking the loss, and PU, previously ranked No. 2 in the Northeast region, closed the day 27–12.

The scoreboard operators used far fewer zeroes in game two, as Princeton scored in every inning, although UMass spotted Ortega a 3–0 lead in the first. Possibly fatigued from the extra work in game one, Ortega surrendered four runs to PU in the home half of the first and reliever Dana Colla fared no better, allowing six more in the third and enduring the first loss of her young UMass career. Colla's record is 2– 1.

Freshman phenom Chris Martens of Swift Current, Saskatchewan, sustained her torrid hitting against the Tigers. She went 3–for–3 in the game two slugfest with two RBI, a double, and her second home run. However, Martens could not extend her hitting streak beyond 20 games, as she was held hitless in six at–bats in the first game.

The Minutewomen try to maintain perfection on the Atlantic 10 slate this afternoon at 2 p.m. when they will host Rutgers at Totman Field. The doubleheader is a make–up of contests that were originally scheduled April 1.

Gorillas still in the hunt

Rutgers win keeps UMass in line for playoff berth

By MATT VAUTOUR

PISCATAWAY, N.J. — On the strength of a seven–goal second half, the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team kept its playoff hopes alive by beating the Rutgers Scarlet Knights, 12–9, on Saturday.

With the score knotted at 5 early in the third quarter, and Rutgers clearly controlling the momentum after erasing a four–goal deficit, the Gorillas caught a break.

Sophomore Eric Bailey stole a clearing pass from a Rutgers defender, walked in and snapped a shot past Knight goalie John Kidon to give UMass a 6–5 lead. The goal was clearly the turning point of the game.

"Anytime you get goals when you don't have to earn them it just breaks their back," said UMass Coach Ted Garber. "Coming out for the second half, I told the kids that we had to win the third quarter real quick. The kids stepped up and did that."

Less than a minute later, Brendan Glass broke out of his scoring slump, wheeling around the net and flipping it past Kidon.

Rutgers got one back, but UMass tore off five straight goals, including one by Wes Depp to give him 100 points for his career, and three more goals by Glass.

"I kept saying after the first couple of games that I would eventually go into a slump," said Glass. "Tonight, I really wanted to get out of the slump."

The Scarlet Knights scored the final three goals to make it close, but it wasn't enough.

Knowing they needed the win, the Gorillas came out strong. Paced by junior Mike Valente (1 goal, 3 assists) and Wes Depp (1 goal and 2 assists), UMass opened up a 5–1 lead.

Not wanting to be embarrassed on Senior Night, Coach Tom Hayden called time–out with 7:58 left in the first half.

Whatever he said worked. Rutgers stormed back scoring five unanswered goals to make it 5–5 at half–time, before UMass took over in the second half.

"We played a great first half," said Garber. "But we turned the ball over to them and gave them second chances and they scored a couple of goals. We told [our guys] in the second half that we can't afford to do that."

Goalie Tom LoPresti and the rest of the Gorilla defense were not as sharp as they have been in some games this season, but with the game on the line, they stepped up and made the big plays. LoPresti made some crucial saves down the stretch and the defense limited the Knights' All– American sniper Ryan O'Shea to only one goal.

The game was a must win for the Gorillas and Garber said he hopes that this game is a spring board for the remainder of the season.

"We needed this one badly," said Garber. "It was a major stepping stone. We had to win this game. The kids know it and they rose to the challenge; it was great to see."

"The Delaware loss really put things in perspective," said Glass. "Every game is huge now."

Game Notes: Rutgers is not far away from the lacrosse heartland in New York State where most of the Gorillas are originally from. An abundance of UMass parents, alumni and fans made the trip to Piscataway to support the Gorillas and they made their presence felt.

Women's track wins tri–meet, runs unbeaten streak to eleven

By CANDICE FLEMMING
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's track team finally had good weather from start to finish and extended its unbeaten streak to 11 in a tri–meet held Saturday afternoon at the Llewelyn Derby Track.

UMass placed first with a total of 144 points, Dartmouth finished second with 127 points and the University of New Hampshire finished third with 81 points.

"I thought it was a good team effort," said Coach Julie LaFreniere.

"There was a lot of effort on everyone's part, everyone that belongs to the track program contributed."

Freshman Anya Forrest had another great day picking up two first places and a second place.

Forrest won the 100m with a time of 12.6 and remained undefeated in the 100m hurdles with a time of 14.7.

Forrest finished second (27.1) in the 200m behind teammate Kim Downey who won it with a time of 26.6.

"Forrest got a workout today," said LaFreniere.

The 4x100m relay team was hurt by the loss of freshman Erika Doyle, who may have a stress fracture, but still managed to finish first with a time of 49.5.

Angela Sorge was the replacement for Doyle and according to LaFreniere, she ran very well.

The other three runners were Pasha Summers, Downey and Forrest.

"I thought they did a nice job," said LaFreniere.

Downey also placed second in the long jump (16' 3/4") while both Sorge and Summers placed third behind teammate Forrest.

Sorge's second came in the 100m hurdles with a time of 16.3 while Summers' came in the 100m with a 12.9 second performance.

"[Kim] Downey did a real nice job," said LaFreniere. "[She] looked strong all the way through."

The 4x400m relay team, consisting of Kerry Aker, Jen Barry, Cheryl Lyons and Jen Waeger, finished first along with the 4x100m relay team with a time of 4:09.7.

"Those four easily won," said LaFreniere.

In the 400m hurdles Sorge and Dianne Sykes both qualified for New Englands with their second and third place finishes, respectively.

Sorge ran a 68.7 and Sykes ran a 70.0. The 400m saw Aker, who has been suffering from a sinus infection, win with a time of 60.1.

"That's the best I've seen Kerry [Aker] run the 400 this year," said LaFreniere.

UMass took the top two places in the 800m with Waeger winning it, after taking a week off for rest, with a time of 2:17.1 and Lyons finishing second with a time of 2:20.6.

"Both of them did an outstanding job," said LaFreniere.

Kim Liljebiad continued to run well winning the 1,500m with a great time of 4:42.2 while Kim Hargrave finished third with a time of 4:55.7. Those times were personal highs for the two.

In the 3,000m Kristin Jiggs finished third in 10:13.1 and Katie Greenia finished fourth with a time of 10:30.0.

Janey Meeks remained undefeated in the triple jump this outdoor season with a jump of 38'7 3/4" and tied for third in the high jump with teammate Stacey Barbuto. Both Minutewomen cleared the 4'10" mark.

Stephanie Townson and Christie Martin both placed in the hammer and the shot put.

Townson finished second in the hammer with a throw of 137'3", a personal high, and Martin finished third with a throw of 134'1".

In the shot put Martin again finished third with a heave of 38'3 3/4" and Townson finished fourth with a 37'8 1/2" performance.

In the javelin Heather Brown placed third with a throw of 125'3".

"Overall, I'm very happy with this team and where the program is heading," said LaFreniere.

Coming up for the Minutewomen is the 100th running of the Penn Relays, which according to LaFreniere should be very exciting.

U.S. waits for Serb action

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration took a wait-and-see attitude toward air strikes as Bosnian Serbs grudgingly began to withdraw from Gorazde, but members of Congress urged immediate action to punish the Serbs.

Secretary of State Warren Christopher said the Serbs are "trying to comply" with an elapsed deadline for them to pull back from the besieged enclave and it was "prudent ... to give them an opportunity to complete the withdrawal."

Christopher was in London today for talks on Bosnia with British Foreign Secretary Douglas Hurd. He also was to meet French Foreign Minister Alain Juppe and in Geneva on Tuesday with Russian Foreign Minister Andre Kozyrev.

Speaking Sunday on ABC's "This Week With David Brinkley," Christopher said he was encouraged by reports that the Serbs appeared to be withdrawing from a two-mile radius around Gorazde as ordered, although mortar attacks and small arms fire continued.

Although most of the current Cabinet members are expected to be reappointed to the same posts, the extent of the reshuffle is still unknown.

Frank compromises ban on gays

WASHINGTON — U.S. Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., Monday defended his record on lifting the ban on gays in the military, saying he supported a compromise because there was too little support in Congress to lift the ban outright.

"If the vote up or down was all or nothing, we got nothing," Frank said at a forum on gay civil rights held at the National Press Club. "I didn't want to see that."

The forum came exactly one year after hundreds of thousands of gay men and lesbians marched on Washington to demand acceptance and equal rights. The U.S. Park Police estimated 300,000 marchers participated, while organizers put the figure at 1.1 million. Last year, gay rights leaders were disappointed when President Clinton signed into law a policy that forbids gay service members from openly declaring their sexual orientation.

Instead of lifting the ban on gays in the military, the "don't ask, don't tell" compromise bars the military from asking recruits or service members about their sexual orientation. But it retains the military's prohibition against homosexual conduct.

University of Massachusetts President Michael K. Hooker speaks at State House Day while Gov. William F. Weld looks on.

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — About 500 University of Massachusetts students, alumni and administrators went to the State House to urge legislators to increase the UMass budget by $21.8 million during the second annual UMass State House Day yesterday.

In lobbying their representatives and senators, students spoke of the leaking roof of the Fine Arts Center, the broken desks in the classrooms, and the courses that are taught by graduate students instead of professors. UMass is the second most expensive state school in the country, and it ranks second to last in state funding.

The day at the State House included a short speech by Massachusetts Gov. William F. Weld during the luncheon. Weld said he thinks UMass is on track to become one of the elite schools in the country.

"We want part of the great attraction of UMass to be, as it is with those other schools, that the elite will not be prohibitively expensive, and I do believe that we can make UMass into Harvard with a subsidy," Weld said. "Under [UMass] President Michael K. Hooker's brilliant leadership, UMass is well on the way."

In a meeting with several students, Rep. John A. Stefanini of Framingham said he supports the proposed $21.8 million increase in the budget, but he questioned Weld's commitment to higher education. Stefanini graduated from UMass in 1986.

"A priority of mine has been and will continue to be higher education. It is one of the reasons I ran for State Rep," Stefanini said. "Weld has not been a champion of public higher education. People can say what they want, but I don't see it in his words or his actions that he has been a champion for higher education, and higher education needs a champion."

Massachusetts Senate President William M. Bulger said the increased budget is a "good idea" at the luncheon, but he later said he was not sure it is possible because the state budget is tight this year.

Rep. Ellen Story D–Hampshire District said she was

Conti's removal criticized

Department chairs express dismay and concern

By CATHERINE B. PULLEY
Collegian Staff

In response to the ousting of Vice–chancellor Samuel Conti, the chairs of the Graduate and Research Councils sent a memo yesterday expressing dismay and concern with the actions made by Chancellor David K. Scott.

The memo from Cristina Gonzalez, the chair of the Graduate Council, and Barbara H. Partee, the chair of the Research Council, along with the combined councils stated Conti's removal was, "ill–considered and ill advised."

The memo stated that the removal of the three top administrators was "damaging" because of the manner in which the firings were conducted.

"I am very concerned about the abruptness of the process," said Mary Wilson, the vice–chair of the graduate council and an associate professor of history.

Approximately 20 people are on each council and represent each academic and professional school in the University.

The memo also stated that Conti had the full confidence and support of the councils and the research community.

"I am disturbed by the removal of Vice–Chancellor Conti, particularly since he has been a strong advocate for graduate students and graduate education," said Darrin Shaffer, the executive officer of the graduate student senate. "I am upset that Conti was fired and not asked to leave in a more graceful manner."

"I found Conti to be extremely creative in his administrative capacity," said Michael Weinberg, the special assistant to the former vice–chancellor. "Anything he did, he put the University first."

"I thought [the removal of Conti] was the Chancellor's option," said Joseph Goldstein, the dean of the College of Engineering.

The memo stated an understanding of Scott's position concerning a need to have his own team of administrators, but said that the need must be, "moderated by what is important to the faculty of the University as a whole."

"Scott has the right to have people around him that he is comfortable with," said Weinberg, "but I wish it was handled in a more dignified manner."

The councils expressed a concern with the leadership of Scott and said that the wide concern generated by the removal leaves the confidence in his leadership as "very shaken."

"I know that some faculty are talking about a vote of no confidence," said Wilson. "I think the abrupt manner of the removals merits serious consideration of a vote of no confidence."

Players put their season to bed

At the University of Massachusetts, as well as other colleges and universities all over the country, sexually transmitted diseases, contraception, homophobia and date rape are subjects of the utmost importance. The University distributes literature on a regular basis, and also boasts the theatrical Not Ready for Bedtime Players.

The Players, who work out of the Heath Education office at Health Services, put on a one–hour performance every Wednesday night in various residence halls all over campus. They tackle difficult issues with a combination of comedy, drama and education. Their audiences learn important lessons about saving their own lives without feeling lectured to. Above all, they have a good time.

> Their audiences learn important lessons about saving their own lives without feeling lectured to. Above all, they have a good time.

Auditions for "The Not Ready for Bedtime Players" are held at the beginning of every semester. After the new players are selected, they go through an intense training, which includes learning about all kinds of contraceptives, diseases and ways to prevent contracting them. They also learn their lines, and have to get over any shyness that the players may have, since many of the skits they perform include faking orgasms, rolling around on the floor with another player, and saying sexually explicit things.

"It's a lot of hard work, but I enjoy it," said Amanda Collings, a Player of five semesters. "I love to act and make the audience laugh, but above all I may be saving someone's life." Along with the laughs and information presented, the Players distribute free condoms.

Not all the skits that the Players perform are meant to get a laugh out of the audience, as many of them are very poignant. One of the skits, "He said, She said" deals with both the rapist and victim telling their side of story. While he does not know that he committed a crime, she is in anguish over being raped.

"The Not Ready for Bedtime Players" will be performing at Mount Holyoke College this Wednesday. Next week they will have their last performance of the year at Dickinson Residence Hall, in Orchard Hill. All of the performances are free and open to the public. If you decide you want to drop by and catch one of the performances prepare to laugh, prepare to learn, and above all, prepare to have a good time.

Battery bill battles for ecosystem

By CATHY CHANG
Collegian Staff

The many conveniences that batteries give us go unappreciated daily, as we flip through TV channels with the remote control, shine flashlights down dark holes, or groove to our favorite music on the essential Walkman. In fact, the only time most of us stop to think about batteries is when they are dying.

The Clean Water Action group (CWA) of Northampton has thought about what to do about batteries. While most of us feel helpless to do something about toxic chemicals like lead, mercury and cadmium that may leak out of old batteries and wind up in ecosystems where they do great harm, the CWA has created a bill that would do something about these heavy metals.

Called the "Battery Bill," the legislation that the CWA proposes and Rep. David Cohen sponsors will drastically cut the amount of toxic metals that batteries release to the environment. The bill calls for the elimination of mercury in batteries and the recycling of nickel–cadmium rechargeable batteries by 1995. In addition, a deposit system (similar to glass bottle deposits) for car batteries would be introduced in the same year. The bill would also mandate all household batteries to be recycled by the year 2000.

"Massachusetts has the highest mercury concentration per capita," says Bayard Littlefield, the organization's spokesperson. "There is no separation of batteries before they reach incinerators, where 18,000 pounds of mercury is released per year."

As batteries are burned, mercury rises as vapor, mixes with precipitation and reaches aquatic ecosystems where metal can easily climb up the food chain, eventually reaching humans. In one of the most dramatic cases of methyl–mercury poisoning in Minimata, Japan, children were especially affected, with their brains and nervous systems severely damaged. The Battery Bill would cut the output of mercury by 80 percent, says Littlefield.

CWA started in 1972, before the EPA was created, by David Zwick in Washington, D.C. The group has since expanded to 25 offices in 14 states, concentrating on different environmental policies such as the Clean Water Act and the Safe Drinking Water Act. Each office focuses on local and state policies and issues, pushing for passage and enforcement of legislation and supporting "green" candidates.

Being non–profit, grass–roots group, CWA uses lob-

Grad class hopes to ban cigarette smoke in Newman Center

By GERI SAHN
Collegian Staff

A letter of complaint has been written to ban smoking in the Newman Center at the University of Massachusetts.

In November 1993, UMass passed a new smoking policy on campus, but students are still smoking and buying cigarettes at the Newman Center.

The Newman Center is affiliated with the University, yet the cafeteria is rented space. Rented space allows the owner to permit any smoking policy.

A group of graduate students from the public health class "Tobacco policy and politics," taught by Professor Michael Begay, wrote a letter to Reverend Francis Lavelle, asking the Newman Center to ban smoking from the building.

The letter requests the center to ban smoking in the cafeteria because of the risk factors involved in second–hand smoke.

The letter said, "When visiting the cafeteria, patrons who are non–smokers are exposed to second–hand smoke. In addition, the smoking section is adjacent to the food preparatory area, subjecting food service workers to second– hand smoke."

It also said the Newman Center is a popular place on campus where students go to study and socialize. "Because you are an affiliate of the University, we feel it's important that you are in agreement with the University's smoking policy."

After doing a survey of where students on campus purchase their cigarettes, the class became interested in the smoking policy at the Newman Center cafeteria.

"After we did the survey, we noticed most people were buying their cigarettes at the Newman Center," said Abigail Averbach, a graduate student in Begay's class. "We were surprised by the amount of smoking that goes on in that place."

Jennifer Watkins, also a student in the class, said the letter is the first step of action to rid of the smoking in the cafeteria. They are now waiting to hear a response from Lavelle.

"Our favored response is that they [the Newman Center cafeteria] will act to restrict smoking in the dining area. The second–hand smoke is very dangerous for those who work there," Begay said.

The letter has been sent to the Chancellor's office, Dean of School of Public Health and the director of University Health Services. It has also been sent to the Catholic Diocese, which oversees the Newman Center.

Racial struggle explodes

By GREG MYRE
Associated Press

PRETORIA, South Africa — The explosion blasted a hole in the side of the tavern, but its address could still be seen on one panel — 352 Blood Street.

The bomb that ripped through Sonny's Restaurant on Monday evening, killing two people and wounding 29, was the third fatal explosion in less than 48 hours in the Johannesburg region on the eve of elections to end white rule.

All three blasts, which killed a total of 21 people, were blamed on right-wing extremists trying to disrupt this week's first all-race elections.

Police quoted witnesses as saying that young white men inside a blue car hurled an explosive at Sonny's, a tavern crowded with blacks. About 120 people were reported inside at the time. Late Monday, a man claiming to speak for the small, pro-apartheid White Freedom Movement telephoned a Johannesburg newspaper, saying the group was responsible for the Germiston bombing. Police did not say whether they considered the call genuine.

Sonny's was a shack-like tavern of corrugated metal next to a liquor store in Marabastad, a Pretoria neighborhood of vacant lots and rundown shops used as a transit point by many black commuters. In Germiston, a Johannesburg suburb, blacks were also targeted when a 220-pound car bomb blasted a taxi stand, killing 10 people and wounding at least 36, Monday morning. Police held a person for questioning.

The force of the blast sent election posters and at least one vehicle flying into trees, blew out windows and wrecked about 20 minivans, which are used as taxis by black commuters.

Police lay out a row of stretchers. Ambulances screamed to hospitals with wounded as security forces raced to rope off the scene.

Car parts hung from trees and body parts and twisted metal lay scattered on the ground over a four-block area in Germiston. The bomb was planted in a trailer attached to a car, police said.

Taxi owner Patrick Sikhonde said two of his three taxis were damaged and the drivers missing. He also feared for youths paid to watched the parked vans, and the women who sell grilled corn and porridge from nearby food stands.

Sikhonde said he ran to the street to see "a lot of people all lying down. Others were in pieces. You can't see their faces. That shop in the corner, no one in that shop survived."

The deaths followed the killing of nine people and wounding of nearly 100 Sunday by a car bomb in central Johannesburg.

First all–race elections to be held in Zulu nation

By DAVID CRARY
Associated Press

KWAMASHU, South Africa — After a decade as mortal enemies, rival Zulu factions in South Africa's violent Natal province are savoring the chance to test their strength with ballots rather than bullets.

In the country's first all-race elections this week, Natal will be the battlefield for a head-to-head clash between the African National Congress and Zulu nationalist Inkatha Freedom Party. Hostility and violence persist among the Zulus, who make up most of the eastern province's population, but many warriors have been transformed into zealous campaign workers.

Thabani Radebe, a 34-year-old ANC "comrade" fighting against Inkatha loyalists, once thought he wouldn't live long enough to see a free election.

Yet there was Radebe, grinning as he helped conduct a streetside voter-education class over the weekend for about 30 residents of KwaMashu, one of the largest black townships outside Durban, Natal's biggest city.

Federal plan replaces AFDC with new jobs

By JENNIFER DIXON
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Government training programs are moving limited numbers of single mothers off welfare and into jobs, and much more would need to be done to achieve President Clinton's "two years and out" reform proposal, according to a federal study Monday.

The report, by the National Commission for Employment Policy, said federal employment and training programs must be significantly expanded and upgraded if Clinton's plan to require welfare recipients to find a job within two years is to succeed.

The commission, an independent federal agency that advises the president and Congress on employment issues, also said that a two-year limit on welfare benefits will only work if training and employment are tailored to each parent's individual needs. And support services, such as transportation and child care, must be made available.

"There is no silver bullet to end welfare dependency," said Commission Chairman Anthony Carnevale.

"The good news is that established government-sponsored employment and training programs can move welfare recipients into the workplace and beyond poverty under a 'two and out' plan," Carnevale said. "However, we must focus much more attention on the quality and kind of services offered."

A Clinton administration task force has drafted a plan to limit welfare benefits to two years, followed by mandatory work for participants unable to find a job on their own.

bying tactics that may not be as flashy or expensive as other political groups, but its strategy is a simple, effective one which relies heavily on the support and participation of the public. It is called canvassing.

A canvasser travels door-to-door in a chosen neighborhood and gives a "rap," or summary of the current group campaign, at each house. The canvasser then asks the person for a signature for a petition, a money donation and a handwritten letter from the contributor. It may sound scary for the inexperienced, but many workers enjoy it.

state appropriations," said Student Trustee Al Lizana.

The feeling of the students was that their message is getting out to the legislators.

"I think we are making ourselves heard, and we are making everyone aware that we aren't going to take this lightly any longer," said Tammy Gdovin, a junior.

Not all the senators and representatives were willing to discuss the budget. The House was in session and many of the legislators we busy with other agendas.

"My representative was definitely concerned. My senator on the other hand, I didn't speak to him," said Alicia Duff, a UMass senior. "I spoke to one of his aides, I think that he gave me a predetermined answer. [The aid said] 'We are not willing to make a commitment one way or the other until the budget comes out,'" Duff explained.

UMass State House Day gave students a chance to speak to state officials and explain way the University needs an increase in funding.

"It puts a face on the dollar signs. If you make it clear to your representative or senator that you are a voter and a taxpayer as well as a student, they are going to think about that a little more carefully when it comes campaign time," said Heather Odom, a junior.

Most of the students felt the day was an effective way to get students to the State House to lobby the legislature.

"I think this whole day has been effective in that the students are also getting their families, their parents to call to coincide with their visit. That's when a representative perks up and says well that's three votes, and if 20 more calls come in that could mean the difference," said Matthew Pavesi, a senior.

Calderon victory means right rules El Salvador

By JOSEPH B. FRAZIER
Associated Press

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — Conservative Armando Calderon Sol overwhelmingly defeated his leftist opponent in Sunday's first presidential election since the end of El Salvador's civil war, unofficial returns showed.

Caravans of honking, shrieking, flag-waving Salvadorans zipped through the capital celebrating the landslide win.

The leftist candidate, Ruben Zamora, went on television three hours after the polls closed to concede defeat.

Calderon Sol, a two-time mayor of San Salvador, had been heavily favored over Zamora, a former leader of the political wing of El Salvador's guerrilla movement.

With about 20 percent of precincts reporting, Calderon Sol had about 66 percent of the vote, televised reports from polling stations said. Zamora's leftist coalition trailed with about 33 percent.

Zamora's coalition of three leftist parties includes the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front. The former guerrilla organization became a legal political party when the 1992 peace treaty ended El Salvador's 12-year civil war.

About 48 percent of eligible voters went to the polls, early returns showed. Poll-watchers said voting problems that hindered an earlier round of voting were fewer.

Seven presidential candidates ran in a March 20 election, but none won an absolute majority. Calderon Sol outpolled Zamora by about a 2-to-1 ratio in that election, but fell just short of the 50 percent plus one vote needed to win.

In the first hours of voting, some voting centers had more poll-watchers than voters.

Bloodletting continues in Kenya

United Nations' peace efforts fail as reps. don't show

By CHEGE MBITIRU
Associated Press

NAIROBI, Kenya — Rwandan rebels and government forces exchanged heavy mortar and gunfire in the capital Sunday, and efforts to mediate an end to more than two weeks of bloodletting failed in neighboring Tanzania.

"The fighting has been exceptionally heavy today," said Abdul Kabia, a U.N. spokesman in the capital, Kigali. "The fire is very, very heavy."

About 170 patients and staff were slaughtered Sunday at a hospital in Butare in southern Rwanda, the international relief group Doctors Without Borders told CBS radio. The massacre prompted the group to pull its workers out of the region, aid workers said. Kabia, interviewed by telephone, said government representatives to the talks did not show up when the United Nations sent a plane Saturday to bring them to Tanzania.

Military officers in Kigali told the United Nations on Sunday they were unable to contact officials in Gitarama, the town southwest of the capital where the government fled the fighting two weeks ago.

In the northern Tanzania town of Arusha, where the talks were to be held, Tanzania Foreign Ministry official Kassim Mwawado said, "There will be no talks for sure. The Rwandan Patriotic Front representative has just left."

President Ali Hassan Mwinyi of Tanzania had invited Rwanda's government and the Rwandan Patriotic Front for talks on ending the carnage that has killed an estimated 100,000 people.

Two million people have fled their homes and thousands more are barricaded in buildings in desperate efforts to escape the bloodletting which began a day after Rwanda's president died in a mysterious plane crash in Kigali on April 6.

UNICEF said Sunday that it had resumed an airlift of urgently needed medicines and other supplies to Kigali.

A Canadian aircraft arrived Saturday with over four tons of soap and surgical supplies, the agency said. Another landed Friday with 117 boxes of emergency health kits and surgical instruments. UNICEF said it hoped to fly in more aid in the next few days. A U.N. team is in Kigali to assess the scope of the humanitarian disaster.

U.N. relief agencies have pulled their staff out of the country to escape the slaughter, leaving the International Committee of the Red Cross and a handful of other private aid organizations to cope. The fighting is between government forces, dominated by the majority Hutus, and the rebel front, made up mainly of minority Tutsis.

Popcorn proves not–so–healthy in recent study

By CONNIE CASS
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Looking for a good scare at the movies? Take a closer peek at the popcorn. Film buffs' favorite snack is a high-fat horror story, a consumer group warned Monday.

The problem is not popcorn itself, which can be a healthy treat, but the fatty coconut oil that 70 percent of theaters pop their corn in, said the Center for Science in the Public Interest, a nonprofit consumer group.

Saturated fat in coconut oil turns popcorn from "the Snow White of snack foods ... into Godzilla," said Michael Jacobson, president of CSPI.

Theater owners argue that most people go to the movies only five or six times a year, so where's the harm? "It's one of life's little pleasures," said William Kartozian, president of the National Association of Theatre Owners.

The consumer group believes moviegoers should know what they are noshing.

A typical small bag of theater popcorn, for example, contains almost an entire day's recommended allowance of saturated fat, the kind that causes heart disease, the center said.

And that's without the butter-flavored topping.

A medium-sized bucket with "butter" has 56 grams of saturated fat and "trans" fat, both blamed for clogging arteries, the group says.

That's more artery-clogging fat than you get from a whole day of eating high-fat foods: a bacon-and-eggs breakfast, a Big Mac and large order of fries, and a steak dinner with sour cream, combined. "As far as fat and heart disease are concerned, movie-theater popcorn is certainly one of the worst foods you can buy," Jacobson told a news conference.

Theaters could eliminate most of the saturated fat by switching to air-popped popcorn, he said. Or they could reduce the fat significantly by popping with corn oil.

So why do theaters use coconut oil? Some say it improves popcorn's taste and creates the aroma that wafts through movie-house lobbies.

"Most people ask us why they can't get their home popcorn to taste as good as theater popcorn. The answer is the coconut oil," said Howard Lichtman, executive vice president of marketing for Cineplex Odeon. The Toronto-based chain has 235 U.S. theaters. Although hefty containers of popcorn and soft drinks are the main attraction at theater concession stands, Lichtman said most people share the largest sizes with a friend.

Councils oppose Conti's dismissal

Editor's note: The following statement was issued jointly by the Graduate and Research Councils of the Faculty Senate.

We are writing to express the unequivocal opposition of the Graduate and Research Councils to Chancellor Scott's decision to remove Dr. Samuel Conti as Vice Chancellor for Research, Graduate Studies and Economic Development. We particularly wish to express our dismay that this action was taken abruptly, directly against the previously expressed sentiment of our two councils, and without any evident consultation.

As we have informed Chancellor Scott in the past, Dr. Conti has the complete confidence and support of these councils and of the research community in general. He has that confidence and support because of his steadfast commitment to research and graduate education at UMass. Our support for Dr. Conti is grounded on trust, based on many years of actions demonstrating ability, integrity and the courage to resist pressures to compromise our basic missions.

Removing Dr. Conti from his position is, at best, ill- considered and advised. Even more damaging is the manner in which this action and the concurrent sudden removal of other top administrators has been carried out, and the implications of this action carries of total disregard for the input that David Scott has gotten in the course of consultation with our councils and other faculty groups.

We understand the importance of putting together a team of administrators which is Scott's own. However, we believe that this desire must be moderated by what is important to the faculty of this University as a whole. Any potential advantage that might accrue to the administration from autocratic and unpopular changes in key administrative personnel will be heavily outweighed by the damage caused to the University community's confidence in Scott's future leadership, by the employment of a management style which is in conflict with accepted norms of process and consultation. The campus needs strong leadership in these difficult times, but destabilizing actions such as the recent removals shatter trust and are not a possible basis for effective leadership.

We agree about the need for a clear vision for the future. But any changes must be built on a foundation of respect for the strengths of the present institution and for the accomplishments of those who have contributed to those strengths, The fact and especially the manner of the removal of Dr. Conti, who represents one of the great strengths of this institution as a major research university, does not seem to be consistent with basic principles of academic leadership. Given that action, and the wider concern generated by the similar abrupt removal of other top administrators, our confidence in Scott's leadership is very badly shaken. We need to know what Chancellor Scott proposes to do to try to restore our confidence.

Right reacts to Schindler's

At a special screening of Schindler's List for high school students, anti-abortion radicals handed out literature about "America's Holocaust." The misguided protestors, members of Massachusetts Citizens for Life attempted to exploit the emotions of students as they exited Steven Spielberg's acclaimed film on the Holocaust.

To date, the hard right has been almost silent about Schindler's List. The Freedom Writer however, did find references to the film in the publications of three leading conservative Christian groups.

The Rev. Donald Wildmon is the Methodist minister whose AFA Journal "documents" how sex and violence on television and in movies leads to violence in real life. The April 1994 AFA Journal carried a short article about Schindler's List under the headline: "Movie influences shooting."

The article in its entirety reads: "A man who recently converted to Judaism shot a woman in the back during a San Diego showing of the Holocaust [sic] movie Schindler's List. The local prosecutor said the man was trying to protect Jews. James Kirby, 45, has admitted pulling the trigger, but claims he did not expect the gun to fire."

Pat Robertson's Christian American, in nine paragraphs, tells the whole story of Schindler's List so none of its readers need to see it. "Regrettably," the article concludes, "the erotic nudity, graphic sex and explicit violence detract from what could have been an important and a great epic film and will put the movie off-limits to too many moral moviegoers."

Dr. James Dobson's Focus on the Family ministry publishes a weekly newsletter by fax called The Pinion's Weekly Briefing. Its issue from March 25, 1994 noted that Spielberg planned to donate some of the profits from the movie to provide free screenings for high school students.

The Colorado Springs-based group takes exception to this plan, saying that the film, "in its present form... features a sex scene showing frontal nudity, numerous uses of explicit profanity and violence unnecessary to the plot." It adds, "high schoolers exposed to this movie are likely to come away with more than just an understanding of the injustices of World War II." The group urges pastors to call Universal Pictures and demand a censored version for high school students.

"I knew the Jews were treated cruelly, but the film showed just how cruel it really was. How if they didn't like you, bam, you were dead."
— Ryan Keegan, a junior at Pittsfield's Taconic High school, after watching 'Schindler's List.'

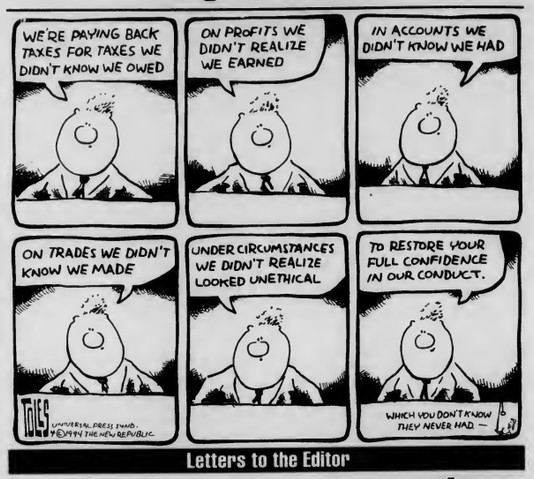
Skipp Porteous

Great Barrington resident Lorna M. Strassler funded special screenings of Schindler's List for thousands of Massachusetts high school students. After one showing, a front page in headline in The Berkshire Eagle read: "Schindler's List stuns area students into silence."

"These were high school kids being quiet," said senior Marc Samaie. "Big tough football players and even obnoxious kids who make fun of the teacher. All of their heads were tilted down. It gave me a sense of awe."

"I'm just heartsick to think that could have happened to people," said Ashleigh Barry, a junior at Pittsfield's Taconic High school. "I hadn't really thought about the things [the Jews] had to do to survive, how they hid in toilets and sewers. I'd never gotten that before."

A classmate, Ryan Keegan, said, "I knew the Jews were treated cruelly, but the film showed just how cruel it really was. How if they didn't like you, bam, you were dead."



One teen, Lauren Cawse, won the gold medal at the state Academic Decathlon for her extemporaneous talk on Schindler's List. In a follow-up article she penned for The Berkshire Eagle, Cawse said of the three-hour-plus movie, "Every moment is vital."

Protest out of touch with the real world

To the editor:

The more things change, the more UMass stays the same. Or so it seems, given the abortion rights protest thrown on the Student Union steps by Stacy Malone and friends last Wednesday.

"The Collegian cannot accept advertising from anti-choice groups because women on this campus won't allow it," she said. Well, thank you, Stacy for so clearly conveying the opinions and convictions of nearly 10,000 women, most of whom you have never met, spoken with or even seen.

Thank you for also deciding what is right and what is wrong for a newspaper staff of 200 of your peers — a staff whose welfare you apparently did not consider before you got up on those steps. Do you remember how it felt in May of 1992, when a different group of protesters said you and the whole staff were racists? Hmm?

Let me clue you in on something I've learned in the last six months working at a small daily newspaper. Business comes first, and news comes second and that's the bottom line. Sounds like the tail wagging the dog, true, but the cold reality (of which there is precious little in the Unhappy Valley) is newspapers which cannot pay their bills do not survive. They fold and their reporters take jobs at convenience stores.

You can't ignore things that offend you. That's not the way life works; life is offensive and mean and heartless. Get used to it and get off those Student Union steps, Stacy. You're smarter than that.

Nobody should be denied media access

To the editor:

As a gynecologist who does abortions, as a civil libertarian and as an alumnus of the University, I am very much interested in the controversy caused by the anti-abortion pamphlet distributed with last Wednesday's edition of the Collegian.

I am very happy that the propaganda material received such an immediate and vocal response. However, I must part company with POWER over the suggestion that those who spread misinformation should be denied access to the media. Who is to determine what is misinformation?

The proper answer to speech (even abusive, offensive, misinformative or deliberately mendacious speech) is more speech in reply. Enforced "political correctness" is anathema to those truly interested in civil liberty in general, and academic freedom in particular.

As witness to my commitment to reproductive choices: I would now be fully retired, except for the activities of the anti-abortionists. Their attempts at bullying and harassment have convinced me to continue my professional activities on a part-time basis to assure women of this area access to the services which the self-styled "pro-life" groups would like to make unavailable.

Even pro-lifers need to be heard

To the editor:

Thank you for publishing the ad insert by the anti-choice folks. They gotta have their say, too Maybe if they felt like they had a voice in this country, they wouldn't be shooting abortionists... well, that's probably asking too much.

As a Jewish member of the American Civil Liberties Union, I supported their defense of the Nazis' right to march in Skokie, Ill., a predominantly Jewish community and home of many concentration camp survivors. My love of free speech was greater, I guess, than my hatred of the Nazis.

I imagine a world where the folks against abortion focus on helping people deal with unplanned pregnancies and unexpected or unwanted children, where these folks just try to get the word out, encouraging us as they do. This, in part, is just what this ad is about.

The part I really hate is that they're trying to make it illegal to choose differently. When they try to tell me what to do, I just turn off. But they do have a point. Sometimes, when all I hear is their screaming, I can't hear the small voice inside me that's trying to tell me what to do.

I remember when I didn't think about where the trash went. The garbage men (they were all men) came and then it was just... gone. Now I know about landfills and recycling. When my car smokes, I know that smoke doesn't just go away. We all breathe it. It makes me part of the problem.

And that's how I was about abortion when I was in my twenties and trying to decide how I felt about it. You have an abortion (not me, I'm a man) and then it's... gone. No consequences. I didn't think about how the procedure went or about whether life starts at three months or six months or at birth. (If you want to say that life starts at conception, say it in your church of choice. Don't saddle me with your religion. Remember, "separation of church and state?" it's in your Constitution.)

If I ever got a lover pregnant, I figured that I'd hope she chose abortion, but I wouldn't have any right to argue for it. The idea of fatherhood terrified me (still does). Would I be any more prepared for the responsibility than my father was? Would I produce as messed up a son as I? Hey, these are reasonable fears. I always knew how a lover felt about the issue before we did it. It was like the AIDS question. For me, there was always a question to ask first.

Now I'm not so sure what I'd want. It'd still be her decision (it's her body), but I'm coming to think that I'd have to ignore the spirit in that baby to want it ripped out of the world so soon after its arrival. At conception? Maybe. I don't know. All those religious voices clamor about morality when, in fact, they just want to make parenthood the punishment for promiscuity.

That morality seems smaller to me now, and my own voice whispers that I could just trust in the world, take what comes to me, accept my life without trying to control it by choosing the "exact right" mate or career. My spirituality has nothing to do with religion, which is what someone else says I'm supposed to think, supposed to feel. It's about shutting out all that noise and listening inside to how I feel.

Some information along the way is good, though. Just remember, each person decides for herself. We men can decide how we feel and even what we want in this matter, just not what is actually done with each pregnancy. If I was facing parenthood, how much courage would I have? Would I be able to hear my own voice, accept its guidance?

I'm beginning to think that I'm anti-abortion. I'll never be anti-choice.

Disappointed by Collegian coverage

To the editor:

This past week when the Collegian printed a pro-life advertisement, I thought this might be a sign that the Collegian was now open to presenting both sides of this controversial issue and adding to the well-rounded education of UMass students. Sadly, Tracy Monahan, the Collegian's news editor, has proven me wrong.

On Sunday, there was a pro-life talk at the Newman Center which the Collegian refused to cover. The speaker was Ruth Pakaluk, former head of Mass. Citizens for Life. In her talk, she exposed the evils of the abortion industry. The talk was well-publicized ahead of time, and it attracted close to 40 UMass students.

I personally told Ms. Monahan the date, time and location of the talk well in advance. She now claims that she did not have enough reporters to cover the event. I find this strange since Sunday is a notoriously bad news day. After looking at Monday's Collegian, I see this past Sunday was no different.

Also, the Collegian always seems to find enough reporters to cover pro-choice events. Just a couple of weeks ago, the Collegian dedicated a series of front page stories to a pro- choice conference at Hampshire College. Last week, the Collegian gave front-page coverage to a pro-choice rally.

One would think, given all the coverage and debate the abortion issue received on this campus this past week, that the former president of Mass. Citizens for Life (the state's largest pro-life organization) coming to UMass to speak would be newsworthy.

Obviously, as far as the Collegian is concerned, the only events on campus that are newsworthy are those with which the news editor agrees. Perhaps Ms. Monahan's job title should be changed from news editor to news censor.

Grad Senate elections addressed

BSU endorses GSS candidates

To the editor:

In this time of great economic hardship, when many of us are desperately clinging to our educational opportunity, it is vital that we as individuals and as a community are represented by those who understand our plight.

We, as a University community, are coming into a period of great cultural realignment as we attempt to come to grips with the demands of an increasingly diverse campus.

During this period, candidates like Prasad Venugopal for President, Julia Johnson for Vice-President, Ruth Mathis for Treasurer and Colin Cavell for Executive Officer of the Graduate Student Senate are of increasing value.

So, on behalf of the Black Student Union and the 600 students it represents, I feel honored to endorse such fine candidates as Venugopal, Johnson, Mathis and Cavell.

They've shown poise, courage and the temperament necessary to build coalitions and forge a vision that encompasses all the students of the University of Massachusetts.

Shomwa Shamapande,
President
Black Student Union

LBGA chooses GSS ticket

To the editor:

There are pressing issues on this campus ranging from increases in tuition and fees to the number of ALANA students enrolled at UMass. In response to these issues dedicated, hard-working people have risen to the occasion to look out for all students on campus. The Graduate Student Senate is no exception.

Present GSS leadership has taken an actively aggressive stance on keeping fee increases in check, getting the tower library renamed after W.E.B. DuBois and, in conjunction with GEO, presenting a domestic partner benefits package to the administration, but there is still work to be done.

Colin Cavell, candidate for executive office, founded the Anti-racism Coalition, was instrumental in organizing and mobilizing the W.E.B. DuBois coalition and has experience with two state legislatures.

Julia Johnson, the current treasurer and candidate for vice president, has equally impressive credentials. Julia brings to the GSS a dedication to women's issues and child care, as well as the political savvy to make changes happen. She has brought her ability to form sharp and insightful ideas to fruit as the co-founder of Women's Research and Action in Graduate Studies, as well as being a member of GEO's child care committee. This makes her the prime candidate for getting the harassment policy out of the bureaucratic quagmire that it is in.

Prasad Venugopal, former chair of the racism and social justice committee, brings excellent organizational skills and a progressive multicultural agenda to the GSS that is needed during these times. All of these candidates as well as Ruth Mathis for treasurer, a member of the NAACP and other organizations, represent the slate that the LBGA wishes to endorse.

The LBGA Political Caucus

Senate member calls for change

To the editor:

I am a German graduate student in the physics department and a member of the Graduate Student Senate. I would like to share some of my thoughts concerning this week's Graduate Student Senate election with the campus community.

I am particularly concerned about the candidacy of Pierre Laliberte, who is running for the office of GSS treasurer. Having worked in the Senate, GEO and for grad interests generally, I write this letter to make sure that the divisiveness and cheap politics Laliberte employs should be seen for what they are.

Throughout the year, as the Senate and others labored hard to work constructively and to advance the interests of graduate students, Pierre and two of his friends repeatedly tried to disrupt and discredit the work of senators and officers.

In perhaps the most shocking and divisive display of these politics during this year, Laliberte turned the 1995 budget process into a platform for his mean-spirited personal politics. Under the guise of benign-sounding bureaucratic and fiscal arguments he sought to eliminate at least two funded TA positions.

These job-cuts would have been achieved through the closure of the Graduate Women's Network and The Voice. Many observers in the GSS meetings said that it was clear that Laliberte had made an effort to single out programs which are of particular importance to women and African Americans. To my surprise I saw Pierre and his running- mates complain of "race-baiting" in a recent flyer. This is hypocrisy!

This year Laliberte's attempt to eliminate these GEO jobs failed, but he did succeed in disrupting the budget procedure for many weeks in what ultimately lead to the depletion of GSS reserve accounts.

Clearly, Pierre Laliberte hopes to expand his divisive politics into the next academic year by becoming GSS Treasurer. He has sought to mimic the coalition unity of the Venugopal, Johnson, Mathis and Cavell slate by forming an opportunistic ticket of the last minute that speaks of unity and action, when all we have seen in obstruction and divisiveness.

Laliberte definitely has a tremendous ego-problem, and it's high time for him to graduate and get a life.

I strongly urge the graduate student community on this campus to elect Prasad Venugopal, Julia Johnson, Ruth Mathis and Colin Cavell for GSS office!

A motel with clean rooms

My mind is a little bit overloaded right now. Time to clear out some space:

Has anyone else seen the signs for the motel right near the Dead Mall on Rt. 9? One of them boldly declares that the motel has "Clean Rooms."

* * * * *

Wow! They have clean rooms! I really want to stay there now. No, on second thought, I want a dirty room. A disgusting room. One with dog crap smeared all over the walls. Give me a break. I thought clean rooms were a given. This quality motel obviously thinks otherwise.

My housemate Stowie and I were battling it out in 'NBA Showdown' for Sega the other day. I really had to wonder when Stowie said he didn't want to take Blazer forward Jerome Kersey out of the game because Kersey was trying harder than the other Portland forwards.

This is from the same kid who would actually rather be a dog than a human being. For some reason, he thinks being a dog, not having a care in the world, would be amazing. That's exactly what he is, however. Amazing. Simply amazing. If you know him, ask him to play 'La Bamba' for you. It's a very entertaining version.

* * * * *

In January, my housemates and I ordered HBO because it was free after we demolished a Bigfoot pizza from Pizza Hut. Not only was the pizza awful, but nearly five months later the only movies we've seen on HBO are Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Karate Kid, The Bodyguard, Sidekicks and I think Ghostbusters. The station just replays movies over and over again. It's a disgrace. Yet, we still watch it. Which is more of a disgrace?

* * * * *

A couple of weekends ago I watched Dazed and Confused and California back-to-back. That is like following an episode of "Scooby Doo" with a tape from the "Johnny Quest" archives. You just shouldn't do it. Both movies are good flicks, however, so I survived. It was definitely better than watching Buffy again.

* * * * *

It was truly hilarious to watch Bill Tobin of the Colts rip ESPN's draft guru Mel Kiper during the station's coverage of the NFL Draft on Sunday. It was also pretty funny to hear Kiper, obviously flustered, fire back at Tobin.

Is there anyone more irritating on sports telecasts than Kiper? Okay, maybe George Michael, but Kiper is such an ass. Why do guys like Michael and Kiper have egos?

* * * * *

How 'bout that trash talkin' on the courts during Haigis Hoopla? Easy there, guys, relax. If all you do is tip a pass out of bounds, there is no need to yell something like, "You better pray hard son, 'cause I'm the Minister of Defense!" Or if you hit an easy layup off the glass, you don't have to scream, "Ma-ma-money in the bank! That's what i am!" Actually, that's pretty good stuff. How about this one after a blocked shot inside, "Here's your Spalding Back Guarantee. Please come again!" Okay, maybe it's time to change the subject.

* * * * *

Anybody that complains about that stupid kid getting caned in Singapore obviously didn't watch Dazed and Confused. That's my political thought for the day. Now I can go watch "Beaver and Buffcoat." I mean...

* * * * *

My good pal Caleb likes to come up with ideas for television shows. Well, now it's my turn. How about doing over the shows "Chips" and "The Love Boat," only switching the casts. Ponch and Gopher would change places, Baker and Isaac would trade off, and so on and so forth. If Aaron Spelling is reading this, I thought of it first, you bastard.

* * * * *

So, which wrestler did you think was stronger, Tony "Mr. USA" Atlas or "Polish Power" Ivan Putski? I would have to go with Atlas and his "Press Slam" over Putski and his Polish Hammer.

Speaking of Putski, the Parkside dell in Newton, Mass., offers a kielbasa sandwich named, yes, you guessed it, "Ivan Putski: The Polish Power." It's pretty good, but I like the "Bob Barker: The Price Is Right" ham sandwich better. This, sadly enough, is very true.

It's barbecue time, boys and girls. Enjoy.

Bad Girls is poor indeed

ASSOCIATED PRESS
Drew Barrymore is one of the Bad Girls.

By ED HUMPHRIES
Collegian Staff

Like any good genre, revisionist westerns have their highs and lows. Kicked off by Eastwood's Unforgiven and fueled by Walter Hill's Geronimo, Hollywood's myth-shattering retake on the Old West has reaped box-office bonanza and Academy gold. But for every Wyatt Earp there's a Tombstone, for every Ballad of Little Jo a Bad Girls.

Bad Girls is just that; bad. Helmed by Jonathon Kaplan (Unlawful Entry) after the original director Tamra Davis was booted from the set, Bad Girls tells the story of four prostitutes seeking better lives through their satchel of stolen funds. As they travel the dusty trails from Echo Lake, Arizona to Aqua Dulce, New Mexico the women learn about life and love while forging a special bond with each other.

Sounds a lot like the dribble found in studio press packs of movies in which the plot doesn't get anymore complex than that.

The main problem with Bad Girls is that is so desperately wants to flex its high concept muscle of women in the saddle, that the film ignores character development in favor of fitting the women into every has-been western cliche. (Yes there is a great train robbery.)

Most glaring is Kaplan's decision to cast the women into stereotypical molds. The problem with high-concept is that it takes a premise written in 25 words or less and grafts it onto plot devices long since buried in dusty studio closets.

Here Kaplan drags those worn female characterizations for all the embarrassed audience to see. We're given Madelaine Stowe as the tough talking prostitute, quick with her wit and quicker with her sidearm. Mary Stuart Masterson is the prim widower, living with the overbearing legacy of her dead husband. Andie MacDowell is the faux Southern belle, aiming to flash her pearly whites and shrouded gams as a way out of any fix. Rounding out the cast, Drew Barrymore is the feisty cowgirl with the heart of gold and an ironic penchant for swilling moonshine.

Kaplan's Bad Girls might as well be called "Chicks in Chaps." That stereotype illustrates Kaplan's use of his talented cast. Rather than allow actual female characters to roam the West (yes, they did exist) he presents cartoon characters, so much so that the film begins to resemble a Zucker Bros. parody, unintentionally allowing death scenes to lapse into overbearing and side splitting shots of blinding heavenly lights.

The script doesn't help matters, trotting out a skeleton in each character's past. With Barrymore it's the drink, MacDowell her "Big Daddy's" whore trading. Masterson has the specter and guilty consternation of her dead husband hanging over her, and Stowe turns to prostitution simply for the money, while bearing her shady connections to the local villainous posse (led by the wasted Robert Loggia and the overacting James Russo).

Seeing Kaplan's bastardization of what could have been an interesting deviation on the Old West makes me yearn to see what Tamra Davis would have done. She made good use of Barrymore in her impressive debut Guncrazy, it would have been interesting to see what she would have brought to the film.

Unfortunately Bad Girls remains an interesting blast from the past. While boosted by revisionist casting it fails through retro storytelling. Sexism still rules the Wild West and apparently reigns dominant in the screenwriter's pen as well.

Earth Day jam features bands

By MATTHEW JUSTIN FAERBER
Collegian Correspondent

Earth Day Celebration
Central Residential Area
April 23, 1994

This past Saturday marked the annual celebration of Earth Day on the UMass campus. At the center of the day's festivities was a free concert featuring a variety of bands whose differences in style emphasized their common goal, to help increase awareness of environmental and social issues.

The event, which was co-sponsored by Students Acknowledging Kinetic Energy and the Central Area Government, took place in the quadrangle between the Baker and Greenough residential buildings and was headlined by the highly-acclaimed Boston band, Tree.

This day the band lived up to both the spirit of the event and their reputation as one of the best hardcore acts on the Boston scene. Tree tore through a powerful hour-long set featuring many songs off their recent A Lot To Fear album.

The methodical rhythm of "Suffer" had the crowd in motion, as did their unorthodox but powerful rendition of Bob Marley's "Exodus."

Tree frontman River, sporting a T-shirt from the ecology organization Earth First!, said that he was excited to be a part of this year's Earth Day event because the environmental movement is very important to the band, acknowledging that their name originated from this belief.

"The tree is a symbol of strength and renewal," said River. River also emphasized the importance of the community feel of the event, adding that this kind of banding together is needed to get anything accomplished.

Besides providing great music for the event, the band also handed out free baby trees, encouraging students to do their part for the environment on a personal level by planting at least one tree each.

Also on the bill was the band Shades Apart from New Jersey. The ferocity of their punk rock guitars were tempered perfectly with melodic vocals to create energetic and often catchy songs.

Hell No! from New York City proved to be somewhat less accessible. Their brutally aggressive hardcore/metal assault was almost as loud as their singer's bright orange jumpsuit, but most of their songs were lacking a degree of variety which would have made them far more listenable.

UMass' own Chameleon's Colors performed a solid set consisting of blues rock and improvisational numbers which highlighted the band's three-piece percussion section.

Opening the show was an acoustic folk duo called Gypsy. The two women sang original songs which embodied the true spirit of this Earth Day gathering, confronting such issues as the destruction of the rainforests and the need for the use of renewable sources of energy.

The Mushy Martian Spare Patted did not take kindly to young folks... That's why it was no surprise when Itttis Max, Brad, and tiny tot Andrew were thrown in the Intergalactic Slime Pen. "Why is it always the good ones that suffer?" whined Andy. "Shaddap!" replied Maximillian and Brad. Andy ignored the older boys, as he scavenged another twist-tie. He had plans. BIG plans. He didn't plan on sticking around.

Indigo Girls try new tunes at AC

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

Indigo Girls
LeFrak Gymnasium
April 23, 1994

I don't have much to complain about, but I felt bad for the others. You see, I've had a promotional copy of Indigo Girls' yet-unreleased Swamp Ophelia for about three weeks, interviewed Indigo Emily Saliers last week, attended an intimate press conference just a few hours before the concert, and got in free to the show.

So I'm not that disappointed.

But if I paid $21 to stand in a humid gym on plywood planks after waiting about an hour in a line so long you'd think it you was in Disney World, and got to listen to a dozen songs I've never heard before, with only a handful of older tunes to sing along to, I'd be a bit upset.

After local folk wonder Erica Wheeler warmed up the already flushed and growing crowd, Indigo Girls took the stage. Opening with the familiar "Galileo," the folk-pop duo made up of Saliers and Amy Ray, began with a muted version of the tongue-in-cheek fave from Rites of Passage. The crowd didn't seem to mind, even when the pair launched into "Fugitive" and "Power of Two," a couple of the better tunes from Swamp Ophelia.

Indigo Girls bounced back into the crowd's favor with a terrific version of "Kid Fears;" the audience singing along with enough energy to jump start Al Gore. Sliding into a mediocre version of "Least Complicated," the group seemed to loose their footing — on Swamp Ophelia, the song is a smash, but played here so tentativeiy, it dissolved into a middle-brow toe-tapper.

Granted, the Indigo Girls were trying out their new material, even thanking the audience for being so indulgent. "How many of you are from Amherst College?" Emily ad-libbed. A sea of hands rose. "How many of you scored over 1300 on your SAT's?" More hands. "Okay, how many of you are lying?"

With fans back on their side, it was sad that tuning problems marred "Pushing the Needle Too Far," a searing song from *Nomads*Indians*Saints*. Amy and Emily recovered, though, and delivered. it was clear then, that the duo felt more obvious confidence in their older tunes.

"The Wood Song," "Mystery" and "Reunion," a trio of steilar riffs from Swamp Ophelia revived the sagging concert, and Indigo Girls were wise to end on a familiar note. With "Ghost," "Chickenman" and the new single "Touch Me Fall," the pair finally had the audience roaring.

Then came "Closer to Fine."

I've heard Indigo Girls end their shows three times with this triumphant, exuberant ode to life three times, and it never fails to amaze me how much people know this song. Not just know the words, but the rhythm, the breath, the individual and collective meaning of this singular song. All was forgiven by now, as the audience roared along with Emily and Amy.

Closing the show with a haunting a capella song that managed to bring scores of sweaty listeners together in a moment of pure harmony, Indigo Girls proved themselves (as if they needed to) tenfold.

Perhaps then, my quibbling is overstated. And maybe Indigo Girls (and/or Amherst College) should have picked a more scaled-down venue (Iron Horse, anyone?) to try out their new material. But me, I'll wait for the big tour this summer — when I'm not the only one singing along.

Synaesthesia rocks Central's Butterfield

By JOSHUA BOYD
Collegian Staff

Synaesthesia & Cruel Shoes
Butterfield Residence Hall
April 23, 1994

I don't think I'm exaggerating to say that on Saturday night I saw the best local show I've seen this semester. If you weren't at Butterfield Hall that night, I feel deep remorse for your soul. But, being the good samaritan that I am, I'm going to rub in your face what you missed.

Starting off at around 9 p.m. the four-piece band Cruel Shoes came on and generated quite a bit of attention, to say the least.

The band has been together for about a year, but Cruel Shoes is a new name for them. At one time, they were called Cliffdweller, but their ex-keyboardist Steve Bergeron left the band and took the name with him. The remaining members, bassist Nicole Sutka, guitarist Joe Nelson, percussionist and harmonica player Ralph Ebert and the amazingly talented drummer Matt Dean share lead vocal parts on different songs.

Dean's existential drumming was always eyebrow-lifting as he let his voice, similar almost to a young Geddy Lee (of Rush), take control of the cover of the widely known Led Zeppelin tune, "Kashmir." The band changed their sound on almost every song.

Having played together since high school in the coastal town of Lynn, Mass., the sextet named Synaesthesia has secured a large fan base that's turned into a following cult of fans. The band always generates great music and gets the biggest turnouts and ecstatic, dancing crowds at their shows.

With a backdrop of a montage sketch drawing with an unreal slide show to accompany the music, the band kept the heat up all night, running through old favorites like "Days Of Leisure" and "Backwards Man." Guitarist Darren Ray played like a man possessed, while drummers Jason "J-Boy" McIsaac and BJ Ray pleasantly pounded the demons out of their drum sets.

One extensive jam started with the majestic "Ride The Elephant," which led into a great instrumental, into an unnamed song the band's been experimenting with. They then moved right into another crowd favorite, "Hop Skip Skat 'Em," into another instrumental, and back into "Ride." After that song was done there was no break before they did their hard-edged cover of Neil Young & Crazy Horse's "Cinnamon Girl." The show put Synaesthesia and Cruel Shoes on a plateau that you could touch heaven from.

Pop Narcotic, Rodan find a place in Trax

Rodan
Rusty
1/4 Stick Records

Louisville, Kentucky must be one lonely place. For the past year the city has been giving birth to some of today's finest malcontents (The Palace Brothers, Crain).

Rodan, the area's newest export, has been under the watchful eye of rock critics across the country for some time now, after releasing a couple of singles on various indie labels.

On Rusty, the band's debut, the critics may have gotten more than they bargained for. The six songs that make up the album (they each average around seven minutes apiece) are virtual exercises in contrast. Songs fluctuate between delicate, haunting strumming and fierce Big Black-esque onslaughts, often within the same song.

While Rusty is in no way an easy listen, it does sound convincingly self-assured for a band who has such a minimal back catalog. Catch them before the majors do. B (M. Audette)

Small Factory
I Do Not Love You
Spin Art Records

In a time when hordes of pop-lameos such as Juliana Hatfield and Evan Dando are beginning to steadily climb the charts, it is refreshing to see that bands like Small Factory are keeping the indie-pop community alive and well.

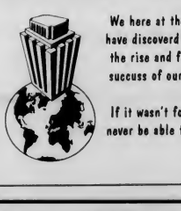
With their first full-length release I Do Not Love You, this Providence, Rhode Island trio lovingly embraces its punk/pop roots and makes no qualms about doing it (just look at the list of bands they thank in the liner notes: Velocity Girl, Tsunami, Versus etc.).

Basically what you get here are twelve pure-pop nuggets, as simple and straightfoward as they are light-hearted and refreshing, played with enough enthusiasm and gusto to separate them from the rest of the pack.

Toying with the "dark child-like" lyrics that bands such as Heavenly like to fool around with, bassist Alex Kemp sings about lost love and loneliness in his distinct guttural croon reminiscent of underground hero Jonathan Richman.

There are times when Kemp's somewhat amelodic voice threatens to bring the buoyancy of the tunes down, but thankfully the sweet harmonizing of drummer Phoebe Summers quash manages to keep the whole thing afloat.

While I Do Not Love You is definitely not a landmark in the wide world of music, it is a light refresher in a genre that is often blase and forgettable. That alone is something to be proud of. B+ (M. Audette)



Various Artists
Why Do You Think They Call It Pop?
Pop Narcotic

Here it is, the best rock compilation of the year. Hope you all have a turntable in your room because this has only been released on vinyl as a double 10". This collection features 13 of the brightest stars of today's indie rock scene. Don't expect to hear any grunge on this album, it's filled with all great pop songs. If you enjoy bands like Pavement or R.E.M., you will greatly appreciate the excellent tunes that are found here.

Not surprisingly, the helium track "In A Little Box" stands out as the best on this record. Like all great Helium songs, it combines Mary Timony's vicious guitar playing with her sweet and innocent vocals. Amazing. Helium is establishing themselves as the brightest new rock band in the land.This collection is reason alone to go out and buy a record player. If you are sick of the bands that MTV is feeding you and if you enjoy a good pop melody, I strongly advise this compilation for you. it is a great introduction to the indie rock scene. A- (M. Burke)

Policeman defends self

Powell tells civil jury he acted in a correct manner

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — One of the policemen sent to prison for beating Rodney King testified Monday that he acted correctly, adding that King was so out of control that he came close to shooting him.

Laurence Powell, who struck the most nightstick blows during the March 3, 1991, beating, was called as a hostile witness in King's civil lawsuit. He testified after arriving from a prison in Northern California, where he is serving a 30-month sentence. Last week, jurors awarded King $3.8 million in compensatory damages for his injuries. The jurors are now considering punitive damages against Powell and 14 other defendants.

"You don't think you did anything wrong that night?" King's lawyer, Milton Grimes, asked Powell.

"I not only don't think it. I know it," Powell replied. Grimes asked if Powell had come close to shooting King to death. Powell said he had come "very close."

"If he got up and attacked me one more time, it was going to be a shooting situation," Powell said. "I could not control him." King was beaten after a high-speed police chase when he refused to stop his car.

During his testimony, Powell was aggressive and verbose, leading Grimes to complain he was making speeches rather than answering questions.

U.S. District Judge John Davies refused to intercede.

Davies did rule that a controversial message Powell sent the night of the beating was admissible. In the message, Powell referred to a dispute involving a black family as "right out of Gorillas in the Mist," the movie about Dian Fossey's work with apes.

Powell's lawyer, Michael Stone, argued that the comment was irrelevant.

King testified earlier that he believes he was beaten because he is black. The four officers are white.

Powell said nothing racist was said during King's beating. "There were no racial slurs out there," he said. "No one insulted Mr. King."

Grimes also asked Powell about a computer message he sent right after the beating in which he used the word, "Oops!" and added, "I haven't beaten anyone this bad in a long time."

Aristide supporters slaughtered

By MICHAEL NORTON
Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — Soldiers massacred at least 23 fishermen and merchants in a west coast slum loyal to ousted President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, witnesses and human rights advocates said Monday. It followed a wave of attacks on Haiti's pro-democracy movement.

The soldiers raided a seaside neighborhood in the west coast city of Gonaives on Saturday, firing shots in the air but causing no reported injuries.

Hours later, they returned and began shooting indiscriminately at people gathering firewood on the beach. The troops also commandeered rowboats and attacked fishermen off shore. The weekend attack was first reported Monday.

The killings come as Washington has toughened its stance against the military, which has dominated Haiti since ousting the elected Aristide in a 1991 coup.

Up to 3,000 people, many of them Aristide supporters, have been killed since 1991 in political violence.

"I think this is a continuation of the effort to decapitate the democratic movement in Haiti," Ira Kurzban, the U.S. counsel for Aristide's government, told The Associated Press from his office in Miami.

The seaside Raboteau slum where the attack took place has been the scene of struggles recently between Aristide supporters and militants of a neo-Duvalierist paramilitary movement, the Front for the Advancement and Progress of Haiti (FRAPH).

Residents and the pro-Aristide Haitian Information Bureau said the attack began with a raid on the slum in Gonaives, 100 miles north of the capital Port-au-Prince.

Soldiers who said they were looking for armed Aristide partisans shot into the air, roused people from their beds and roughed them up, witnesses said.

Retired priest convicted of rape

BROCKTON, Mass. (AP) — A retired Roman Catholic priest convicted of raping and sodomizing an altar boy was sentenced Monday to four life prison sentences. That wasn't enough for the victim.

"I still wish him dead. There is no forgiveness for what he did," William Wood, now 27, said after the sentencing.

The Rev. John R. Hanlon, 65, was ordered to serve three concurrent life sentences by Superior Court Judge Courtland Mathers, making him eligible for parole in 15 years, when he would be 80. Mathers suspended a fourth life sentence.

Hanlon was convicted last month of sexually assaulting Wood at a summer cottage in Scituate in 1980 and 1981. At the time, Wood was an altar boy at St. Mary's Church in Plymouth, where Hanlon was the pastor.

"You had to be stopped at all cost. The sentence you receive will be minuscule compared to mine," Wood, 27, said in a statement before the sentencing.

Wood, who gave the media permission to use his name, said he remains active in the Roman Catholic faith. "I'm not going to condemn a whole group for one person," he said.

In the courtroom in support of Wood were several victims of James Porter, a former Roman Catholic priest convicted of molesting children while serving in the Fall River diocese in the 1960s. Porter, who pleaded guilty in New Bedford under a plea bargain in December, and has acknowledged molesting dozens of children, received a sentence that requires him to serve a maximum of 20 years in prison, but could make him eligible for parole in six years.

Hanlon made no comment either in court or after sentencing. He was convicted at the end of his second trial; the first trial ended last year with jurors unable to agree on a verdict.

His attorney, Marshall Johnson, said he would appeal the conviction. The judge rejected Johnson's plea to delay the sentence until after the appeal.

Cardinal Bernard Law, archbishop of Boston, said after the sentencing: "The way ahead is one of reparation, healing and forgiveness. My prayers are with all those who have been touched by these events: those bringing charges, Father Hanlon, their families, the staff and parishioners of St. Paul's in Hingham."

BOB says, "It is a poor fool who waits until dawn to settle his affairs of the heart."

But then again, we stoped listening to him a long time ago.

LOOKING FOR A SERIOUS

AND YOUR WHEELS ARE SOMETHING SPECIAL, TOO.

There's a Ford or Mercury Just Like You... and Your Ford or Lincoln-Mercury Dealer Has a Graduation Present to Help Make it Your Own... • $400 Cash Back or • a Special Finance Rate*

Personally speaking, what you drive says a lot about who you are. So why not say you're one of the most exciting, fun-loving, even sensible people going? In other words, why not say it with a sporty new Ford or Mercury?

Now's the perfect time to make a personal statement—because the 1994 Ford & Mercury College Graduate Purchase Program gives you your choice of $400 cash back or a special finance rate when you buy a new Ford or Mercury. Or lease your vehicle and get $400 cash back!

Plus, Ford Credit can offer qualified applicants pre-approved credit up to $18,000 or the MSRP, whichever is lower, which could mean no down payment on finance purchases. You may also defer purchase payments for 120 days in most states (excluding Michigan, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Washington, DC).

So take time out to see your Ford or Lincoln-Mercury dealer today and ask about the College Graduate Purchase Program. (It's a terrific way to show the world just how smart you really are!)

*Special Finance rate alternative and Ford Credit programs not available on leases.
To be eligible you must graduate with a bachelor's or graduate degree, or be enrolled in graduate school, between 1/1/94 and 9/30/94. This program is in addition to all other national customer incentives, except for other Ford private offers including the Young Buyer Program. You must purchase or lease your new vehicle between 1/1/94 and 9/30/95. Some customer and vehicle restrictions apply, so see your dealer for details.

"Whoa! Another bad one!... I see your severed head lying quietly in the red-stained dirt, a surprised expression still frozen in your lifeless eyes.... Next."

Your Horoscope

By Jeane Dixon

ARIES (March 21-April 19) The goals or services you will should be of the highest possible quality. The competitions may not be as scrupulous as you are. Common will make the difference.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) An appearance you are in the opposite sex. The better the impression you will make. Entertaining business associates at home should be especially successful.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Trust perceptive words are like an open weather to abundance. You find a way to get over a heartbreak. Anything your dreams may help you find your right place in the world. Write them down.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Your efforts and creative powers are going full tilt. Let your charisma win over new professional and social allies. Rewards or past efforts are at hand. Hold a small celebration with loved ones.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) A practical knowledge of what is needed will about an acceptable intermediate actions. Promote harmony among co-workers. Be more discriminating when choosing friends.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Harmony is possible between you and a close associate. Remember the good times you have had together. Public relations in your affairs may be lukewarm. Work that you are willing to share the limelight.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Consider any proposition you receive but avoid getting involved in anything that does not measure up to your high standards. Business travel should be postponed until more facts and figures are available.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) A business agreement may have to be revised as well as strengthened. A competition should liven up the day nicely. Concentrate on the tasks at hand. Remember the past when planning for the future.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Your concerns about security are in the spotlight. Recognize the difference between superficialities and true qualities. Words are a could prove costly.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Taking a difficult situation in a lighthearted manner is best, otherwise complications and double entendres are possible. Be especially thoughtful of someone who feels under the weather.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Acting too eager could make some one think that you are overreaching your authority. Keep your cool and you will get average results. Your grasp of practical matters is formidable.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) A good time to carry out ambitious plans. An investment you make now will eventually turn a profit. A letter or phone call brings inquiry news. Follow up on employment leads. Revamp a busy life.

talent, Parish was a coach's dream. A consistent performer. A leader. And, most importantly, a winner.

• Say what you will, I still admire and respect former heavyweight champion Evander Holyfield. And, if Mike Tyson fights again after his jail sentence, I want to see him fight Evander.

• You gotta love when high draft picks are pleased to be picked by a team not for the team, but for getting picked at the early time. Why? The larger sum of money, of course.

• I recall playing catch with my friend in the yard when we were little. We used to pick a major league baseball player, and pretend we were him. My friend's name is Ryan, and he used to call himself Ryan Nolan, after Nolan Ryan. Me? I used to call myself Chuck Rainey.

To this day, I am still trying to figure out why I picked the former mediocre Red Sox pitcher. And to think I could have been Steve Renko instead.

Softball loses A–10 game

By TED KOTTLER
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts softball team lost its first game in the standings to an Atlantic 10 opponent, Rutgers University, yesterday at Totman Field. The Lady Knights won the second game of a doubleheader, 3–1, while the Minutewomen took the first game 2–1. UMass is now 19–12, 7–1 in the A–10.

UMass' Kelly Daut worked seven strong innings in the opening contest, allowing only two hits, walking one and fanning seven while improving to 10–4. She fell behind 1–0 in the fourth without being hit very hard.

After plucking center fielder Janetta Trecroce to start the frame, Jen Tate attempted a sacrifice bunt. UMass first baseman Rachel Lawson fielded it cleanly but made a poor throw, and Trecroce made it to third. Sharon Morris' ground out to second base scored Trecroce.

Rutgers starting pitcher Nicky Warnikessel baffled UMass through the first five innings, yielding two hits and no runs. But in the sixth, UMass had only itself to blame for not breaking the silence.

Chris Martens sent a one–out single to center, and Lawson did the same. Trecroce fumbled Lawson's hit, enabling Martens to easily reach third, but Martens tried to go further. She was hung out to dry on a nifty relay to the plate that had UMass coach Elaine Sortino seething.

"We had baserunning mistakes 30 games into the season, and that's inexcusable," Sortino said. "When we did hit the ball and had opportunities to extend innings, we ran the bases poorly."

UMass still had Lawson on second with two outs, and Michele Shaw made it first and third as she reached on an error by Rutgers' second baseman Maureen Lee. Alas, Jodi Sorenson stranded both runners with a grounder back to the box.

The Minutewomen didn't make the same mistake twice. Amy Powell started the seventh with a base hit to left, and Tracey DuEst dropped a textbook sacrifice to advance Powell. Lady Knights' third baseman Heather Hendershot booted a grounder by Stephanie Mareina, putting runners on the corners. Sam Cardenas drew a walk to load the bases, and Methot's base hit up the middle tied it 1–1.

Up came Martens, leading UMass with a .425 average, and she smacked a single to left past a drawn in infield to score Mareina with the game–winner.

Rutgers again took a 1–0 lead in the nightcap, this time in the first inning. UMass responded more promptly, tying it in the home half of the first on a ball hit by Martens that was nearly the first to leave Totman's confines in 1994. Martens doubled off the left field fence, plating Cardenas.

REBECCA PETERSON/COLLEGIAN

The University of Massachusetts softball team split a doubleheader with Rutgers yesterday afternoon, losing their first Atlantic 10 conference game of the season. The Minutewomen's A–10 record falls to 7–1.

Martens made a costly error in the fourth, losing Lee's fly ball and letting her take second. Michelle Nikolayew bunted Lee over and Kristin Politi made it 2–1 with a right field single off UMass starter Dani Ortega (7–7).

Lawson led off the sixth with a base hit to center, and Hendershot again resembled wickets on Shaw's grounder, making it first and third. Sorenson walked to load the bases. UMass has Providence today at 3 p.m.

Minutemen battle Maine tonight

By ARTHUR STAPLETON JR.
Collegian Staff

The view from the top is a lot different, yet it suits the Massachusetts baseball team just fine.

Sitting content in first place, the Minutemen received a well–deserved rest yesterday before they take the field tonight at 7 p.m. in Old Orchard, Maine, to face the University of Maine Black Bears.

> "The guys did a great job," Coach Mike Stone

With six Atlantic 10 games remaining, the Minutemen (14–3) are ahead of Rutgers (12–3) and West Virginia (11–3), two teams Massachusetts has already battled this season.

The Minutemen split a doubleheader with the Scarlet Knights back in March down in Piscataway, N.J.; last weekend, Coach Mike Stone's team bested the Mountaineers in two of three games, moving into first place.

"We did what we wanted to do [against West Virginia]. We won the series. The guys did a great job on Saturday — they played their butts off," Stone said.

The A–10 determines its regular season champion by winning percentage, and not the number of wins and losses, so Massachusetts is on top with six conference games remaining. The three–game series between the Mountaineers and the Scarlet Knights earlier this year was postponed and will not be rescheduled.

• • • •

The catalyst in last weekend's series which propelled Massachusetts into first place was second baseman Mark Pileski. The sophomore from Brockton had been in a slump heading into the weekend, but broke out in what he called one of his best offensive performances.

"I've been slumping and at the number two spot, the coaches rely on Jette [Ryan, the leadoff hitter and left fielder] and me as catalysts. It's special to bust out against a team as good as West Virginia," Pileski said.

Pileski collected eight hits, five RBI, five runs scored, two doubles, a triple and two HRs — numbers that may win him the A–10 Player of the Week award.

• • • •

In the bottom of the sixth inning in Massachusetts' 12–3 win on Saturday, the fireworks didn't just come from the Minutemen and their bats. With West Virginia freshman Jason Drenning on the mound in relief, Pileski and senior designated hitter Justin Howard teed off on back–to–back HRs.

Drenning hit the next batter, first baseman Bill Knight, and tempers flared. Knight was restrained, Drenning remained in the game and hit the next batter, shortstop Greg LaRocca. LaRocca was visibly upset on his way to first, yet Drenning stayed in the game. Both would score later.

Now that Massachusetts is at the top, it may not be the last time someone is gunning for the Minutemen.

Men's tennis team exceeds expectations

ARAM COMEAU/ COLLEGIAN

The University of Massachusetts men's tennis team achieved the goals that Coach Judy Dixon set before the season, including a stellar effort at this past weekend's Atlantic 10 tournament.

By MICHAEL REISS
Collegian Staff

Before the start of the Atlantic–10 Conference men's tennis championships this past weekend, opponents playing the first–year program of the University of Massachusetts easily could have thought they had a victory wrapped up.

Little did these opponents know that men's tennis is back at UMass.

By defeating St. Joseph's Sunday morning, the Minutemen ensured a seventh place finish out of a nine team field at the Championships held at West Virginia. Before the tournament, Coach Judy Dixon set goals for where she thought the team should place.

The results were exactly what Dixon hoped for, yet with a couple of minor breaks, the squad easily could have been playing for fifth place.

After falling to George Washington 7–0 in the first round (every doubles match was competitive, all decided by less than two games), the Minutemen rebounded to crush Rhode Island 7–0. After the Rhody win, the team then met Duquesne, with the winner advancing to the fifth/sixth place bracket.

It was the Duquesne match on Saturday in which the team rose to the challenge. With the doubles combinations of Darren Tow/Ankur Baishya (8–3) and Joe Twer/Greg Hsiao (8–6) pulling out wins, the squad was on its way.

Had it not been for two heartbreaking losses; first a Keith Murray/Kevin Hicks doubles nail–biter (9–7), then a Twer three–set singles special (4–6, 7–6, 7–6), UMass would have knocked the Dukes, as well as the A–10.

The Minutemen then disposed of St. Joseph's to wrap up a successful weekend.

UMass stands at 3–5 on the year, hosting Hartford (3 p.m.).

It's "I" as players jockey for awards

This is my time. I must utilize it for my views.

• 71 points.

While it is similar to the George Gervin–David Thompson scoring race in 1978, I am reminded of Wade Boggs sitting out the last game of a season to capture the batting crown.

Though I am a fan of both, Mr. Robinson and Mr. Boggs are two examples that show how truly important individual accomplishments really are. Don't believe those who say they don't care about individual awards.

Andrew Bryce

• I have faith in Bill Parcells.

• How 'bout Ellis Burks leading the National League in batting? Must make the Red Sox front office cringe as yet another former player is playing up to his potential. That does not erase the possibility that Burks may choke as the season progresses. Just give him a chance.

• Magic Johnson finished his 16 game stint as the Los Angeles Laker coach, guiding them to a 5–11 record, including a franchise record 10 straight losses. Not exactly the way the Magic Man wanted to go out.

• Will McDonough must be one nosy guy.

• Big game for the men's lax team, as they head north to take on No. 1 Syracuse at the Carrier Dome on Saturday. The competition just doesn't get any stronger.

• Nothing to say about the NHL because I lack full knowledge, but I just hope the Bruins go all the way.

• I enjoyed my first ever Massachusetts baseball game on Saturday, as the Minutemen swept a doubleheader from West Virginia. And to think that this team began the season with eight straight losses after a roadtrip down south. Just think about how strong the teams are down south.

• Is Robert Parish done playing? If not, will he be a Celtic? I don't know, the Celtics probably doesn't know, and the Chief may not know. What I know is that Parish was a mainstay for the Celtics for the past 14 years. It's immeasurable how much he has meant to the winning Celtic tradition, and despite the rough 1993–94 season, still stood tall through it all.

He was not as flashy as Shaquille O'Neal. He was not as much of a scoring machine as Kareem Abdul– Jabbar. He was not as purely talented as Hakeem Olajawon. But despite not being in a zillion commercials, and not scoring over 38,000 points, and not possessing the huge amount of

Red Sox off to familiar great start

By ROB GLOSTER
Associated Press

BOSTON — Red Sox fans have seen it all before. Their team gets off to a great start, then falls apart. But players say this year's club is different, and the numbers so far back them up.

After 18 games, Boston led the American League with a 13–5 record that included six straight wins heading into Monday night's game at Seattle. The Red Sox completed a 7–2 homestand on Sunday. Last year, the Red Sox were 11–7 at the same point and the early surprise of the old AL East. But hitting problems, weak defense and a lack of speed eventually relegated Boston to a second straight sub–.500 season.

With a ninth of the season having been played, there are some big differences between the 1993 and 1994 Red Sox:

- This year's club had 25 homers in 18 games, compared to 10 last year.

- The 1994 Red Sox had stolen 14 bases through Sunday, more than double the 1993 total of six at the same point.

- This year the team batting average was .291 after 18 games, compared to .262 last year.

- The 1994 Red Sox are winning despite mediocre starting pitching. The staff ERA was 5.05 after 18 games this season, compared to 3.32 last season.

"Last year, we started out 11-3 and we kind of surprised ourselves," said Mo Vaughn, hitting .386 in his first 18 games. "I think there's a different attitude with this team this year. I think we have a lot more experience and we know we can win."

Most of Boston's success so far this year has come at Fenway Park, where the team has played 12 of its 18 games. The Red Sox, now on a seven-game West Coast road trip, went 2-6 on their first western swing last season.

But players argue the 1994 team is more versatile, and better because it has pitcher Aaron Sele and infielder Tim Naehring from the start of the year.

"We're playing aggressive baseball that spills over to everyone," outfielder Mike Greenwell said. "We're taking the extra base. Sometimes you can die doing that, but we're going to do it anyway."

Billy Hatcher stole home to tie a game in the seventh inning last week and Otis Nixon, signed as a free agent in December, has four stolen bases and five bunt hits. Even the plodding Scott Cooper took an extra base on a sloppy outfield play last week to start a ninth-inning rally.

Naehring, whose major-league career has been limited by injuries to 155 games in the previous four seasons, is healthy this year and batting .379. He also had four homers, nearly matching his previous career total of six.

Sele, who went 7-2 as a rookie last year after being called up in June when Roger Clemens went on the disabled list with a groin injury, is 2-0 with a 2.81 ERA this season.

Robinson scores big, wins title

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Even David Robinson was surprised that his effort to win his first NBA scoring title resulted in a 71-point game.

"I looked up at the scoreboard," Robinson said after San Antonio's 121-97 victory over the Los Angeles Clippers on Sunday. "I said, '71 points. Oh, my goodness!'"

The Clippers committed 28 fouls, most of them against Robinson. Los Angeles double- and sometimes triple-teamed Robinson in an attempt to slow him down. Robinson's teammates helped him out by continually feeding him the ball and, late in the game, fouling Los Angeles players to give the Spurs possession.

Robinson finished the season with 2,383 points in 80 games, giving him an average of 29.787.

Shaquille O'Neal, who led Robinson by an average of .06 going into the game, needed 68 against New Jersey to win the scoring title at 29.790. He had 32 to finish at 29.346.

"Robinson was spectacular," Clippers coach Bob Weiss said. "That was exactly what we didn't want to happen. We double-teamed him with our forwards every time we could, but he still scored the points. I think the foul situation was a little ridiculous, though. He played great and he deserves the title."

Robinson's previous career-high was 52, set against Charlotte on Jan. 16, 1993.

"It was unbelievable," Robinson said. "My team has been behind me the whole year. They always push me to do a lot of individual things. As a leader, I just try to win games, but tonight they really wanted me to shoot it. When the game started they were looking for me almost every time down the court."

Robinson's finish was reminiscent of the final day of the 1977-78 season when David Thompson scored 73 points in an afternoon game, but lost the title when George Gervin had 63 that night. Witt Chamberlain, Thompson and Elgin Baylor are the only players to score 70 points in an NBA game.

Robinson scored the Spurs' first 18 points and had that total after one period. He scored just six points in the second quarter, but came back with 19 in the third period and 28 in the fourth. He was 26-for-41 from the field, including one of two 3-pointers, and made 18 of 25 free throws.

"It is a lot of work going after those points," he said. "The Clippers didn't want me to get it. They were bumping and grinding and double-teaming me. That's the hardest I've ever had to work for some points."

The 71 points established a team record, surpassing Gervin's 63 on April 9, 1978.

"I have never thought about a lot of personal stuff," Robinson said. "To me, it just comes along with winning."

Ward bypassed in draft

By BRENT KALLESTAD
Associated Press

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Although he was one of the most proficient passers in college football history, Heisman Trophy winner Charlie Ward wasn't picked in the NFL draft.

No team was willing to take a chance on the two-sport Florida State star, also one of the nation's top point guards in basketball and a likely draft pick by the NBA.

According to the NFL, Ward is the first Heisman winner to be bypassed in the draft since Army's Pete Dawkins, who was not taken in the 1959 draft.

"It's a situation he has presented himself," Green Bay General Manager Ron Wolf said Monday. "No one is really sure how important football is to him."

NFL teams had encouraged Ward in recent weeks to let them know if he was interested in a pro football career.

"If he said football was what he'd have wanted to do, he'd have been drafted in the first two rounds," said Minnesota Vikings coach Dennis Green. "He was a great college player."

Ward completed 69.5 percent of his passes for 3,032 yards and 27 touchdowns while throwing just four interceptions last season, when he led the Seminoles to their first national title.

The 6-foot, 182-pound Ward holds several Atlantic Coast Conference records including the highest career completion percentage (62.3) and most touchdown passes in a season.

"I've done everything I could possibly do to get drafted by the NFL," Ward said Monday.

"Now the NBA draft is coming up and I have a chance to prove myself in that sport," he said.

South African vote begins

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Black South Africans made history Tuesday, voting by the tens of thousands to take control of their country for the first time since whites arrived 342 years ago.

Refusing to be cowed by a wave of deadly bombings, the elderly and infirm came in droves from squatter settlements and thatched villages to mark a simple cross on a piece of paper.

Some literally crawled and others were pushed to the polls in wheelbarrows. Many broke down in tears after making their mark. "We need freedom," said 72-year-old Florence Ndimangele, voting with other elderly people near Cape Town. "We are tired of being slaves."

Serbs withdraw weapons

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Bosnian Serbs have effectively complied with a NATO deadline to withdraw heavy weapons from around Gorazde, averting any need for new air strikes for now, a top U.N. official said.

NATO gave the Bosnian Serbs until 2:01 a.m. Wednesday (8 p.m. EDT Tuesday) to withdraw their big guns 12.4 miles from the center of the eastern Muslim enclave or face air strikes. The Serbs claimed full compliance Tuesday night.

"On the basis of information available right now and subject to further verification, I have come to the conclusion there is no need to ask NATO for air strikes at this time," Yasushi Akashi, the chief U.N. official for former Yugoslavia, told reporters in Zagreb, Croatia, shortly before the deadline expired.

Nixon brought home

YORBA LINDA, Calif. (AP) — Under stormy skies fitting the occasion, Richard Nixon's body was brought home Tuesday in the blue and white jetliner he used after resigning the presidency in disgrace nearly two decades ago.

Nixon's flag-draped casket was flown from New York, where he died Friday, to El Toro Marine Corps Air Station, and was taken 20 miles by motorcade to Yorba Linda, his birthplace and site of his burial Wednesday.

Thousands of mourners were drenched by thunderstorms and pelted by hail as they waited to view the closed coffin inside the lobby of the Richard Nixon Library & Birthplace.

They slowly filed past the mahogany casket, which rested on a pedestal under the gaze of a military honor guard. A color photo of a grinning Nixon giving the "thumbs-up" sign was perched above an arrangement of red roses.

Crime victims get rights

BOSTON (AP) — Hundreds of crime victims and activists joined state officials Tuesday in supporting a bill that would make it easier for victims to press charges and follow cases through court.

"What this bill will allow us to do is empower victims," said Sen. Cheryl Jacques, D-Needham, co-chairman of the Legislature's Judiciary Committee.

The legislation, which cleared the committee this week, comes 10 years after Massachusetts enacted a "Victim Bill of Rights" that helps victims track criminal defendants through the court system. But victims and activists, who received support from Gov. William F. Weld and Attorney General Scott Harshbarger during a daylong conference, said more needs to be done.

Standing by a collection of quilts and T-shirts showing the names of murder victims, Mary Ellen Doyle described how the criminal justice system added to her emotional stress after her parents and brother were killed in Tewksbury in 1975.

Scott, faculty clash over firings

By CATHERINE B. PULLEY

Chancellor David K. Scott appeared before the Faculty Senate yesterday and encountered widespread criticism for removing vice chancellors Glen Gordon, Samuel Conti and Daniel Melley from their positions.

Scott explained his actions in front of over 700 faculty members in Bowker Auditorium. He held his position on the dismissals stating that the removals were "not firings," but were a "catalyst for change."

Many professors were suspicious of Scott's reasoning.

"I think that we have been listening to bull (expletive)," said Robert J. Ackermann, a professor of Philosophy. "I think you are talking out of both sides of your mouth. You talk about consultation but you are making decisions without consultation."

Scott said the removals could have happened earlier in his administration, but it would have been "inhumane." Scott added that he will be conducting a national search for replacements over the next two years.

During the 2 1/2 hour meeting, faculty expressed outrage at Scott's actions and lack of faculty input on the decision.

The Faculty Senate passed a motion forcing the Chancellor to have an on campus search for the interim replacements for the vice chancellors.

Faculty members expressed a lack of trust in Scott due to the haste in his actions. The faculty criticized his deficiency in consultation and communication.

"You don't need Michael Hooker as much as you need everyone in this room," said Jack Tager, a professor of history. Others said that plans for the University cannot move forward if Scott did not have the confidence and trust of the faculty.

"You need whole-hearted support," said Walter Denny, a professor of Art History.

George Sutton, a professor of Sociology, said that the firings without any consultation, "came to a point of violating our sensibilities."

Scott said that during his first nine months as chancellor, he has spent most of the time "listening and observing." He decided that changes needed to be made and that the next two years are "crucial" for the UMass–Amherst campus.

"I am working to do what I believe is best for the institution. This was brutal on the three individuals involved and I am sorry," said Scott. "In order to carry forward to the next level, I found it necessary to make these changes."

Chancellor David Scott addresses over 700 faculty members in Bowker Auditorium yesterday.

He was ambiguous when discussing what he called his, "10–year plan" refusing to elaborate on details and whether or not the plan was concrete.

"If we do not have a plan, how could [Gordon, Melley and Conti] have not carried it out if it has not been formulated?" said Robert Bagg, a professor of English.

He also refused to discuss the reasons for removing the three top administrators because of the involvement of the press. He said the press was "out of control," and the involvement in the lives of the three men was, "inhumane."

"So it goes" at FAC tonight

Acclaimed author Kurt Vonnegut, Jr. set to lecture

By A.J. STEWART
Collegian Staff

He has been called "America's greatest living writer." His books include Player Piano, Cat's Cradle, Slaughterhouse–Five. Tonight, Kurt Vonnegut, Jr. comes to the University of Massachusetts to speak. The topic of the lecture is "How to Get a Job Like Mine."

Vonnegut was born in Indianapolis, Indiana in 1922. He served in World War Two and was taken prisoner by Germany. There he witnessed the firebombing of Dresden, where 130,000 people were massacred.

This event serves as the central issue in Slaughterhouse–Five. That novel received its title from the German prison camp where Vonnegut was detained.

He is known as a science fiction humorist, whose influences include Mark Twain, H.G. Wells, and George Orwell. Many of his works take place in Midland City, Ohio which is his ficticious representation of Indianapolis.

Dresden, he says in his interviews, was bombed. Indianapolis only looks like it was. His sharp wit is matched only by his concern for humanity. This concern results in a deep sadness that characterizes his writing style.

In his autobiographical collage, Paim Sunday, Vonnegut comments on the Dresden atrocity. "One way or another, I got two or three dollars for every person killed. Some business I'm in."

Many high schools banned and continue to ban his work, commonly describing it as "obscene," but he continues to be a staunch supporter of First Amendment freedoms.

Many of his speeches have discussed censorship at length, and he says it will be a large portion of his talk tonight.

Vonnegut has taught at the University of Iowa Writers' Workshop, Harvard University, and the City College of New York. Slaughterhouse–Five was produced as a film, and Robert Altman will direct another Vonnegut work, Breakfast of Champions, sometime next year.

Vonnegut's visit was arranged by the Distinguished Visitor's Program, a campus organization which brings well know lecturers to UMass.

Vonnegut's speech will be held at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. It is free and open to the public.

Students ratify Constitution

By JUSTIN DOYLE
Collegian Staff

The proposed constitution and by–laws for the Student Government Association were ratified by the student body at the University of Massachusetts yesterday.

The new SGA constitution and by–laws were passed by a vote of 175 to 18 and will become effective immediately. The voting took place in the Campus Center and Student Union.

"It is a great affirmation of the hundreds of hours of work that the Senate Select Committee on By–laws and Constitutional review has done," said Matthew Malone, Attorney General.

Malone began investigating ways to change SGA's constitution and by–laws in the fall of 1993. Malone and the Senate Select Committee on By–laws and Constitutional review found many ailems with old constitution, including missing sections and a lack of accountability.

Malone presented the new constitution to the Undergraduate Student Senate who passed it unaninously on March 30. it is the most sweeping reform of the SGA in the last 25 years said Malone.

The new constitution will now go to the Board of Trustees to be voted upon.

"If the Board passes the constitution it will become a legal binding document," said Cam Tewksbury, the Chair for Governmental Affairs.

Malone feels that the constitution needs to be passed by the Board of Trustees to insure SGA's credibility.

"It is important that the Board passes the constitution because they will be saying that they recognize that the SGA is the official body of the undergraduate UMass population," Malone said.

The constitution has a good chance of getting passed even though the Board of Trustees has voted once in 25 years to pass an SGA constitution said Malone.

"We have a better chance than we ever have to get it passed because we set a tone in the constitution. We set a tone that the SGA is trying to bring credibility and accountability to it's affairs," Malone said.

Catnap confusion may cause lawsuit

The search for a lost pet is becoming a battle of civil rights for six women at the University of Massachusetts.

Two witnesses claim that they saw landlord Richard Gold take a cat from his tenants' apartment, throw it in his car and drive off. The tenants, all UMass students, searched for their missing two–year old cat, Boo–boo, for a week before the neighbors came forward with their information.

The six UMass students living at 215 Sunset Dr. in Amherst were in violation of their lease, but Gold never went through the proper channels to remove the cat said senior Jennifer Cameron.

Women protest mascot

Fight occurs between women, Minuteman surporters

By GERI SAHN

A rally protesting the University of Massachusetts Minuteman mascot Tuesday quickly turned into a confrontation between the Republican Club and a group of women students.

At noon on the Student Union steps, Progressive Organization of Women's Rights (POWER) rallied against the Minuteman and the symbol it represents.

Last semester, protestors targeted the mascot as being both sexist and racist. The issue eventually faded from public attention.

"This is a disgusting symbol. Do you want to become like this man, carrying a gun," said Libby Hubbard, a graduate student.

Hubbard also said the entire campus is full of male symbols that we need to get rid of. "We need to get a new library that doesn't look like a dick," she said.

Shyamala Ivatury, president of the Graduate Student Senate, said she does not feel the symbol of the Minuteman should represent the University.

"Why should the educational system have a White man with a gun as a symbol. What do you want the United States to become, a military academy?" Ivatury said.

The organizer of the rally, graduate student Sharon Cousin, said the symbol represented by the Minuteman are "loaded symbols" and affect people's lives greatly. She also said the University should have one man representing the campus.

While Cousin was speaking, many men from the Republican Club were yelling back. They shouted the Minuteman is a "symbol of America, history and freedom."

A small fight resulted from the tension at the rally. Scott Stathis, a junior history major, pushed graduate student Colin Cavell because he was not given the chance to speak.

"I was waiting a half hour to speak. They guaranteed me the right to talk, but then pushed me away," Stathis said.

After originally being denied to speak, Dan Flynn, the editor of The Minuteman, was able to respond to the protestors.

"How dare they insult our pride in American heritage," Flynn said.

Jennifer Rivers, a senior anthropology major, said the Minuteman, put out by the Republican club, is a paper which constitutes injustice.

"What they are saying is correct, but there is no such thing as a perfect person."

"This symbol [the Minuteman mascot] represents breaking away from England. The symbol shows that we wanted to establish a free country to govern ourselves," said Junior Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration major Jonathon Gurfein

By CATHERINE B. PULLEY
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: This story is being reprinted because Dr. Lester Grinspoon's original lecture was canceled due to inclement weather. Grinspoon will be back on campus tonight at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

The University of Massachusetts Cannabis Reform Coalition will be presenting Dr. Lester Grinspoon, a marijuana legalization activist.

Grinspoon will be speaking on the medicinal purposes of marijuana and will be discussing his latest book, "Marijuana, the Forbidden Medicine," published by Harvard University Press.

Grinspoon is a graduate of Harvard Medical School and is considered to be an "icon in the fight for marijuana legalization." He is an associate professor of psychiatry at Harvard Medical School and has written several books on the medicinal uses of cannabis.

Grinspoon is currently the editor of the Harvard Mental Health Letter, and serves on the advisory board of the Physicians for Human Rights. He has testified before the House Select Committee on Narcotics, the Controlled Substances Advisory Committee, and the Senate Judiciary Committee. Grinspoon has written 12 books that have ranged from drug addiction to schizophrenia.

UMass ROTC has a ball

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Army Reserve Officers Training Corp got a chance to "let down their hair" at their annual Military Ball last Saturday.

Battalion Commander Lt. Col. Paul R. Callanan said the Spring Ball gives people in the military a chance to relax and it shows people outside of the military that there is a social side to the ROTC.

"In any organization where you work very hard you need to allow some time for people to just relax," Callanan said. "It also expresses to those not in the military a side that you don't see on T.V. in the news. You see us training to go war, and we do that, but we also take time to relax."

Callanan said the Military Ball is a time when the cadets do not have to act as formally as they are accustomed.

"It's fun to see the cadets on a social level," he said. "Normally they have to conduct themselves on a very professional level, but it gives them a chance to let what little hair they have down."

One of the highlights of the evening was the traditional "saber arch ceremony." During this ceremony, the graduating seniors and their guests walk underneath the upheld swords of the Honor Guard and they are introduced to the rest of the people at the ball. The saber arch ceremony is the last time the corp cadets see the seniors before they graduate and are commissioned as Second Lieutenants.

Callanan said the corp cadets consist of all of the people in the UMass ROTC as well as the ROTC programs at the other five colleges, Western New England College and nine other universities in this area of the country.

Sergeant Peter Dunn, a senior Political Science major, said the money for the ball was raised by members of the ROTC by holding fund raising activities such as candy sales, car washes and ushering at the UMass football games. He also said the Military Ball is a tradition in the American Army that began with the pre–revolutionary war British Army.

Alum honored with contest

An alumnus of the University of Massachusetts is being remembered with a cash prize for newspaper column writing, the journalism department has announced.

The Robert Crowley Memorial prize for excellence in newspaper column writing is a $250 award. The contest is open to any UMass student who has published a column in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, which Crowley served as writer and editor.

"Rob was unquestionably one of the finest journalists of his generation," said Professor Howard M. Ziff, acting chair of the journalism department. "He combined sharp reporting, off–beat humor and human compassion. Clearly, he had talent in a league with a Mike Royko or a Dave Barry."

The award is being financed by Crowley's family, friends, and fellow alumni.

Photocopied submissions must include date of publication, and may have appeared at any during the entrant's academic career. Submissions should be sent to the Crowley Prize Committee, c/o Howard M. Ziff, Journalism Department, Bartlett Hall, UMass.

Deadline for entries is noon on Wednesday, May 4, and the winner will be announced Tuesday, May 11.

Speaker preaches ethics

Economist speaks of financial, moral obligations

By HENRY BRIER
Collegian Staff

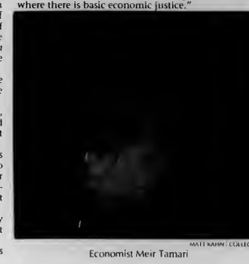
Dr. Meir Tamari, an internationally renowned economics consultant, spoke last night at the University of Massachusetts School of Management. The theme for the discussion was "Doing Business Ethically: Jewish Law and the Marketplace."

Dr. Tamari, an Israeli, is the current Director of Jerusalem's Institute for Ethics in Economics. He had formerly been the chief economist in the Office of the Governor of the Bank of Israel.

The speech was sponsored by three UMass departments and organizations; the Center for Jewish Studies, the Hillel Foundation and the School of Management. Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, the Director of the Hillel Foundation, introduced Dr. Tamari, the author of two books. With All Your Possessions and In the Marketplace are now available, and a third is to be published next winter.

Dr. Tamari began speaking about how all people are dependent upon money. He said that no matter the race or religion of the individual, everybody needs funds.

Dr. Tamari stated that "illicit wealth is illegitimate, but earned other ways it is legitimate." He continued that "the source of wealth provides a safety net against the fear of uncertainty which brings on immorality."



Dr. Tamari mentioned that people have obligations to support themselves with food and clothing, and also to provide for the needs of the less fortunate. The poor and the weak of all races and religions need to be protected. This, he explained, is where the government comes in and collects and then distributes tax money.

"Tax evasion is a form of theft because that money doesn't belong to you," he said. "They have the right to take my money."

Dr. Tamari brought up three instances where finances can be abundant, but the consequences are questionable. The arms trade, which is the biggest "dollar earner" in many nations, results in people being killed. The sale of cigarettes is another extremely lucrative industry, yet the wear and tear upon humans is immense. The third example he stated was financial consultation. He mentioned how one has to be weary of conflicts of interest.

"You don't want to tell a man to buy a field and sell a donkey when you want to sell a field and buy a donkey," he said.

In summing up Dr. Tamari's discussion and perspectives, Rabbi Perlmutter said "It was interesting. He has shown that we need to help build a society where there is basic economic justice."
